Democracy is not dead it only slumbers. The natives will be surprised to find so many good live democrats as there will be around after the pot gets a bilin' right well.

—This morning early a fine rain set in; just what the farmers need, but already some of the hayseed kind are growling about "Too wet to seed." "Too much water."

—The roads after the late heavy fall of snow have been in very poor condition for fast driving. Two and a half hours from Montrose is reported by one party noted for making good time.

—Keck and Sans Tache, prize winners at the State Fair, belonging to W. H. Stacy, at Montrose, are as fine horses as our country affords. Will is justly proud of them. They are well worth seeing.

—Just now is the time when beef is unusually tough. If some of our farmers could manage to raise some tender stake, or even good mutton for market at this season of the year we think they could dispose of it.

—With proper care and watching the markets there is lots of money in poultry. Let each little boy and girl on the farm have one good hen and a setting of eggs to start with and see how long it will take for them to be self supporting.

—The "talk on money" by H. D. Stocker, at the City Hall, last night, was not largely attended; but those present heard a good speaker, on an interesting subject, and went away cogitating in their own minds what is best to be done about it.

—The Eagle keeps telling folks to plant tomatoes and run a canning factory. If they have no better success raising tomatoes than we have, for the past few years, we would not advise them to depend wholly on them. The sweet corn will go very much better.

—A written notice stuck up in the post office, informs people that a change of time card has been made on the R. R. running through this town. If you care to ride we would advise you to consult it before going.

LATER.—We learn that even this has been taken down.

—The Governor has appointed Friday, April 24, as Arbor Day. He recommends that people generally, and especially schools, observe the day with appropriate ceremonies. It would be a good thing for all the school children in town to come together and have a grand time worthy of the occasion and of the town. Let them do so at the Hall.

—The M. E. Quarterly Conference was held here Saturday afternoon at the Parsonage. The Presiding Elder not feeling well enough to ride through the mud to Rockford took the train to Montrose where he preached Sunday returning to Delano for the Communion services Sunday evening. He had a large audience and preached a big sermon.

—Rumors are afloat that a Delano Printing Syndicate is soon to be organised. Mr. Buckly to return to his old love; the employes to purchase the Old Bird and set her on more eggs. Perhaps a type setting machine will be procured when the stereotyped Republican syndicate sheets can be turned out ad libitum, quite cheaply. That's business boys, go in, nothing like trying.

—As was predicted by most everybody about here the suit against O. L. Billings was withdrawn by county attorney Nye, Tuesday. Thus O. L. again breathes the free air. Billings says the reason the last suit was brought first and tried was so that he could not have a personal damage suit against Col. Dodge who brought the charges in the first instance. The Hennepin County Bar association failed to find Dodge guilty of unprofessional conduct. So far as it has gone a terrible smoke, lots of expense and no game has been the result. A little more care should be taken somewhere. The Grand Jury has been charged by Judge Russell, and may indict some more parties. Justice should be dealt out to all respective of so called standing, etc. etc.

—Daymon and Pythias at the City Hall, on Monday, April 20.

—Dr. Neven will be here Saturday, Sunday and Monnay, and in Waverley Tuesday.

—Measles have struck town in several places. C. A. Bronkow's children got them at Andrew Reider's. Geo. Bolton's and Frank Scherer's are imported from Montrose. No child having them or living in a house where they are should attend school, as the smaller children will be apt to come down so rapidly as to break up the schoooll for a few weeks. Usually, with proper precautions, in children the disease is not dangerous; but if allowed to catch cold, or neglected, lingeing sequela is apt to result.

—Talk about cheek. A few days ago an insurance agent came to a physician in town and asked him if he would sign an application for a neighbor to get insured. On looking at the application the M. D. said "Why, this is a medical examination all filled out." "Yes," was the reply. "I took the measures, etc. The Dr. told the agent that when he signed such papers he made the examination himself, and got his pay for it. Another, or the same one, came to the druggist and wanted him to make an urinalysis. He met with the same kind of treatment. Surely the insurance business is running out badly if they are doing business thusly; and soon will run out entirely.

County Cullings.

A Jail for the county is being talked of. Post upas to whether or not it would be advisable. You may have a chance to vote on the subject.

If the coming Grand Jury does its duty it will loose no chance to find out whether or not bribery has been resorted to in our country. This thing should be rooted out if there is anything of it; if there is nothing of the kind those starting the stories should be dealt with. It is no fun living in a county winh a reputation for such things.

Wright county Republicans are in for a tussel. The combined forces succeeded in "downing" Bro. Eaton at the convention. But A. Y. aint one of the kind that stays downed, and if he can't be chairman of the county committee, his chances for climbing are good, only he has a little further to climb. As for most of his opponents who ever heard of 'em climbing anyway?

It is about time the Wright County Democracy was waking up and pulling itself together, preparatory to nominating a good, straight, genuine, pure, honest ticket, and making an attempt to do something. If it puts up a ticket clear of trading stock; satisfies itself, sometning it hasn't done for sometime, it wil induce its own voters to come out to the polls and make a big stride in the direction of restoring confidence to its members and making it respected among those who have been voting with other parties. Hoist high our banner "Equal rights to all; special privileges to none." and we stand a good show of counting a majority for our principles.

The Howard Lake end of the County Printing Quintette says that the bill allowed it for publishing "Notice to Tax Payers" included about four dollars for printed stationery for one of the county officers. Don't the Commissioner's proceedings show what the bills are for? If not why not? Are they not printed for the purpose of letting the public know how the county business is being carried on? Would Mr. Saylor have the public believe there are hidden beneath such innocent looking things as bills for publishing "Notice to Tax Payers" woodchucks? If he printed stationery for one of the county officers why should the bill show up under the head of "Notice to Tax Payers"? Which county officer was it any way? And are you quite certain that the bill don't cover that rich, brown roast recently administered to County Treasurer, Ole Mattson?

If the Herald knows any thing wrong with our bill now is the time for it to protest to the proper authorities, or forever hold its peace.

The fact appears to be that the sugar combine, as well as other combines, have taken entire control of the two old parties, and that the people are plundered at every turn of the wheel. We used to think the Republican party, like the church, was infallible, but our faith has been rudely shaken during the past few years, and we can see no hope for the better except in a new allignment of voters. Why should not the antimonopoly men of all parties get together and act together in opposition to the combines and for their own interests.—Waseca Herald.

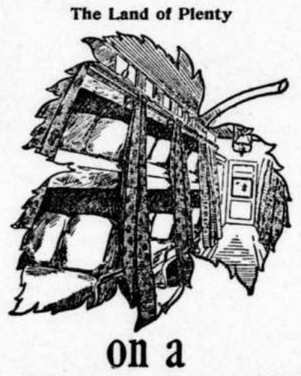
The Land of Plenty



on a "Maple Leaf"

Through Tourist Sleeping Car.

No Change of Cars to the Coast!

The Chicago Great Western Railway (Maple Leaf Route) runs Tourist Sleeping Cars to Los Angeles, California, via Kansas City and the Santa Fe Route, every Tuesday. The Tourist Car rate is but $6.00 ($3.00 each, if two go) from St. Paul or Minneapolis to Los Angeles, California, and the trip 24 hours shorter than by other lines. No Sunday traveling is necessary. The cars are divided into sections, the same as Palace Sleepers, and are in charge of a colored porter. They are plentifully supplied with fresh clean bedding, curtains and linen, and have a little kitchen at one end for light cooking. These cars were designed to give comfort in a long journey at the lowest possible cost to the traveler.

DIVES QUI CONTENTUS.

Give me a mind serene and free,
From every viscious thought secure;
O virtue, when I'm blest in thee,
Say, what need I wish for more?
For all the gold on Peru's bay,
Serves only to torment us:
Hence moralists, with justice say,
Est dives qui contentus.
An honest heart, an upright mind,
Are what all India's wealth can't give:
They a secure contentment find,
Who free from scorn or envy live.
Grant me content, for other things
Do nothing but torment us;
When that I've got, I'll rival kings.

An Important Appropriation.

Congress has made an appropriation of $80,000 for the proposed Gull lake government reservoir. The money will be expended this season on the construction of a dam at the outlet of Gull lake. This is a matter of much importance to Brainerd, as nearly the entire sum will be paid in wages, the cost of materal being light. The proximity of this work to Brainerd, the proposed dam being only ten miles distant, will make this city the natural trading point, and the most of the money disbursed will find its way into circulation here.—Brainerd Journal.

This may be a fine thing for Brainerd and vicinity; but so far as the above item is concerned it looks like it might be mostly Gull to the balance of the country.

Value of Farm Animals.

According to statistics published by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, says the Iron Age, the aggregate value of farm animals in the United States has declined very materially in recent years. At the present time the value of these animals is $755,580,597 less than it was in 1893. The decline is more particularly observable in the case of horses. Taking the seven years from 1890 to 1895, it is shown that horses increased in number until 1863. In 1892, however, their value began to fall off, and in 1895 it was not quit halt that of 1892, showing an aggregate decline in this respect of about $500,000,000. This depreciation is attributed in the main to the introduction of trolley cars and bicycles. The high cost of fodder, however, after recent seasons of drought, is also given as a contributing cause. The value of mules since 1890 has fallen nearly $80,000,000, or not far from half the total existing value of these animals in the United States. On the other hand, milch cows have increased in numbers, while the average value of these animals has advanced steadily within the past few years. The increase in the value of milch cows last year, as compared with 1894, is $1,300,000. Oxen and other cattle decreased in numbers more than 2,000,000 in 1895, while their value increased on an average $1.80 a head in the same period. A decline is noted in the numbers and value of sheep in the last three years. the decrease in value aggregating about $60,000,000 and the falling off in numbers of these animals last year being nearly 4,000,000. Swine, in 1895, declined 3 per cent in number and 15 per cent in aggregate value, the total decrease in the value of swine in 1895 being nearly $33,000,000. It is expected, however, that the enormous corn crop of last year will have a favorable effect upon the next statement of farm animals, the tendency to an increase in numbers and value being already observable.—Scientific American.

Senator C. Porter Johnson, of Chicago, the bright young Democrat who was the guest of the Henepin League at its Jeffersonian banquet last evening, created some little talk among his fellow Democrats by the plain manner in which he described his party's perplexities in an interview yesterday. Mr. Johnson says the sad condition of his party nationally is due largely to the unfortunate course of President Cleveland, and the sooner the party attends the funeral of the President and other leading members of Democracy who follow the dictates of Wall street, the better it will be for the party. The senator says William C. Whitney will be nominated by the national Democratic convention if the gold bugs happen to control that body. Otherwise, William R. Morrison, of Illinois, will be the standard-bearer, and he can defeat McKinley.—Minneapolis Times.

How They Feel About Tariff.

From the New York World we clip the following giving the views of some of the United States Senators on the tariff question: In view of these facts, Mr. Mantle suggested that the efforts made to read him and his silver associates out of the Republican party had better be reconsidered by the Eastern press and the Senators be permitted to remain in the party. The Senator declared himself in favor of protection, but not sectional protection. It was a principle too great to be used in behalf of any monopoly. It must shield and uphold the West as well as the East. While, however, he favored true protection, he favored equally bimetallism, the coinage of both gold and silver at a ratio of 16 to 1. He believed also in a bimettallism which did not wait for the action of foreign countries. In conclusion Mr. Mantle expressed the hope that the Tariff bill would be so remodelled by the Finance Committee as to be truly Republican, combining tariff and bimetallism. After paying a glowing tribute to the Republican party Mr. Mantle said he hoped that great party thought wavering, would in the end refuse to be guided by greed and selfishness; would refuse to stand as the representative of corporate interests, would stand for the whole people, and, when it meets in national convention, would give such a consideration to the toilers as would be a harbinger of another Republican victory.

There was a lively tariff colloquy following the Mantle speech. Mr. Hawley (Rep., Conn.) questioned some of the wool figures which had been given and spoke of the idle wool factories and stagnant condition of the industry in the East.

Mr. Hoar added that the remarks of Mr. Mantle implied that Eastern manufacturers were willing to leave Western wool in the lurch after getting protection for their own manufactures. But Mr. Hoar declared that Eastern Senators had voted here for protection on wool, while the Western States had sent Senators here, from Kansas, Texas and Origan, who had voted for free wool.

This brought Mr. Mills to his feet, who declared that against the statements made that the wool manufacturer had suffered from the Wilson Tariff law, he would place the fact that there was a greater use of wool than ever, every fibre of it was manufactured by American labor, the people of the United States got cheaper woolen goods, the Goyernment received more revenue than ever from wool, and wool itself was advanced.

"Let me add the further facts," interjected Mr. Hoar, "that wool manufacturers are still failing and the Government is still bankrupt."

Mr. Mills rejoined that every particle of the wool now manufactured was made by American labor. Then he added, "a protectiye tariff is a protective humbug."

How To Avoid Cold Feet.

If the three prime functions of all animal life, aeration, nutrition, and excretion, be perfectly performed, the resultant condition is perfect physical health; so upon the first symptom of disorder seek first to learn wherein the healthful regulation of these functions has been violated. When the involuntary normal action of any organ is disturbed, the weakest part of the body—often quite remote from the seat of trouble—is the first to feel it and sound the alarm. A habit of cold feet may cause serious diseases of both throat and lungs, and these troubles are always aggravated by sitting with cold extremities. The predisposition shows a torpid circulation in the lower limbs, and it checks the healthy action of the skin over the entire body. Sufferers from this habit can never hope to be really well until it is overcome, and they must not only adopt every means to this end, but must avoid exposure to severe cold; never let the fingers become stinging cold by handling ice, or holding them long in ice water. Ankle exercises taken at frequent interyals during the day will assist materially in stimulating the circulation of the blood: Point the toes down to the extremest limit, till slight pain is felt in the ankles, and work the feet up and down in this way eight or ten times; then devitalize them at the ankle and shake them, -just as a dog will a rat. Of course such feet must be clothed warmly, and if they are too sensitive to bear woolen or cashmere hose, silk may be worn under cotton, with felt or wool-lined shoes.—From "Spring Ailments," in Demorest's Magazine for April.

Cleveland the Srrongest Man That Could be Chosen

(By Telegraph to the Editor of the World.)

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 8.—Grover Cleveland is without doubt the strongest and most suitable man that could be nominated at the Chicago Convention in July. His renomination would do more to solidify the party than anything that could be done. He is not only most popular, but typical in the highest sense, and is a safe, conservative man to be at the head of the nation.

Against McKinley he would sweep Minnesota. He is stronger with the people of this state than any man in the nation to day.

THOMAS J. McDERMOTT, Chairman Democratic State Committe.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D., C. April 10, 1896.

A more uneasy crowd than the anti-McKinley republicens in Congress would be difficult to find. They know that Platt and Quay are hatching up some sort of scheme down in Florida, and they fear that the reports about Quay having made a deal with McKinley are true, and yet they are not certain enough to try to act for themselves. These men don,t care a straw about the personality of the candidate. All they want is to be with the winner. It was because they thought the Quay-Platt-Reed combine was strong enough to defeat McKinley and dictate the nomination that they joined it. Now they are in a quandary. They are afraid to try to make deals with McKinley for themselves until they know what Quay and Platt are up to, and if it shall turn out that Quay and Platt have gone over to McKinley they know that it will be too late for them to get any concessions for themselves, as with the support of Quay and Platt McKinley's nomination would be assured and they would be left out in the cold for not having guessed right. All of which is nuts for the democrats.

President Cleveland must find the numerous attempts that are daily made by newspaper men anxious to earn their salaries to tell what he is going to do about those Cuban resolutions, sent to him this week, a source of constant amusement, and so numerous are the stories concocted that it will be almost impossible for the President to do anything that will miss all the theories which have been put forth. Somebody will doubtless be able to say "I told you so," but it will not be because they had advance information. All that is known is that the President is considering to determine whether there is anything in the situation to call for any action on his part.

The opinion of one of Pennsylvania's practical steel makers, who is at present in Washington, on McKinleyism is entitled to weight This gentleman, Mr. James Andrews, of Allegheny, said: "The necessity of a high protective tariff seems to have gone by, for in many lines we have reached a point of cheapness in production that approximates the cost of production in any of the European countries' Take steel, for instance. I remember when, as an apprentice, I was employed in the first plant that smelted steel west of the Alleghenies and that it sold for 44 cents a pound. Now it is made for one cent a pound, owing to the marvelous improvments in machinery and better trnsportation facilities. We have much the advantage of England, for our ores lie near the surface and can be mined at a trifling expense, whereas they have to go to great depths for their ores and fuel. We can bring the Lake Superior ores to the smelters of Pennsylvania in vast quantities, and water transportation is very low. Such natural advantages are not enjoyed by any competitor, and hence in the making of steel we stand on equal footing with all the world."

According to Senator Smith, of N. J., the democrats of that State have no candidate to urge before the Chicago convention, and are perfectly willing to support the man chosen by the convention. Mr. Smith thinks the democrats can carry the State this year if no mistake is made in the platform adopted at Chicago, no matter who heads the Presidential ticket.

The man who thinks that Senator Gorman does not still wield a powerful influence in the Senate is not a close observer. Only this week Mr. Gorman got up and made a few remarks against the idea of abolishing postmasters at county postoffices which are in the vicinity of large cities and placing those offices under clerks from the city offices. Note the result. The Senate added in amendment to the Post-office appropriation bill limiting the postmasters who may be abolished to those who preside over post offices which are within five miles of the corporate limis of cities.

As a rule democrats in Congress do not seriously regard the stories concerning Senator Tillman's candidacy for the democratic Presidential nomination, which his departure to make some speeches in the west have given circulation, but personal friends of the gentlemen say, that he really intends to be a candidate if the silver men control the Chicago convention. Well, anybody can be a candidate, but getting votes enough to nominate is quite another thing. Many democrats in Congress think that Senator Tillman's declaration of his intention to bolt the Chicago convention if it does not adopt a platform in accordance with his views is of itself enough to bar him from receiving any honors at the hands of that convention.

MARKVILLE.

It has been a long time since I jotted down my portion of news for you, having been about used up with "Rheumatism" that acts as a common leveler of us all. It seems the fish law went into effect month with a vengence, quite a number of houses was smashed, and their ruins lay strewn over the Ice, an evidence of Outraged Law. some arrests were made, but the violators were treated to a glass of Beer and discharged with promise of not fishing some more. Quite important changes have taken place in the Long Lake "Creamery" management, and a reign of prosperity has started up for that institution. There will be some building this spring around the lake, and many improvments are spoken of, some parties have moved ont and taken possession of their Cottages as early as this. Cottages will no doubt, be in great demand this spring.

A number of level headed farmers are arranging to plant small Fruits, Strawberries, Rasberries, Blackberries, Grapes, Currants etc. With a little comon sense treatment any one owning land can enjoy all these Health Giving luxuries, at a small expense, better all try it.

All quiet about the Book agents affair. Tis quite wonderful to think there is a law that will stand up and defend an honest man against such swindling concerns as infested the ountry a short time since.

The People Want Their Own Money.

MARKVILLE, MINN., March, 1896.

It seems that when James G. Blaine died, from the effects of political abuse, at the hands of the party he served so well, the party, as a political machine, died, also. But a mighty attempt is to be made to breathe into its body the breath of life. A great, big, awful cry has gone up all over the land for McKinley. And this IDOL of his party has been asked to square himself on the financial question; the GOLD standard. He said (using the time worn and patriotic sentiments of the People's Party Platform) "You will see that in the records of Congress, I said, in 1890, that we should preserve gold and silver money side by side, that I did not want gold at a premium, or silver at a discount, or vice versa, but that I wanted both metals to be equal in purchasing power, and in legal tender qualities—equal in power to perform the functions of money, with which to do the business and move the commerce of the United States." Again he says: "Since 1878 we have compelled gold and silver to work together upon an equality, both employed as safe means of exchange in the business of our country. Talk about cheap silver being cheap money. I am not attracted by the word cheap, whether applied to nations, or to money, or to men. Whatever dollars we have in this country must be GOOD DOLLARS, as good in the hands of the poor as the rich, equal in inherent merit, equal in purchasing power whether they be paper dollars, or gold dollars, or silver dollars, or treasury notes, each convertable into the other, because each is based upon equal value and has behind it security, good, not by the fiat of law alone, but good, because the whole commercial world recognizes its INHERENT and inextinguishable value." Now let us be honest. Could any man, of any party, upon the important question of money as it stands today, commit himself to a more candid and satisfying analysis of what money should be, to meet all grades of men and all the diversified relations of business? But for McKinley to express himself in such broad terms and then undertake to administer the same to the people would not be in line with the great financial managements of the bright and shining lights of his party. And although he might honestly indorse the above sentiments, the bankers and corporate manipulators would muzzle him very soon.

Yes we know for the past thirty years sad havoc has been played with our money, destroying the value of one half, and finally bonding the nation and every soul of us to European Jews—money lenders—in such terms that there is no hopes of ever wiping it out. There is no hope for the people under such administration. The present conditions are a living lie; and the curses of an outraged people will fall with fearful vengence sooner or later. We have the same conditions to day, that led up to the French revolution. And we have a people here, that will retaliate as fearful as the poor half starved, naked Frenchmen of Louis days.

Yes, some of the people are painfully aware of the fact that silver was reinstated, and had the full function of money restored by a law passed over the President's veto, Feb'y. 28, 1878. And again, we know that a resolution of Congress, which was introduced by Stanley Mathews, Senator from Ohio, passed the Senate Jan. 25, 1878, by a vote of 42 to 20; and the House, Jan'y. 28, by a vote of 189 to 79; vetoed by the President, and passed over his veto. Here it is; read it, you wise ones that are prating about the beauties of the Gold standard. "That all bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under the said acts of Congress herein before recited are payable, principal and interest at the option of the goyernment of the United States in Silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each, of standard silver: and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment to said bonds, principal and interest is not in violation of public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public credit." Since the passage of that resolution, every president has treated it with contempt, because the "Shylocks" and money interest silence the Great servants of the people—a law passed by a two-thirds majority of both houses of Congress, treated with contempt by the ones sworn to execute the laws without favor. In the name of humanity let us have laws henceforth that will not bring about such a fearful state of things, as the Boston papers report of babies found dead in their cradles, because of the famished condition of their poor methers, who died also, of starvation, as a result of poverty produced by the successful financial schemes of our leaders.

In the name of all that's sacred to us, in parties or politics, I say if we cannot have "Jacksonian Democracy" and our money; the people's money honered as it should be then let us put our shoulder to the burden and help move forward to a big victory fer the great reform party; the people's party and liberty.

The mills of the Russian diplomats grind exceedingly slow, but sure. It is announced from London that a treaty between Russia and Bulgaria has been concluded under which, in event of war, Bulgaria will cede Varna and Burghas, on the Black sea, to Russia. Those who recall the story of the Turko-Russian war will remember that Varna was one of the points fought over, and those who will look at the map will see that Burghas is down the coast uncomfortably close to Constantinople.

THE population of Germany in 1890 was 49,428,470. The population of France in 1891 was 38,343,192. Each nation takes a census every five years. By the recent census Germany claims 14,000,000 more people than France, instead of 10,000,000 more, as in 1890. Between May, 1886, and April, 1891, France gained only 124,289. Between December 1, 1885, and December 1, 1890, Germany gained 2,572,766. The increase in Germany for the last five years is not as great as that for the five years ending December 1, 1859, which was 5,371,195.

THE native troubles in South Africa are in many particulars not unlike our old Indian troubles on the frontier. The natives cannot easily be made to understand some questions that would be the subject of hot discussion in civilized communities. The more recent troubles rose out of a misunderstanding as to the rinderpest. Many an American farmer has made a stout fight against the killing of his cattle by the authorities. Little wonder it is that the Kaffirs of South Africa cannot understand why their cattle should be killed to prevent the spread of the rinderpest.

THE Wolseley campaign of the Nile some years ago brought into newspaper literature a number of new words. The Matabele campaign is bringing another group of words. For example, it is stated that "the big laager at Buluwayo has been considerably strengthened by embankments of earth and obstructions of every kind, and the town is now believed to be impregnable." This is all Greek to those who do not understand that in South Africa a laager is an inclosure for temporary defense, formed by the wagons of a traveling party. In the Nile campaign they called the same sort of a fortified camp a zereba.

THE son of Nellie Grant Sartoris and the grandson of Gen. U. S. Grant proposes to become a lawyer in the United States, and finds that he will have to be naturalized before he can escape from the claims of England, for his mother, Nellie Grant, became by English law an Englishwoman when she married Algernon Sartoris. Moreover, all the young man's money comes from his English grandfather. The grandson, however, insists on being an American, and it seems an amusing situation that to do so he must be naturalized, though his maternal grandfather was twice president of the great republic.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Proceedings of the First Session.

Washington, April 10.—After being in retirement for some weeks the tariff-silver bill was brought forward in the senate yesterday as a text for a speech by Mr. Mantle (Mont.), who urged that unsectional protection should be linked with bimetallism. The navel appropriation bill ($31,279,482) was reported and every pension bill on the calendar (75 in number) was passed. In the house the District of Columbia appropriation bill was passed and a favorable report was made on the bill for the admission of New Mexico as a state. Mr. Hopkins (Ill.) introduced a reciprocity bill and a resolution was adopted calling on the state department for information regarding Mrs. Maybrick, imprisoned in England.

Washington, April 11.—The main portion of the session of the senate yesterday was taken up by the Indian appropriation bill, the house proposition abolishing the system of contract schools for Indian children giving rise to a long debate. A favorable report was made on the bill providing for a delegate in congress from Alaska. Adjourned to the 13th. The house spent nearly the entire day in general debate on the "filled cheese" bill. The fortifications bill ($11,384,000) was reported, as was also the bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians holding lands by allotments.

Washington, April 13.—The senate was not in session on Saturday. In the house the filled cheese bill, requiring the manufacturers of filled cheese to pay a tax of $400 annually, the wholesale dealers $250 and the retail dealers $12, was passed.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Anniversary of His Birth Observed in Many Places.

Notable Celebration at Charlottesville, Va.—Senator Daniel Takes Exceptions to Ex-Gov. Russell's Remarks—Political Pointers.

Charlottesville, Va., April 14.—Under the auspices of the National Association of Democratic Clubs the 153d anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the democratic party, was celebrated Monday at Monticello, where the author of the Declaration of Independence lived and died.

At 12 o'clock, noon, the special train from Washington arrived, bringing a distinguished party of national democrats.

The formal proceedings began by an address by Hon. Chauncey F. Black, whose enunciation of the sentiment of Jefferson that the primary principle of democracy was "absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority" was heartily applauded.

Extracts from Black's Address.

"We are here upon this sacred day and at this sacred spot to honor the memory of him whose ashes lie beneath yonder tomb—the author of the Declaration of Independence and the founder of the democratic party.

"He founded a great party and he defined in language which no one has ever ventured to paraphrase or attempted to improve, the principles upon which that party must endure, so long as free American institutions shall exist, for the life of the one is necessarily coeval with the life of the other. It has survived all other parties just as Jefferson has survived all other political teachers.

"Let us here, invoking his pure spirit and remembering his devout trust in the wisdom of the people as a whole, implore our brethren in every part of the union to put aside all minor differences, all local or temporary questions and unite for the preservation of the constitution itself.

Ex.-Gov. Russell Touches on Silver.

Ex-Gov. Russell, of Massachusetts, was received by the crowd with ringing cheers. He spoke as though accustomed to open-air speaking, and his sonorous voice could be heard to the utmost confines of the assembly. His many patriotic allusions and points were rapturously applauded.

He reviewed the incidents connected with the formation and existence of the democratic party at considerable length and concluded with a reference to the present campaign as follows:

"We are in the midst of earnest agitation over our monetary standard. The agitation crosses party lines and tends to geographical division. It involves the welfare of our country and demands explicit and courageous treatment. To Jefferson it could never be an issue between Colorado and Wall street or between a debtor and a creditor class. His broad democracy abhorred geographical and class division.

"Free coinage of silver, or its compulsory purchase or any compromise legislation by us in that direction in my judgment is distinctly class legislation, which would unsettle business, impair credit, reduce all savings and the value of all wages, and whose injurious results no man can measure.

When Senator Daniel, of Virginia, arose to speak, his popularity in his native state was made plainly apparent by the way in which he was received. He pictured to his audience, in eloquent periods, the prominent traits of character of Virginia's gift to the national democracy—Thomas Jefferson.

Senator Daniel Takes Exceptions.

After his eulogy of Jefferson had been exhausted Senator Daniel referred to the speech of Gov. Russell and said he admired that address so much that he disliked to dissent from it in anything. He must be excused if he failed to see anything in Jefferson's teachings which summoned us to abandon the bimetallic money system which Jefferson himself helped to establish He concurred with Gov. Russell that Jefferson would never have made an issue between Colorado and Wall street, or between a debtor and a creditor class, or upon any geographical division, but he asserted that it was the republican party and neither Jefferson nor the party of Jefferson that did that very thing in 1873, in stripping silver of its equal coinage right with gold: that it was Wall street and Lombard street that were the aggressors, not Colorado nor the west; not the debtor class.

At Other Points.

Brooklyn, April 14.—Two hundred Brooklyn democrats celebrated Jefferson's birthday Monday night at the Young Men's Democratic club, at the Hotel St. George. The chief speaker was ex-Congressman Tom L. Johnson, of Cleveland, who responded to the toast of "Democratic Duty in 1896."

Milwaukee, April 14. — The annual banquet of the Jefferson club of this city took place at the Plankinton house Monday evening. Covers were laid for 150, and politics and patriotism were woven into one until far into the night. President Bruce presided, and opened the after-dinner programme with an address on the life and character of Thomas Jefferson. The speaker of the evening was Postmaster Washington Hesing, of Chicago, who responded to the toast, "Jefferson and Civil Service Reform." The other responses were by John Winans, of Janesville; J. H. Roemer, Glenway Maxon, James G. Flanders and ex-Gov. Peck.

AMERICANS WIN FINAL HEATS.

Carry Off Honors in Presence of a Vast Audience.

Athens, April 11.—In the Olympian games Friday the contests at the parallel bars were won by Flatow, German, and Zutter, Swiss. The contests at climbing the pole were won by the Greek athletes, Andri, Kopoulos and Xenakis.

The final heats of the unfinished events of the first and second days were contested Friday.

The 100 metres race was won by Thomas E. Burke, of Boston, in 12 seconds. Hoffman, the German champion, was second.

The high jump was won by Ellery H. Clark, of Harvard, a member of the Boston team, covering 181 centimetres.

The hurdle race of 110 meters was won by Thomas P. Curtis, of Boston, 17 3-5 seconds; Goulding, the English champion, was second.

X Ray Kills Disease Germs.

Chicago, April 14.—Prof. W. P. Pratt and Prof. Hugh Wightman, the electro-therapeutist and the bacteriologist of Bennett Medical college, have practically proved that the Roentgen ray is a deadly foe to diphtheria and cholera. They have put the germs of the most deadly diseases through the test. A week has elapsed. They have been fed and nurtured with the greatest care. They have failed to propagate or spread, proving they are dead or have been stunned. Cholera was the easiest, and appears to have wiped out entirely. Diphtheria has been treated very tenderly and favorably, but after eight days has failed to show the slightest signs of life.

Tragedy at Pentwater, Mich.

Pentwater, Mich., April 11.—S. B. Minshall, an attorney of this town, made a successful attempt on Thursday night to assassinate William B. O. Sands, president of the Sands & Maxwell Lumber company. After leaving Sands for dead, Minshall went to his home and shot his wife and three children dead and then committed suicide by shooting himself through the head.

SALVATION ARMY SPLIT.

Ballington and Mrs. Booth Tell More of Its Causes.

New York, April 13.—Commander and Mrs. Ballington Booth gave out a five-column statement Sunday night giving officially some of the reasons for having foresworn allegiance to foreign headquarters. The vital points in the statement are that at international headquarters there had come to be a positive hatred of everything American. Objections were urged by Gen. Booth against the display of the national flag upon badges and in halls and homes. He said the time had arrived to cease carrying the stars and stripes at the head of parades. He objected to the use of the eagle upon crests, and constantly spoke deprecatingly of the country and of its people and its institutions.

The statement says that the attempt was made to annex the army in the United States to that of Canada, and that, in spite of the protestations of the writers, they were forced to make a partial annexation, and at the present time the army work in Dakota, North Montana and North Washington is governed from Toronto, and it is said that the officers hardly dare to let the citizens of these states know that their money goes to Canadian headquarters.

"Apart from the above reasons," the statement continues, "the unjust manifestos and un-Christian assertions made by the leaders of the army and their representatives in this country, particularly their comparison of our movement with 'the Moore scandal,' their statement that we fell beneath 'the art of flattery and temptation,' the unrebuked and excused assertion by one of their trusted staffs that I (Ballington Booth) am insane, and the most abominable reflections upon the private character of Mrs. Booth, which have proceeded from another staff officer, have been sufficient reason for refusing to entertain any suggestions of returning the ranks of the old movement.

"There will undoubtedly be denials and counter-statements made to the above, but we can only add that we believe that our lives before the American public will at least exonerate us from insincerity of motive and unworthiness of purpose. We wish the army no evil, and would not have thus written had they taken our advice and remained silent."

Commissioner Booth-Tucker says he has no fears on account of the giving up of these records. He hardly credits the intention to publish them, but says the Salvation Army has nothing it is ashamed to make public.

"Expediency and such reasons as might argue with the merchant to keep his business private," said the commissioner, "make us wish to keep the confidential letters, and, indeed, all further consideration of this unfortunate schism, out of the public mind. Already it threatens to lead attention away from our true cause, the rescue of souls, but there has been nothing in the struggle we wish to hide. Truth can only help the Salvation Army."

WANT IT OUT OF POLITICS.

Convention of Merchants and Manufacturers Called at Detroit.

Detroit, Mich., April 11.—R. B. Archer, secretary of the Tariff Commission league, has sent out a call for a convention of the commercial, manufacturing, labor and agricultural organizations of the United States, to be held in Detroit, opening Tuesday, May 26. This call will first be indorsed by 15 representative commercial bodies of the country, two of its signers to be national labor organizations. As soon as the indorsements have been received invitations will be sent out to 2,000 local and national organizations to participate in the convention, and 25,000 personal invitations will also be extended. More than 200 commercial bodies, several of which are national in their character, have already signified their intention of sending delegates to the convention.

The subjects to be acted upon at the convention are:

The discussion of ways and means for taking the tariff question out of partisan politics and making it a business question instead of a "political football."

The discussion of ways and means for the improvement of the consular service of the United States and the employment of such service for the increasing of our foreign trade, especially with the Central and South American republics.

The advisability of recommending to congress the creation of a department of commerce, manufactures and labor and of making the chief of such department a member of the president's cabinet.

The advisability of forming a permanent organization for the purpose of holding annual conventions for the consideration of national questions and of recommending to congress each year such changes in our laws or in their administration as may be deemed for the best interest of our country.

The convention will be nonpolitical and nonsectional, and all questions will be discussed from a purely commercial standpoint. The plans adopted by this convention will be put in proper shape and a committee appointed to present them to the two great political conventions to be held in June and July, respectively, and urge on them their embodiment in their respective platforms. Any citizen who may be interested in the subjects to be discussed is eligible as a delegate.

AWAITS A DEMAND.

Business Shows Little Signs of Improvement.

New York, April 11.—R. G. Dun & Co. in their weekly review of trade say:

"The volume of business has not on the whole increased, nor have prices appreciably advanced since April 1, when the range for all commodities was the lowest ever known in this country. Breadstuffs and iron products have risen slightly, but some other articles have declined, and the root of the matter is that demand for consumption is still below expectation. The injury done to winter wheat by storms and frosts at the west would appear from reports of state officers to have been considerable. Remarkably low estimates of condition are published by some state authorities, and while there may be the customary exaggerations, there has evidently been much actual loss, which tends at present to lessen purchases of farmers and of dealers in farming districts But the reports are not more gloomy than a year ago, and the quantity of wheat which has come from farms since August has been 163,781,594 bushels, against 129,975,450 to the same date last year.

"Failures for the past week have been 209 in the United States, against 207 last year; and 33 in Canada, against 27 last year."

A Journalist Dead.

London, April 11.—A dispatch to the Chronicle from Cairo says that Col. John A. Cockerill, the well-known American newspaper editor and correspondent died suddenly at Shepheard's hotel in that city Friday. Death was caused by apoplexy. Col. Cockerill recently arrived in Cairo from Japan, where he had spent some time as correspondent of the New York Herald. He was representing the same paper in Cairo.

TELLS OF HIS CRIMES.

Extracts from a Reported Confession by H. H. Holmes.

Philadelphia, April 11.—The North American of this city will this morning print what purports to be sentences from the confession alleged to have been made by Murderer H. H. Holmes. Among other things the story says:

In prefacing the confession, which covers in full nearly three newspaper pages, written in Holmes' own handwriting, and detailing with a minuteness that is simply at times revolting, the arch-mutilator and author of 27 murders, as he admits himself to be, states with something like pathos that he does so simply that he may obtain enough money to educate his boy.

Holmes writes of his blood-curdling atrocities with an abandon that simply apalls one. Not one grain of remorse seems to enter into the construction of that document, and never for a moment, except in two isolated cases—one where he refers touchingly to the memory of Minnie Williams and another time when he pathetically speaks of an outrage perpetrated on his boy—does the redeeming element pity figure in the case. Regret is never for a moment expressed, and he comes out boldly and without compunction on his very opening with the statement: "I was born with the very devil in me."

Even now he believes that the evil spirit is the guiding genius of his destiny. He asserts that he is gradually changing in appearance, in figure, that his face is becoming distorted, and he sees, whether in the distortion of his bloody imagination, which conjures up hosts of vengeance-calling dead, or not, his face assuming the look, the eyes, the leer, and the very ears the exact similitude of the picture of Satan themselves.

"I was born with the devil in me," says he in one part of his confession. "I could not help the fact that I was a murderer, no more than the poet can help the inspiration to song, nor the ambition of an intellectual man to be great. The inclination to murder came to me as naturally as the inspiration to do right comes to the majority of persons. Not only that, I was not satisfied in taking it in the ordinary way. I sought devices strange, fantastical, and even grotesque.

"I am convinced," he declares, "that since my imprisonment I have changed woefully and grewsomely from what I formerly was in feature and in figure. I mean, in fact, that my features are assuming nothing more nor less than a pronounced satanical aspect; that I have become afflicted with that disease, rare but terrible, with which physicians are acquainted, but over which they seem to have no control whatever."

"That disease," says he, "is a malformation or distortion of the osseous parts, causing deformity so marked that in many cases men are made to assume likenesses to the inferior animal.

"From what I can see, I believe fully that I am growing to resemble the devil; that the osseous parts of my head and face are gradually assuming that elongated shape so pronounced in what is called the degenerate head, and that the similitude is almost completed."

Holmes' confession from this on speaks of his early experiences, of his boyhood days on the farm up in Vermont, and the life he led, until he entered college to study medicine in Michigan.

It was not until after he was graduated and fully equipped with the knowledge of persons and the easiest way to sever the thread of life, that Holmes began his career as a murderer and a mutilator.

When he begun, he admits himself, he was ruthless, and never once halted until he took 27 lives.

"And I would have committed six other murders," he added, "had not certain occurrences intervened."

SENT TO CUBA.

Gen. Fitzhugh Lee Appointed Consul General to Havana.

Washington April 14. — The president Monday sent to the senate the following nomination:

Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia, to be consul general of the United States at Havana, Cuba, vice Ramon O. Williams, resigned.

The appointment of a successor to Consul-General Williams caused no surprise in official circles, as it has long been known that Mr. Williams was anxious to retire from his position. When Mr. Williams visited the United States last year he tendered his resignation, but was persuaded to remain in office on account of the then threatened seriousness of affairs.

Chicago, April 14.—The Post's Washington special says:

"The president has stolen a march on Spain in the appointment of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia, as consul general at Havana, vice Ramon O. Williams, resigned. He has long wanted to send a special commissioner to Cuba to ascertain exact facts with regard to the scope and significance of the revolution, but from the outset he encountered the angry opposition of the Madrid government, which resented the suggestion as insufferable impertinence and gratuitous intermeddling in a strictly family affair. He could not move Spain from this view, but he never for a moment abandoned the idea. It suddenly occurred to him that he could accomplish his purpose by appointing a consul general at Havana, who could serve in the double capacity of diplomatic representative of this government and commissioner—the latter, of course, under private instructions.

"After a careful canvass of names, he selected Gen. Lee as best fitted to perform the delicate duty. Gen. Lee, as consul general, can go wherever he pleases without interference from the Spanish authorities. No obstacles will be put in his way by the insurgents, for, although a fair man, it is well known that he is in warm sympathy with the insurgents and the cause of Cuban liberty. His appointment, for the reasons mentioned, is regarded as of the greatest importance. It is significant also in another respect as foreshadowing delay in executive action in the Cuban matter until the president can obtain results from the Fitzhugh Lee expedition."

Town Run by the Fair Sex.

Topeka, Kan., April 14. — To-night Mrs. Antoinette Haskell, the new mayor of Gaylord, will inaugurate a new era in municipal politics in Kansas. She will appoint Mrs. M. J. Kline city marshal, and the council, composed entirely of women, at its meeting will confirm the appointment. All the women of Gaylord have petitioned Mrs. Haskell to appoint Mrs. Kline, setting forth as a reason that they want a law officer who will drive out the joint and dive-keepers, gamblers and rough element and make it possible for the men to spend their evenings at home.

Dynamite Kills Five.

Ogden, Utah, April 9.—At 5:50 o'clock Wednesday afternoon an explosion of giant powder at station 231 of the Pioneer Electric pipe line, in Ogden canyon, resulted in the death of five men and the injury of five others. The following is a list of the killed:

D. Moran, foreman; Jeff Ruby, Brig Kirkham, G. Weaver and Nate Kempton.

The injured are: G. N. Stetson, arm broken, internal injuries; Nick Leanon, bruised and cut, internal injuries; A. Sproul ribs broken, internal injuries; Alf. Ellingsford, face cut, leg broken and internal injuries; Sam Hadfield, internal injuries.

Fair and Fruitful

As the West is, it is often malarious. But it is pleasant to know that a competent safeguard in the shape of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters exists, which absolutely nullifies the poison of miasma. Western bound emigrants should bear this in mind. Nor should it be forgotten, the Bitters is a sterling remedy for dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, kidney and nervous complaints and rheumatism.

COLD IN HEAD

A SHINING EXAMPLE of what may be accomplished by never varying devotion to a single purpose is seen in the history of the McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., Chicago. For 65 years they have simply been building grain and grass-cutting machinery, and while there are probably forty manufacturers in this line, it is safe to say that the McCormick Company builds one-third of all the binders, reapers and mowers used throughout the entire world.

FORTUNE TELLING.

When on the grain was summer's gold,
And blue was summer's sky,
We went to have our fortunes told,
A witching maid and I.
The Gypsy sibyl seemed uncouth
And weird to look upon,
And yet for each of us, in sooth,
A merry tale she spun.

Mine was a kindly horoscope;
I heard my birth above
Had hung the happy star of hope,
The lambent star of love.
The star of love that bringeth bliss,
I learned, still shed its glow.
Much more the sibyl said, but this
Was all I cared to know.

Then into Sylvia's slender hand
I saw the Gypsy peer,
And words I longed to understand
Were whispered in her ear;
While on her cheek a blush had birth
That spread in rosy fire,
As when the winter-wakened earth
Feels spring's divine desire.

We left behind the Gypsy old,
And 'neath a dusky pine
Again was that fair story told
That ended: "Sweet, be mine!"
Then Sylvia, the roguish-eyed,
Laughed in her winning way;
"That's what," triumphantly she cried,
"The Gypsy said you'd say!"

THE THEATER HAT.

"WHAT have you got to do this evening?" said Cmythe.

"Nothing whatever," I replied.

"Well," said he, "I have a couple of seats for the California. Don't you want to come?"

"I should be delighted, my dear boy." And in a few minutes we were in a cab, rolling toward the theater.

Scarcely had we settled ourselves in our seats when I saw, entering the row in front of us, a tall, thin blond, who seated herself in the chair immediately in front of mine. And then I saw with stupefaction that she wore upon her head a curious sort of hat cocked down in front and cocked up behind, garnished with flowers, with vegetables, with shrubs—in fact, a veritable garden. As she had cocked her cocked hat over her eyes, it resulted that the rear of this vegetable garden towered above the top of her blond chignon, so that I could see no more of the stage than if I had been in far Cathay.

The bell rang; the curtain rose; I heard voices—presumably of actors—but it was impossible for me to tell. At the risk of acquiring a telescopic neck, I leaned to the right, then to the left. But I had not counted on the balloon sleeves of the blond, which were perfect monsters of swollen silk, and which masked completely both wings of the stage as her hat did the middle.

"Holy smoke!" said I to my friend. "that hat is going to be rather a nuisance."

The blond lady heard me; she turned slightly, put up her lorgnon, and surveyed me with the utmost haughtiness. Then, shrugging her shoulders, she pulled up her sleeves, so that it was impossible for me to see even the proscenium arch. Then she braced up her feet against the chair in front, and hoisted herself up a few inches, so that by this gymnastic feat she succeeded in elevating her vegetable garden even more than before.

In a melancholy tone I said to Cmythe: "It seems to me I would have been better off if I had stayed at the club and toasted my toes in the cafe in front of the fire. I would not have been incommoded or discommoded, and I would have seen fully as much of this piece as I am seeing now."

Hearing this, the blond lady turned around once more, and favored me with the most sneering smile that I have ever seen. It provoked me, and I determined to give her a lesson if I could. For I might as well have been in a theatrophone listening at a telephone. I could hear, but I could see nothing. Voices—female voices, male voices—confusedly came to my ear. You know how perplexing it is when you cannot see the personages upon the stage, when you cannot note their gestures nor the play of their faces. But the first act terminated in the midst of roars of applause. A man I knew, three seats to my right, was shaking with laughter. Everybody in the theater seemed to be intensely amused at the play except myself. And the blond lady would still turn from time to time, and favor me again with her sneering smile.

Seated immediately in front of the blond lady was a very little man who looked like a hunchback, his head was so sunken between his shoulders. I looked at him carefully. He had the appearance of being a dead-head, owing to his rather shabby attire. I tapped him on the shoulder, and asked him if he would go out with me between the acts for a few minutes. When we were outside, I said to him:

"My dear sir, I have a particular interest in occupying your chair, No. 48. If you will pardon the liberty I take, I would like to give you this trifle" (I slipped a five-dollar piece into his hand), "and, in exchange, I would like to have your seat and you may have mine, No. 92."

The little man's face lighted up with pleasure. He slipped my five-dollar piece into his waistcoat pocket, and said: "Certainly, my dear sir. You are very good. I will take your seat with pleasure."

Thus was I placed in possession of seat 48. Now I could see the stage, but still I was not revenged. My first idea was to install myself there, wearing my own high hat, but I reflected that this manifestation might not be understood, would seem discourteous to the actors, and that I would be forced to take it off. Suddenly an idea flashed across my mind—an inspiration. I left the theater and walked a block or two until I came to a milliner's shop. I entered and demanded of the saleswoman to sell me a hat—the most gigantic, the most arboriferous, the most pyramidal hat she had. She opened a drawer and exhibited to me a monument in black felt, with an enormous knob of black velvet upon its top, and on top of the black felt knob a puff of black flowers, extremely high. Without haggling, I paid her the price, and swiftly returned to the theater.

To the stupefaction of Cmythe, who was still seated in his chair, No. 90, I seated myself in No. 48, immediately before the blonde lady with the big hat, and then, with a perfectly serious countenance, I placed upon my head the black velvet monument. I do not know what sort of a figure I cut with my long mustaches under the velvet hat, but if a bomb had burst in the orchestra it would not have produced a greater effect. Exclamations came from every direction, and people climbed up on their seats to see me, amid roars of laughter.

The men—poor wretches, they do stand together once in awhile—understood the motive of my protest, and cried: "Bravo! Bravo! He is right!" while the agitated Cmythe screamed to me across the blonde lady's balloon sleeves: "Why, old man, you are going crazy." None the less, I remained impassive in the midst of the tempest which I had let loose. But the usual reverse came. Two ushers, after consultation, came to me and politely begged me to take off my hat. "Certainly," said I, "if you will make this lady take off hers." This response provoked the utmost enthusiasm from the men. But the ushers would not listen to reason, and they made me leave my seat.

The lady with the vegetable garden triumphed, but not for long.

Looking up toward the family circle, I saw a colored damsel wearing a small turban. I mounted to the circle. I went to the colored lady. "Pardon me," said I, "but I have just purchased a hat which cost me $15 only a quarter of an hour ago." I exhibited the black velvet monument, and the colored lady's eyes bulged out in amazement and admiration.

"And what about it?" said she.

"Nothing but this: it is yours if you will do me the favor to occupy my seat in the orchestra, No. 48, until the play is over."

In a second she swept off the little turban which she wore, placed the black velvet monument upon her head, gave it two or three taps before the mirror in the lobby, shook out her skirts, and then, taking my arm, I conducted her to orchestra chair No. 48.

Oh, if you had only seen the convulsive joy among the men in the orchestra when they saw my monumental hat reappear upon a feminine head. This time the ushers had nothing to say. The lady with the vegetable garden was vanquished. She could see nothing during the rest of the piece, and served as a focus from opera glasses from all over the house.

Revenge! Revenge! At last I was revenged. Ha, ha!—San Francisco Argonaut.

He Didn't Know.

Magistrate Peter Hughes, who loves a good joke, tells of a recent personal experience with great glee. In a certain case the other day a big colored woman was a witness. She testified that she had whipped her little boy very severely, and as she went on with the story of the exceedingly stiff beating she had administered the judge's clear brow grew a little darker, and he interrupted her to ask if it had been necessary to chastise the boy so severely. The witness opened her eyes widely at the question. Gazing intently at the court, she inquired: "Jedge, wuz you eber de father of a wuthless mulatter boy?" "No, no," responded Magistrate Hughes, hastily. "Then, jedge, you don't know nuffin' about de case."—Philadelphia Record.

Theory and Practice.

Young Wife—Are you the editress of the household department in the Woman's Companion?

Mrs. De Letter—Yes, I have had exclusive charge of that department for ten years.

"I am glad we are near neighbors. I am sure you won't object if I run in once in awhile for a little practical help about cooking?"

"No indeed,. Come in whenever you please—that is, after next week. My cook is away temporarily, and my husband and I are taking our meals at a restaurant."—N. Y. Weekly.

Never Forgot Himself.

"I admit, boys," remarked Paperwate, "that I haven't always led the life I should. I've gambled some, drunk whisky more'r less, an' at times perhaps I'm a trifle profane and abusive, an' have called men liars, which I have generally regretted afterwards, an' have passed a night at the stationhouse at odd intervals, an' insulted ladies, an' that sort o' thing; but, boys (and here his eyes filled with tears), I've always been a gentleman. No man can say that Marble F. Paperwate ever forgot that he was a gentleman!"—Bay City Chat.

In a Restaurant.

Guest (to waiter)—This beefsteak that you brought me isn't fit to eat; it must be three weeks old.

Waiter—I beg your pardon, sir, I made a mistake; I brought you antelope steak instead.

Guest (tries it again)—Why that tastes delicious; why didn't you tell me before that it was antelope steak!"—Texas Siftings.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

Squatters and Boomers.

The sooners who have squatted on township 150 are being driven out by the Indian police, and, while no bloodshed has occurred, there is some ugly talk. This township is in dispute and the land office officials have instructions not to take filings on land in it. The other townships withdrawn from settlement are: 149-39, 157-27, 158-26, and W 27. Both 157 snd 158 are located in the northeastern part of the reservation, and are tamarack lands, not fit for settlement, anyway. The best feature of the Red lake opening, so far, is the impetus given to the sale of loose farming lands in that vicinity. In one day the sales by local real estate men, of Red Lake Falls, aggregated over 10 quarter sections and from $5 to $10, lying in contiguous townships. The streets present an interesting sight, lined on each side with a motley throng of strangers, and the prairie schooner looming up all in the center. All day and each day the crowd grows greater. It is remarkable, considering that the opening is still a month off. The settlers driven from township 150 are coming back to the city.

The Pine Sale.

The Red Lake pine will be scheduled for sale at $3 per 1,000 feet, the minimum price fixed by law. The government has no information to permit a grading of several prices. It was concluded it would be better to put it all in at the minimum and trust to competition to raise this figure to the value of individual tracts. The only thing that might defeat this would be a combination between the large bidders, and it is understood that there will be enough small bidders to defeat any such plan. It is understood that there will be many persons who will buy a 40 or 80 tract with the intention of putting in portable saw mills and sawing for the immediate local demand on the reservation.

The first sale is largely experimental, and if it does not go off satisfactorily, future sales will be conducted on a different basis. There are 3,001 descriptions, 40's or lots, containing from 10,000 to 700,000 feet of pine, and averaging about 50,000, so that the total of pine is not far from 150,000,000 feet.

Stands by Anoka.

Judges Brill, Otis and Kelly, of the Ramsey county district court, handed down a decision in the matter of the location of the fourth hospital for the insane by the commission appointed for the purpose, dissolving the temporary injunction granted at the request of Hastings petitioners and refusing longer to restrain the commission from purchasing a site at Anoka. In this the claim of the Hastings petitioners is overruled.

While joining with the other members of the bench in signing the order, Judge Kelly, in a memorandum, dissents from the views of his colleagues, as to the propriety of the action of the commission in reconsidering their vote, proclaiming that in so doing the commission was guilty of a "blunder amounting almost to a crime."

Logs and Lumber.

A meeting of lumbermen of the upper Mississippi valley was held in the surveyor general's office recently. Figures were given which showed the season's cut in the woods to have been 585,000,000 feet, or about 150,000,000 feet less than the cut last winter. The old log committee, consisting of H. C. Akeley, H. M. De Laittre and W. H. Day, was unanimously re-elected. The boom company was ordered to begin the turning of logs as soon as practicable, and not turn more than 75 per cent of the amount turned last year.

Minnesota Talent Abroad.

J. Murphy, who left Winona some time ago, taking with him about $300 belonging to the Borton institute, was arrested in Chicago, the other night, while attempting to rob a safe in the residence of Mrs. Catherine Johannes. This safe, it is said, contained valuables to the amount of $120,000. Murphy, at the time of his arrest, was in company with another man, and both were arrested. It is not thought that the case will be pushed, as he will no doubt get the full penalty of the law in Chicago.

Killed by Cars.

A young man, some 20 years of age, whose name is supposed to be J. Sheldon, a member of the Third Infantry band at Fort Snelling, was found lying dead between the railroad tracks on the Milwaukee short line, about 400 feet north of 26th avenue S, Minneapolis. When found the body had evidently lain for some hours. It was squarely in the middle of the tracks, and the head was severed from the body, hanging only by the spinal cord.

News in Brief.

Gov. Clough, by proclamation, designates April 24 as Arbor Day.

James Purcell, living near Waterville, was struck by an engine while walking on the railroad track. His skull was fractured and probably fatally injured.

Herman Johnson fell down a shaft in the Pioneer mine, at Ely, a distance of 225 feet, and instantly killed. He was a Finn, 22 years old and leaves a wife and two children.

Minnesota postoffices have been established as follows: Billings, Aitkin county, Eliza Helmore, postmaster; Isle, Mille Lacs county, Charles Malone, postmaster.

The First Regiment band of Minneapolis contemplates making a tour of the state, giving concerts in a few of the larger cities. This organization, under the direction of Prof. Watson, has become the leading band of the Northwest, and wherever it has appeared has created unbounded enthusiasm in musical circles. A. A. Whitcomb will look after the business arrangements.

The office of the United States commissioner at Red Lake Falls was entered by burglars and a typewriter stolen.

John G. Morrison has been commissioned as postmaster at Red Lake.

Col. Wheaton, G. K. R. S. of the state grand lodge, Knights of Pythias, has received replies from over 60 of the subordinate lodges of the state on the proposition to devote the fund collected for the national encampment to the reunion and demonstration to be held in Minneapolis. Of the replies received, all are unanimous in consenting to the transfer of the fund.

The name of the postoffice at Chedi, Brown county, has been changed to James, and Carl Voight has been commissioned postmaster.

Over 90 teachers attended the institute at Kasson.

INGERSOLL IN A PULPIT.

Noted Infidel Tells "How Mankind Can Be Reformed."

Chicago, April 13.—With a prelude that included the pronouncing of an invocation, the repeating of the Lord's Prayer in unison, the reading of the tenth chapter of Luke, commencing with the 25th verse, the singing of an hosanna, of "Nearer, My God, to Thee" and "America," the greatest living agnostic of the age stepped to the restrum of the Church Militant Sunday morning and for nearly two hours expounded to the congregation his views upon "How Mankind Can Be Reformed."

Although admission was strictly confined to ticket holders, the street in front of the theater was blocked with people long before the opening of the doors, and even after the interior had been packed to suffocation over a thousand men and women besieged the entrance. On the stage were 400 or more representative citizens, including nearly every member of the appellate and superior judiciary, several federal and county officials, delegations from every medical and law college and institution of learning in the city and suburbs and a number of retired divines. Every sect and denomination without an exception had it srepresentative.

When Col. Ingersoll made his appearance arm in arm with Dr. Rusk there was loud applause mingled with murmurs from some who seemed to regard such a demonstration as foreign to a religious service. In the prayer that followed the musical exercises Dr. Rusk asked for a special blessing on their guest of the day, who was endeavoring to show the world how this life might be made one of usefulness and joy, and also invoked a dispensation for his wife and children, while in his introductory remarks Dr. Rusk characterized Col. Ingersoll as "the man who is endeavoring to do this world good and to make it better." This, he said, was no time to reason, no time to disagree with the faiths of men, or beliefs of men, when they were trying to make the world better than they found it. No matter, he said, whether a man believed in God or not, if he expounded the truth, then the truth was there and God was there.

As Col. Ingersoll stepped to the rostrum he was welcomed with applause that lasted for over a minute. With the suggestion that while his hearers and himself might be traveling different roads, they were all trying to add to human joy and happiness he took as his text the quotation from Shakespeare, whom he characterized as "the greatest of human beings:" "There is no darkness but ignorance," and for two hours spoke upon the necessity of arbitration as a substitute for war, the need for new methods in the treatment of criminals, the desirability of the occupancy of the prairies of the west for homes as a panacea for the tenement system, the question of divorce, the relations of capital and labor and the need of reform in the education of children.

In concluding his address Col. Ingersoll said:

"The reforms that I have mentioned cannot be accomplished in a day, possibly not for many centuries, and in the meantime there is much crime, much poverty, much want and consequently something must be done now. Let each human being within the limits of the possible be self-supporting; let everyone take intelligent thought for the morrow, and if a human being supports himself and acquires a surplus let him use a part of that surplus for the unfortunate, and let each one to the extent of his ability help his fellow men. Let him do what he can in the circle of his own acquaintance to rescue the fallen, to help those who are trying to help themselves, to give work to the idle. Let him distribute kind words, words of wisdom, of cheerfulness and hope. In other words, let every human being do all the good he can, and let him bind up the wounds of his fellow creatures and at the same time put forth every effort to hasten the coming of a better day.

"This, in my judgment, is real religion. To do all the good you can is to be a saint in the highest and in the noblest sense. To do all the good you can—this is to be really and truly spiritual. To relieve suffering, to put the star of hope in the midnight of despair—this is true holiness. This is the religion of science. The old creeds are too narrow! they are not for the world in which we live. The old dogmas lack breadth and tenderness; they are too cruel, too merciless, too savage. We are growing grander and nobler.

"The firmament inlaid with suns is the dome of the real cathedral. The interpreters of nature are the true and only priests. In the great creed are all the truths that lips have uttered and in the real litany will be found all the ecstasies and aspirations of the soul, all dreams of joy, all hopes for nobler, fuller life. The real church, the real edifice, is adorned and glorified with all that art has done. In the real choir is all the thrilling music of the world and in the starlit aisles have been, and are, the grandest souls of every land and clime.

"There is no darkness but ignorance.'

"Let us flood the world with intellectual light."

When he concluded the applause was loud and long continued, many of those in the foyer waving their handkerchiefs and hats. The congregation united in singing "Blest Be The Tie That Binds" and with the pronouncing of the benediction the unique service came to an end.

A FATAL PLUNGE.

Terrible Disaster to a Freight Train Near Bedford, Ind.

Bedford, Ind., April 14.—Five killed, three wounded and one miraculous escape from death was the result of an accident on the Belt road near here Monday morning. The dead are: Charles Ogden, conductor; James Shere, fireman; M. J. Masterson, bridge carpenter; Ed. Bivens, bridge carpenter; Warren S. Lermond, bridge carpenter. The injured: George Meinzer, engineer; James Davis, bridge carpenter; Henry Devault, brakeman. A freight train composed of a road engine and flat cars was coming to the city from the quarries, near here. Just west of the Monon railroad tracks, about a mile distant, is a trestle, about 70 feet high. This trestle is said to have been defective.

As the train ran onto the structure there was an ominous creak, then a great crash, and in an instant the engine and first car had toppled over and gone crashing to the ground, from where, with the sound of escaping steam, came the cries of the men who were being scalded to death or were having their lives crushed out by the heavy debris. Henry Devault, a brakeman, saw the engine totter, and leaped from the car just in time to avoid being carried down with his less fortunate companions. Devault, though injured, gave the alarm, and a wrecking train with physicians was at once sent to the scene and the work of rescue begun. The five dead bodies were taken from the twisted and distorted mass of wood and iron, some of them being almost unrecognizable.

Plague Epidemic in Hong Kong.

London, April 13.—The governor of Hong Kong telegraphs that there were 75 cases of Bubonic plague in that city during the seven days ending April 7, as against 47 cases during the previous seven days.

KNOW THYSELF.

Science Helps You to Be Your Own Doctor.

The Story of a Woman Who Kept Posted on the Work of Science and Saved Her Own Life.

From the Era, Bradford, Pa.

Too few people are acquainted with the rapid advance of medical science, and too many doctors are still plodding in the old paths. Once it comes to pass that people know themselves, that all physicians are abreast of the world's knowledge, much of our suffering will come to an end. Medical scientists are not delving into the depths of knowledge for the mere benefit of brother physicians, but for the benefit of the world. They place in the hands of the well man a means of keeping well, in the hands of the sick a means of recovery. To the parent they give the power of saving the child. Science is working for you—will you accept the proffered help?

Mrs. George Rowend, an estimable lady who resides at No. 276 East Main Street, has cause to feel grateful toward the science of medicine.

One day recently, a reporter, learning that Mrs. Rowend had been greatly benefited by the use of a new medicine, interviewed her. She stated that she had been suffering with a female trouble for many years. She had been doctored for the ailment for a long time—in fact, nearly all her life—and had never received anything more than temporary relief. During the last three years her condition grew worse and was aggravated by an affection of the heart. Her health was so poor that she found it almost impossible to perform her household duties.

"I never believed in proprietary medicines," said Mrs. Rowend, "but one day last fall I read an article in a newspaper which told of the cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I decided to try the medicine. Before I had taken the contents of one box I began to feel better. The depressing weakness which had bothered me for so many years began to disappear, and the action of the heart at once became stronger and more regular.

"I took nine boxes of the pills and I am now feeling better than I have for several years, and I have unbounded faith in the medicine."

Mrs. Rowend is steadily gaining in health and strength and gives all the credit for her restoration to health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

HIS LEG IS PULLED.

That Is How a Southern Congressman Regards His Lot.

"Some people may think that a congressman saves a pile of money out of his salary," said a well-known southern congressman, who was talking to a Washington Star reporter on the vicissitudes of running for office, and especially for congress, "but a man has to be a small walking bank to accommodate the large number of his 'friends' and supporters who need a little money for some urgent matter. In my state we have to make campaigns and appear before the people at meetings. Well, I have never attended a meeting but that I did not have some kind of a subscription poked into my face.. Somebody wants something for a church and for missionary purposes or for helping some fellow who has been burned out.

"You can't avoid subscribing, and have to head the list with the largest sum. Then about the time you think you are through with having your leg pulled some lazy fellow will walk up and say: 'How do, gineral?' I had ter quit my work ter come out and hear you terday, and I thunk yer mout giv' me a dollar.' While you have the greatest contempt for the man, you give him the dollar.

"When you leave the meeting you are out anywhere from $20 to $50. These are just a few instances of what a candidate has to spend money for. After he gets through the campaign and is elected he has to furnish every dead beat from his district who should happen to come to Washington with money. I've actually given them money and railroad tickets to get home and have them go back and work against me."

CURIOUS CHINESE CUSTOM.

Calling to Mind the Blessing of Having Written Characters.

In a work entitled "An Australian in China" occurs a description of the queer practice in China of honoring waste paper by committing it to the flames. In the center of the green stands the hollow pillar, in which Chinese waste paper is reverently burnt. "When letters were invented," the Chinese say, "Heaven rejoiced and hell trembled." "Reverence the characters," is an injunction of Confucius which no Chinaman neglects to follow. He remembers that "he who uses lettered paper to kindle the fire has ten demerits, and will have itchy sores;" he remembers that "he who tosses lettered paper into dirty water, or burns it in a filthy place has 20 demerits, and will frequently have sore eyes or become blind;" whereas, "he who gets about and collects, washes and burns lettered paper has 5,000 merits, adds 12 years to his life, and will become honored and healthy, and his children and grandchildren will be virtuous and filial." But his reverence has strict limits, and while he reverences a piece of paper upon which a moral precept is written, he often thinks himself absolved from reverencing the moral precept itself.

A Tottering Spire.

It is reported that the spire of Salisbury cathedral, in the south of England, is tottering. When the cathedral was begun, in 1220, there was no thought of erecting a spire on the central tower. That was an afterthought, and the architect who designed the tower strained the strength of the original substructure to the utmost. It has always had to be carefully watched, and the means taken to strengthen it by iron bands and ties have only added to the weight. Of late the stonework has been decaying rapidly, so that the spire is in great danger of collapsing.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Pain often concentrates all its Misery in RHEUMATISM

Use at once ST. JACOBS OIL if you want to feel it concentrate its healing in a cure.

It's a slow process, usually—education, development, and growth. But it hasn't been so with Pearline (use without soap). Pearline's success has been a wonder, from the start. All the more so when you consider the many poor imitations of it, which claim to make washing easy

These things tend to confuse people, of course. They're forced on the public by peddlers, prizes, substitution, etc. No doubt they're often thought to be the same as Pearline We protest. Don't judge Pearline (use soap) by the company it has to keep. 471

GYPSINE.

Q. What is Gypsine?
A. Gypsine is a permanent and everlasting wall finish, entirely different from all Kalsomine preparations.
Q. How is it more durable than Kalsomines?
A. It is made from a Gypsum Rock cement base and grows hard on the wall with age.
Q. How about Kalsomines?
A. They are but temporary, softening after a short time and have to be washed and scraped off, in fact spoil any wall to which they are applied, as they rub and scale.
Q. Will not Gypsine rub and scale off?
A. No, when originally applied to a clean wall it is everlasting, and can be recoated to change tints or when necessary
Q. Is Gypsine injurious to the health?
A. Unlike all poisonous wall paper held on with vegetable paste or whiting and glue kalsomine, it is recommended by the leading physicians and sanitarians everywhere.
Q. Can anything but plain wall tinting be done with Gypsine?
A. Any kind of frescoing or relief decorating can be done with it.
Q. Where can I purchase it?
A. From your local paint dealer.
Q. How can I learn more about Gypsine?
A. Ask your dealer or write for copy of GYPSINE ADVOCATE and sample circular.

DELANO DIARY

--The Watertown Mills shipped flour to the cities via Delano this week.

—J. E. Borsch has purchased a lot on N. River Street, of W. M. Mowatt, and intends mooving his store, building and all on to it soon.

—Both Drs. Niven and Knight were in town during the early part of the week. This seems to be getting to be quite a point for dentists.

—Watch out for the primary election notices to be given under the new law. Turn out and vote, and see how you like the new system of holding caucuses.

--Our local Insurance agent P. H. Greear wants it distinctly understood that he is not the man who fills up medical examinations and asks Physicians to sign them.

—The Wright County Dog Kennel is growing rapidly in importance. Several valuable canines are now on hand among them some juveniles that furnish lots of fun for yisitors.

—There are but a few more weeks of school before the long summer vacation, and the scholars should try and attend to the end of the term and pass examination in as many studies as possible.

—Some seeding was done previous to the big snow storm, but not much; farmers are again getting at it. Though late prospects are now favorable to another large crop.

—With a consignment of firkins of creamery buttes, a lot of empty kerosene barrels and beer kegs shipped yesterday, things looked like business about the depot; especially so when a glimpse could now and then be caught of that military cap of the agents —Quite a number of muskrats have been shot within the city limits this week. It is a little bit dangerous to be running along the slippery river banks with loaded firearms while people throng the streets and the bridge, who might be accidently shot.

—Quite a number of complaints of swine being kept within the limits, and some outside have been handed in. The village council will doubtless feel called upon to extend the swine limits, and give the Marshal strict instructions to see that the hog ordinance is enforced.

—Quite a hay famine has been going on in town for a couple of weeks past; but has been broken by a few farmers near town doubling up teams and hauling some choice lots preserved for their own use and selling it at good prices. As soon as the roads become good it will be as difficult as ever to sell hay.

—If the village road scraper should be driven a few times through a couple of the alleys in town; as it should be, it would make travel much easier, and drain some of the filth from the business part of town, and add to the alrerdy gained reputation of Delano as the healthiest town in this part of the country.

--At a meeting of the Epworth League it was yoted to hold a sociable at the City Hall on Thursday evening, April 25. An entertainment to be given icecream and cake to be served. 10 cts admission at the door. The entertainment will be songs represented by tableaux, something new for Delano. Everybody come.

—Col Dodge, in a letter over his name said that anyone who knew anything about it was aware that a majority of the jury in the case of Minnesota vs. O. L. Billings were for conviction; O. L. Billings says that ten were for acquital and but two for conviction. Surely one of them is telling the people wrong. It looks as if the jury might set the matter right if they saw fit.

—Third Street has been in horrible condition for the past week, water standing in the gutter from Lindslys to Gutzwillers residence until the dirt that had been dug up last year gava way and made quite a hole near Swedebacks place, letting it out. Cal Stewart got stauled with a load of wood for Rev. Davies near John Brasie's corner. The ground over the water pipes along Miss White's property settled till danger signals have been put up. The whole street is in bad shape.

—Easter services at the M. E. Church were held last Sunday evening; having been postponed until then on account of the quarterly meeting being held Easter night. Notwithstanding the rain a fair sized audience came out, and most of those on the programme were present. The parts were well learned and things went off quite smoothly. Superintendent Hawker conducted the entertainment. Rev. Farber lead in prayer; the choir rendered a song. The Infant class recited. Step by Step, a song, by Mrs. Green's class; Sweet Easter Lillies, recitation, Carrie Strickland. Recitation, May Mowatt. Rainbow piece, Miss Gross' class. Easter Flowers, song, Mollie Maxfield. Recitation, Easter Lillies, Mrs. Green's class. Hope's messengers, by Mrs. Hawker's class. Remarks by paster. Anthem by the choir closed the evenings entertainment. All were well pleased and many of the audience were heard to remark, "much better than I expected."

- Daymon and Pythias at the City Hall, on Monday evening, April 20.

—Measles don't appear to be so hard on the little fellows this season as is often the case; and owing to precautions used has not spread much. By families who have it remaining at home it is hoped that the school may be enabled to complete the terms before a general spread occurs.

Personal.

Rev. A. Abbot, of Rockford was in town to day in the rain.

Mr. Drew, of Minneapolis was buying some stock here today.

Jake Kuchenmeister, of Waverly, was in town Wednesday.

Dr. E. E. Shrader, of Watertown, drove over yesterday afternoon.

Robert Renswick mooved with his family to Chicago Tuesday morning.

Mrs. M. A. Chance came home from Minneapolis, last week, for a visit.

Editor Wharton entertained his father, of Ashland, Wis., over Sunday,

Clerk Vorse and Sheriff Carpenter were doing business in Delano, Monday.

Mrs. Cameronand two girls went to Minneapolis, Miss Gross to St. Paul Monday.

Gilbert Loffler, of Yankton, S. D. was in town delivering nursery stock this week.

Allen Jenkins and two daughters, of Greenwood, drove over Monday through the mud

Henry Parslow, Jr. drove over to Loretto for avisit this week. His lame leg is improving.

Chairman Kemper, of Victor, was an early caller Monday morning on his way to Buffalo

Wm. Gent of Rockford is laid up with Rheumatism, He's been to attentive to his bees.

George Cook, of Rockford, came to Delano, on Sunday to have a fractured clavicle repaired.

Miss Annie Parslow will begin the Summer term of school in the Ziebarth district next Monday.

Chester M. Johnson and his combination steed, of Rockford rambled round this way on last Lord's day.

J. S. Coopre, Charles Johnson, C. A. Brunkaw and others attended the organization of a lodge of M. W. at Waverly Monday.

Henry F. Swarteut, of Rockford, was among out of town folks who gave evidence as to the depth of the mud last Saturday.

C. J. Buckley started in Monday morning on his old job, and his familiar form with an arm ful of Eagle mail can again be seen.

Mrs. H. D. Cadwell, of Rockford, was a Delano visitor on Monday. She has been allowed a pension of $8. per month and $600. arrearage.

David Cochran, of Waverly, his brother Levi, of Smith Lake, and W. H. Johnson, of Howard Lake, spent Wednesday afternoon in Delano.

C. W. Ingerson, who has been on the sick list for a week, and John McGary met in the GAZETTE office yesterday and discussed bimetallism for a few minutes. They seemed to harmonize quite nicely, if one is a Republican and the other a Democrat.

County Cullings.

John Nugent is said to be paying strict attention to farming now-a-days.

We hear that J. H. Wendell contemplates a trip to the hills and valleys of Old Virginia, in the near future in search of health.

Levi Cochran, of Smith Lake, had a replevin suit against Leslie McClay in favor of R. C. Munger, of St. Paul, at Buffalo this week, before Justice Junken.

This is one of the years when voters are going to be a little particular what the platform is, as well as the candidate. Then they will demand sober, inteligent, honest men and rely on them doing what they think right.

J. R. Howard Assistant claim agent of the G. N. was arraigned before Justice William Cochrane, at Buffalo Tuesday on the charge of bribery. He waived examination and was bound over to appear before the Grand Jury in June. Will Dedrick and John Elsenpeter were given as bondsmen. Tim Burns appeared for Howard.

The Rockford woollen mills, we understand have again been started up, and will run as usual: The proprietor of the water power, who is an ardent free trader having yielded to the demands of the proprietor of the mills, who is as zealous a protectionist for a reduction of rent. Of course the farmers will expect to reap the benefit, in an advance on wool, while they will also get their flannels and woollens at reduced rates.

Legislative candidates this year should be men who will take a lively interest in the many important matters they will have to deal with. There is the new capital bulding; the 4th Hospital for Insane to be located; the iron mines to see to; the rearranging of legislative and other districts. Our county at present seems the tail end of the Congressianal and of the Judicial district, and is about as big a hog with Sherburne Co. on legislative matters, as Hennepin is with Wright on Judical affairs.

Republiean candidates for county office seem to be growing more numerous every day. There is Wharton, Rank, Saylor, French, Vorse and no telling how many more Clerks of Court. For County Auditor, Lamson, Hellier, Swanburg. County Attorney, Lindsley, Latham, Tarbox. Treasurer, I. Gutzwiller, Jr., Ole Mattson. Register of Deeds, C. J. Buckley, Ed Nogle. School Supt., Lee, Lindsley Hawker. Congressman or Judge of the 4th Jud. District., A. Y. Eaton. We don't know just how near we have come to hitting them; they may be a little mixed; they are apt to be.

County Commissioner is one of the most important offices in a county, and nothing but good, honest, reliable men should be entrusted with the distribution of county funds. At the same time, honesty is not the only requisite for a good official. Intelligence enough to do business and a general knowledge of affairs that sharpers may not impose upon the board is necessary. Three of the present terms expire this fall and their successors will be selected at the coming county convention; Messrs Kemper, Bugbee, and Hudek are the anxious ones while Haffton and Buckman have not finished their terms.

The County Commissioners met at Buffalo April 13.

It was voted to appropriate road money pro rata among commissioner districts on the basis of taxable valuation.

The following appropriations were made: Stockholm $135; Cokato $130; Victor $130; Franklin $150; Rockford $150; Maple Lake $100; Buffalo $100; Otsego, $200; Marysville, $125; South side, $100.

The hearing of school petitions of John Peterson, Buffalo, continued to May 27.

Requests of S. Erickson and And Mattson, for abatement of taxes, recommended te State Auditor.

Several bills allowed the largest I. Gutzwiller Jr. $175.15 assessment books blanks and other supplies; Woolley & Woolley premium on insurance, $121,-50; E. O. Brewster and J. W. McDonald, $81. each, for insurance: H. S. Saylor, publishing Commissioners proceedings March session, $24.00.

OUR COUNTRY IN PERIL.

The surge of iniquity rolls o'er the land
Like the billows of ocean upon the wide strand;
Like the wave that oft follows the earthquake's dread shock;
Like the deluge of old inundating the rock.

Its mad waters are surging with energy great
And threaten with ruin our staunch Ship of State—
Wake, O ye sailors from slumbers of peace
And save your good craft from the clamoring seas!

Awake to your duty! Your lives are at stake!
And the lives of your loved ones—for their sake awake!
For you are responsible, you are to blame
If posterity succumb, and perish in shame.

That bulwark, Morality—(God grant it may stand!)
Was made the foundation of law in the land.
For ages it has been the backbone of right,
The true guiding-cloud, the pillar of light.

But now the good fortress, though rigid and strong,
Is fast undermined by a villainous throng.
Grim General Lust is the first in the band
With Greed and Licensousness next in command.

Intemperance has also a share in the strife,
Defiling the holiest functions of life;
While unbridled license in love and divorce
With snares will entrap those not conquered by force.

Our highest society, glimmering, bright,
Is but a thin mantle that hides from the light
Vile corruption, which if not conquered and bound
Will be far worse than that which brought Rome to the ground.

Religion—that pillar that enters the sky,
Supporting the hope of existence on high—
Is also attacked with great vigor and might
By dark Skepticism, the queen of the night.

The Moloch of wealth with its unholy shrine
Is taking the place of God's altar divine;
While Indifference and Ignorance walk side by side
Swayed hither and thither by the rush of the tide.

Are Patriotism and Duty asleep?
If not, then what sort of a watch do they keep?
Aren't they apprehensive? Are they not aware
That storm-clouds have gathered and thicken the air?

Up, up to your duty! Each man to his post,
And check the advance of the enemy's host!
Stand up for the right, for religion and truth;
Imbue with their teachings the heart of the youth.

Are we to be conquered? Are we to be slaves?
No! rather we'll fight o'er our dead heroes' graves
Those heroes wrenched freedom from tyranny's grip
And gave it to us--shall we let it slip?

Look back on the path which this nation has trod
And see the plain prints of the finger of God.
Do you think that He had not a purpose, a plan
When He opened this country to civilized man?

Why should it for ages unoccupied lie
While over the East hung the gloomiest sky?
And why were its portals just then opened wide
When the pale glow of dawn in the east could be spied?

Why has it prospered that truly we say
That ours is the foremast of nations to-day?
Was that God's grand purpose, His holy design
That swift rise should be followed by rapid decline?

No, certainly that could not be His intent,
But by our lack of vigilance we may prevent
The perfect development He would desire,
And allow our great nation to sink in the mire.

The goddess of wisdom this message does bear,
That great though the danger we need not dispair,
That vigilance has been and always will be
The price of broad freedom, of true liberty.

Let us hope for the best, for the triumph of right
For a time when Queen Justice shall rule in her might.
And meantime be active, awake and alert,
And God will be with us, our ruin avert.

—GUNBRIUS LEE, in The MINNKOTA MASCOT.

COTTON STATE EXPOSITION.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 18, Dec. 31, 1895.

The schedule printed below is a comprehensive guide to the best and most desirable route to Atlanta from the North and Northwest, Chicago, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis TerreHaute, and Evansville.

Palace Day Coaches and Pullman Sleeping Cars are attached to all trains shown in this schedule.

Extremely low rates have been made to Atlanta and return via the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railway. All trains run solid between Nashville and Atlanta, except train in last column. The train in third column, which leaves Cincinnati at 4:30 p. m. runs solid to Atlanta. This is the route of the famous "Dixie Flyer," through "all the year round" sleeping car line between Nashville, Tenn., and Jacksonville, Fla.

WOODMAN SPARE THAT TREE.

Woodman, spare that tree!
Touch not a single bough!
In youth it sheltered me,
And I'll protect it now.
'Twas my forefather's hand
That placed it near his cot:
There, woodman, let it stand,
Thy ax shall harm it not!

That old familiar tree,
Whose glory and renown
Are spread o'er land and sea,
And would's't thou hack it down?
Woodman, forebear thy stroke!
Cut not its earth-bound ties;
O, spare that aged oak,
Now towering to the skies!

When but an idle boy,
I sought its grateful shade;
In all their gushing joy,
Here, too, my sisters played.
My mother kissed me here;
My father pressed my hand—
Forgive this foolish tear,
But let that old oak stand!

My heart-strings round thee cling,
Close as thy bark, old friend!
Here shall the wild-bird sing,
And still thy branches bend.
Old tree, the storm still brave!
And, woodman, leave the spot;
While I've a hand to save,
Thy ax shall harm it not

GEORGE P. MORRIS.

THE Northwestern Farmer of St. Paul, published twice a month for 50cts a year is a good farm paper to take.

THE Penny Magazine of Philadelphia, is the latest venture of the kind to appear on our table. It is neatly gotten up and sells for 5cts per copy.

THE New York World claims to have figured out to a certainty that McKinley will be the republican nominee for president in spite of all combinations that can be worked.

SILVER is said to be cheap money! When did it get to be cheap? If gold were demonetised how long before it would be as cheap as silver? How long before it would sell for half its present price as jewelery?

PROF. SHAW has succeeded in demonstrating to a lot of newspaper reporters that fat lamb is good to eat, the butchers to the contrary, notwithstanding. Good fat beef is also much better than lean tough beef.

THOSE New York Republicans who could not stand it to have a Democratic pastor, even if he was the brother of Grover Cleveland, must be hard to please; or their pastor must have tread on their tariff corns a little.

IT is rumored that F. N. S. of the Representative will soon become Francis N. Stacy, editor-in-chief of the Daily Penny Press. Mr. Stacy is a good man and Wright County wishes him well in his efforts to reform things generally.

GEO. N. LAMPHERE, of the Moorhead News does not believe in blowing his own horn. But should he get to Congress, as he may, he will not be so bashful about blowing a good strong blast for his district, his state and his country's welfare.

IT has been said that silver, cheap money would drive gold, dear money out of circulation. That people would hoard the gold. As a matter of fact about so much money is hoarded, whether gold or silver; the balance circulates of whatever kind of material it is made.

IT looks now as if St. Paul would elect a good man, O. C. Cullen, Mayor. The capital of our state deserves a first class head to its government. Not a word of censure seems to fall about Mr. Cullen though he has long been before the public in high and honorable capacities.

CHAIRMAN MCDERMOTT, of the Democratic State Central Committee, denies that the committee to which he belongs ever got any money from the Republican committee or from a Republican. It is now time for the Republican committee to deny ever having paid out any, as charged; or for the chargers to withdraw the charge.

GOLD bugs claim that silver money placed on a par with gold at a ratio of 16 to 1 would be cheap money and drive gold out of the country. They cite us to history and say; "See there." But when silver was worth more than gold, instead of hoarding the silver, Congress demonetized it. They voted to coin no more silver. This instance they don't seem inclined to talk much about; But its history too, and deserves reference, as much as do other points. Lets hear from some of them on this particular point.

THOSE who believe that our country should do business on a gold standard, alone, claim that in case our goverment would coin silver and gold both, as money, as it has done for most of its existence, our country would be thrown at once on a mono-metallic system; that because silver is selling at a less ratio than 16 to 1 of gold, it would be a cheap money and drive the gold out of circulation. They make this assertion right along; yet when silver was demonetized it was worth more than gold, figured on the ratio of 16 to 1. Why did not the people hoard all the silver then? Why was it demonetized? And how many people ever found out it was to be deprived of its money quality, or that it was done for months after the bill had been passed by Congress and signed by President Grant who didn't know that it was designed to demonetize silver?

THE Prohibitionist are right in the field and working their cause for what there is in it. In St. Paul they appointed a committee to wait upon the nominee of the Democratic party for mayor O. O. Cullen, and upon the Republican nominee, Mr. Doran, and the committee reported that they could not receive satisfactory pledges from either, whereupon the convention forthwith proceeded to place in nomination Rev. Geo. F. Innis, as their nominee for mayor. All the pledges they have a right to expect is that the Mayor shall do his best to enforce the laws, and a man's character should be sufficint guarantee as to whether or not he can be depended upon to do so. Political pledges, with some are easily made and about as easily broken. It is the duty of any man to keep the law of the land and especially so for a Mayor of a great City like St. Paul, without being asked for additional pledges.

THE ringleaders among politicians seem to be well enough satisfied with the present tariff to let it alone; and consequently don't seem so anxious to have McKinley head the ticket with his Protective Tariff cry; but appear to be scheming to have a standard bearer of the non-interference kind; and who is for gold with a little more ring to it than is the little Napoleon. And then if the Democrats can be persuaded to make a platform which says nothing about reducing the tariff, but which goes in for free silyer; and the Populists can be kept in the field; and the Prohibitionists will put up a ticket favoring reform all along the line; and the free silver men can be cajoled or provoked into running candidates of their own, the remains of the once G. O. P. expect again to reign; the party of bosses; the Quays, Elkens, Platts and John Shermans expect to wave the laurels of Lincoln. Grant, Garfield in the eyes of the "dear people" while men of their selection pass quietly over the graves of heroes and patriots to occupy the seats of statesmen and to scatter the ashes of a once noble and free government. Blaine, Conklin and Windom are no longer there. The main object of it all appears to be still greater contraction of the currency, in the interest of those who have already hoarded gold. These victories of the schemer over the majority of the voters ought not to be. People throughout the land should learn to vote for what they know is best of their own knowledge, and not be persuaded by an orator brought on purpose from a distant state, that things are so terrible there that you must vote for their interest. Selfishness is not always commendable, but this mode of electioneering has been carried to such an extreme as to have lost its charm. When voters cast their ballots in accordance with the dictates of their own conciences; vote according to their own best interests then will a clear expression of the people be had; then will cease these victories of money over morals; of wealth over workers; of wickedness over wisdom. Keep your eyes open attend the primaries and vote YOUR sentiments. Don't stay at home and allow others to arrange party platforms and make tickets to suit them, and then grumble that things are wrong; but help at the preliminary meetings. Send YOUR choice of delegates to conventions to aid in starting things right. If you should be chosen to attend a convention be sure to do so; don't stay away and then complain that the tricksters are running the party. Do YOUR duty.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 17, 1896.

Speaker Reed is now the object of the McKinleyites hatred to a marked extent. They realize that if McKinley fails to capture the republican nomination it will be because of Reed's opposition, which is making itself felt in a much stronger manner than some people deemed possible. A prominent McKinleyite said under conditions which prevent the use of his name "Reed may possibly succeed in keeping McKinley out of his nomination, but it won't do him any good. Not only will McKinley's friends work against Reed, if they find themselves unable to win, but they will endeavor to throw the nomination to some man who will not treat Reed any better than Harrison did during his term."

Although the charge has not directly been made, the inference from the repeated refusals of Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, who is in charge of the resolution, to set a date for taking a vote on the question of seating Col. Dupont as Senator from Delaware, is that he is afraid to have a vote taken. Senator Gorman evidently does not take much stock in the talk of adjournment in May as he remarked when Senator Mitchell tried to give his reasons for not setting a date for a vote, that it meant it would be put off until after June 1.

Two Republican members of the House who have been indulging in dreams of the figure they would cut in the speaker's chair of the next House, provided, of course, that the republicans continue to control that body, were very much disgusted when it was anthoritatively denied that Speaker Reed intended to retire from public life if he failed to get nominated for President. Their dream is over, unless they can get Reed nominated at St. Louis, as they know he can be Speaker as long as he remains in the House and the House remains republican. Hopkins, of Ills., and Darrett, of Mass., are the members referred to.

There is no longer any reason for doubt as to where Speaker Reed stands. The platform adopted by the Maine republicans this week was submitted to Mr. Reed for his approval and for the purpose of allowing him to make any desired changes therein several days before the convention met. Mr. Reed revised the platform and made several changes in its wording, so that it may be considered as a personal declaration of principles held by him. He deserves more credit than McKinley for his handling of the financial question, he doesn't try to straddle it but comes out squarely against silver and in favor of gold.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of Democratic Clubs held here this week, it was decided to hold the next national convention of the association at St. Louis, on Sept. 30th next. The committee adopted a resolution thanking all who helped to make the Jeffersonian birthday pilgrimage to Monticello a success. After adjourning the committee called in a body at the White House, to pay their respects to President Cleveland.

Representative Livingstone, of Ga., succeeded in getting applause from both sides of the House in a few remarks he made, which he called explanatory of the increase from $2,800,000, which was the amount appropriated last year, to $11,000,000, which was carried by the Fortification appropriation bill passed this week. Said Mr. Livingston; "I congratulate the country that it is now conceded that McKinley will be the next republican nominee and that the A. P. A. will beat him. (This was loudly applauded by the McKinley republicans) It is also acknowledged that the Jeffersonian democracy will control the Chicago convention and give relief to the country. After March 4, next the country will be safe." This was applauded by all Proceeding Mr. Livingston said it was common sense to prepare for war, even when it wasn't anticipated. At this point Mr. Walsh of New York, interrupted to ask if Mr. Livingston knew that England had sent 45 rapid fire guns to Kingston, Canada, for the protection of the lakes. "It matters not," replied Mr. Livingston, "if she has sent 45,000 guns. We can, in the event of war, take Canada in three weeks, no matter how many guns or men she might send there." That brought the loudest applause of all.

Notwithstanding pressure to relax the strict enforcement of the emigration laws brought by agents of the steamship lines, Commissioner Stump of the Immigration Bureau says the letter of the law will be strictly enforced and that if it becomes necessary to relieve the overcrowded station in New York harbor the Italian immigrants will be put back upon the steamers which brought them over until their right to land is established. The steamship men knew the law when they brought those paupers over here.

The Old Game.

Some of Mr. Davis' friends charge that McKinley's agents spent $25,000 in Minnesota to beat the Senator out of the delegation. While the amont may be padded it is undeniable that the McKinley enthusiasm in some localites was "sweetened,"—Martin Co. Sentinal (Rep.)

The same reports come from all quarters. The manufacturers raised $250,000 to nominate McKinley and will spend millions to elect him. why? They expect to increase the Tariff, put up the prices of the necessaries of life and collect it from the howling Dervishes of the great West.—I. D.—In the Representative.

THE
New York World
Thrice-a-week Edition
18 PAGES A WEEK. 156 PAPERS A YEAR.

Is larger than any weekly or semi-weekly paper published and is the only important Democratic "weekly" published in New York City. Three times as large as the leading Republican weekly of New York City. It will be of especial advantage to you during the Presidential Campaign, as it is published every other day, except Sunday, and has all the freshness and timeliness of a daily. It combines all the news with a long list of interesting departments, unique features, cartoons and graphic illustrations, the latter being a specialty.

All these improvements have been made without any increase in the cost, which remain at one dollar per year.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and the BUFFALO GAZETTE together one year for $1.75

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.00.

A Gold Standard.

Editor Gazette: I think that free silver men deserve great credit for the fearless and earnest way with which they express their opinions. In the local press or where debating societies convene, they may always be found, arguing and trying to educate the ignorant or those who differ from them.

My object in writing is not to start any controversy on a question that seems to have been very thoroughly threshed out. But those of us who believe that free silver—its unlimited coinage at a ratio of 16 to 1—will be a measure ruinous to the commercial interests of the country and fraught with untold calamity to our industrial population ought to speak out in no uncertain tones.

You may be called a "gold bug" because you are not prepared to acquiesce in the prevailing craze but just as our free silver friends are untiring and energetic in propagating their idea, we who know that they are merely following a will-o'-the-wisp should be prepared to meet them at every point.

It has always seemed to me that what is known as the Gresham law is as indispensable as a proposition of Euclid or the axiom that two sides of a triangle are greater than the third. Study it carefully. "If coins of two metals, such as gold and silver, are allowed to circulate together in unlimited quantities at a fixed legal ratio which differs from the market ratio of the metals, the coin which is underrated disappears from circulation, and the coin which is overrated alone remains current. To illustrate: If I have a dollar in gold worth a hundred cents and a dollar in silver worth 52 cents according to the market value of silver does it not stand to reason that I shall spend my silver dollar and hoard the more valuable coin?

Many people fancy that the government calling fifty cents a dollar, makes it a dollar. They fancy that while the price of wheat and other products are regulated by well understood economic conditions, silver is worth whatever Congress decrees. Nothing however can be more certain than the fact that "when the fixed legal ratio between the coins has differed from the relative value of the metals, the coins of that metal which was underrated, invariably disappeared from circulation, and the coins of the metal which was overrated alone remained current; and as the market value of the metals changed; gold and silver alternately drove each other out of circulation, so that there was no augmentation of the currency, but one metal simply displaced the other."

The currency question is one that might be profitably settled by financial experts selected from all political parties because not one man in a thousand has the technical knowledge that is necessary in order to solve the many problems that arise in connection with it. At the same time, as one of the 999 financial amatures, I believe that there are certain general rules, capable of almost mathematical demonstration, which as a nation we cannot safely disregard.

While therefere some of us who do not believe in a depreciated currency may be considered behind the times by our Populist friends, we shall continue to maintain, in the language of our most forcible spokesman, that "Money is valuable only to the extent that it can be exchanged for other commodities, and it is scarcely necessary to suggest that a dollar worth fifty cents will not purchase as much as a dollar worth a hundred cents. To call a dime, a dollar would add nothing whatever to its intrinsic value or to its purchasing power."

Appeal to Reason.

Say mister! can you tell me what the bankers mean when they talk about "sound money?"

Yes. They mean gold money.

What do they want gold money for?

Because it is a very scarce money.

Why do they want "scarce" money?

Because it is dear money.

Why do they want "dear" money?

Because dear money will purchase more of your labor, and more of the products of your labor.

Will "dear" money pay any more debt than any other kind of money?

No. Debts are payable in dollars and the dollars will—if made from gold—make you work two days, where one day's work ought to pay the debt.

Then if I owe $100 and the bankers hold my obligation and can make me pay the debt in gold dollars—dear and scarce money—that I am compelled to give up $200 worth of my labor to pay the debt; is that so?

Yes that is exactly the fact. And that is just what "sound money" means to every laborer and to every person in debt.

Well let me think. The Republican party wants "sound money," and the Democratic party want "sound money., 'It must be the bankers run both parties. That's it exactly. You hit the nail on the head squarely.

Well, it it is for the interest of the bankers to have "sound money"—meanin gold, or scarce money—then it is my interest to have plenty of money, so I can get some of it for my labor, and be able to pay my debts, ain't it?

Yes. All money, wheather of gold, silver or paper is created through fiat of law, and the law is created by the people. However, if you deposit your ballot in the box controlled by the bankers they will count it for "sound money," scarce money, dear money, and your degradation and slavery.

Then I know enough to vote against the bankers.—Gamaliel, in the Representative.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks goodness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1896 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

A Maine village has a woman's club that does not discuss theosophy or bloomers but "meets around," and at every house it visits it sews buttons on the husband's shirts, darns up the socks and otherwise puts the family wear to rights. The Italian protectorate over Abyssinia dates from the treaty of 1889, in which Menelek, king of kings, and King Humbert, of Italy, agreed to certain things for mutual protection. Menelek contended that Italy didn't live up to the treaty, and hence the late unpleasantness. Prime Minister Rudini is inclined to deal fairly with the Abyssinians, and there is a lull in the proceedings. The question is: Shall Italy treat Absyssinia as a protectorate or a colony, or as a part of a colony?

Field Marshal Yamagata, of Japan, is seeing a good deal on his way to Moscow that will be of greatest interest to his people and to those he will meet at the old Russian capital. It is something of an experience to pass from one of the oldest nations on the globe through one of the newest and greatest republics to visit one of the most powerful of monarchies. The field marshal is being received in the United States with as much enthusiasm probably as he will receive in Russia.

It is recalled in London that the first of American girls to carry off the rich and glorious matrimonial prizes of the British nobility were the Misses Carroll, of Carrollton, Md., who appeared in London society in 1824 and took the town by storm. Their fresh beauty was such that they were speedily known as the "three graces," and each of them married high up in the aristocratic scale, one becoming the duchess of Leeds, another the marchioness of Wellesley, and the third Baroness Stafford.

The general idea of Siberia is that it is a cold, inhospitable country, occupied principally by Russian convicts and by banished political prisoners. Mr. Pangborn, president of the world's transportation commission of the Field Columbian museum in Chicago, has just returned from Asiatic Russia, and reports that he was never more surprised in any country and its people than he was with Siberia. He found a delightful country, something like eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania, not barren and cheerless, but productive, and in the summer warm and pleasant.

Glucinium is the name of a new metal which seems destined to become of great importance in the very near future. On account of its peculiar qualities it will be used especially for electrical purposes. As its atomic weight is 9.1 and its specific gravity 2.00, its attractive power is considerably greater than that of iron and its conductibility is equal to that of silver. Glucinium, therefore, is more capable of resistance than iron and a better conductor than copper; and, in addition to all that, it is lighter than aluminum and it costs much less. This adds another achievement of the century's intelligence.

The faculty of Yale university has knocked in the head Dr. William Lyon Phelps' course in modern novels, decreeing that this new study shall be abandoned at the close of the present college year. It appears that the professors of ancient English literature and of Greek and Latin have been playing to empty benches since Dr. Phelps inaugurated his specialty of up-to-date fiction. Homer and Plato, Virgil and Pliny, Chaucer and Spenser had no show at all when brought into competition with Robert Louis Stevenson, Rudyard Kipling, Tolstoi, Howells, Hall Caine and Marion Crawford.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Proceedings of the First Session.

Washington, April 17.—The resolution for an investigation of recent bond issues was taken up in the senate yesterday and Senator Hill defended Secretary Carlisle and his administration of the treasury against insinuations of irregularity. A favorable report was made on the bill for the reorganization of the army, increasing the force to 30,000 enlisted men. In the house the fight against the reelection of Gen. W. B. Franklin as a member of the board of managers of the national soldiers' home resulted in the defeat of those who opposed him.

Washington, April 18.—In the senate yesterday Senator Hill resumed his speech in opposition to the bond resolution and yielded for the introduction of a bill on Pacific railroads which caused a lively debate, during which Senator Allen (Neb.) charged Senator Gear (Ia.) with lying. Adjourned to the 20th. In the house the contested election case from the Sixteenth congressional district of Illinois resulted in favor of Mr. Rinaker, the republican contestant. A bill was introduced to increase the internal revenue tax on cigarettes from 50 cents per 1,000 under the present law to $50 per 1,000. A bill to pay war claims caused much discussion but no results.

Washington, April 20.—The senate was not in session on Saturday. In the house the general deficiency bill ($4,791,340), the last of the regular appropriation bills for this session, was reported. Several bills to donate condemned cannon to G. A. R. posts were passed and tributes were paid to the memory of the late Representative Cogswell, of Massachusetts.

Washington, April 21.—The senate spent most of the time yesterday talking about claims for $250,000 made by agents and attorneys of the Cherokee Indians of the Indian territory. The joint resolution for the appointment of Gen. Franklin, Representative Steele, Gen. Beale and Gen. Henderson as members of the board of managers of the National Soldiers' home was adopted. After passing a few private bills the house spent the remainder of the session in the consideration of the general deficiency bill—the last of the general appropriation bills. A bill was introduced to restrict the sale of drugged beer.

CUBANS MASSACRED.

Spaniards Shoot Them Down While Unarmed—Twelve Killed.

Key West, Fla., April 20.—In the suburbs of Havana on Thursday night one of the most cruel massacres of the war was perpetrated by the Spaniards. According to advices received here 12 unarmed Cubans were shot and 11 were wounded. The massacre occurred on Los Pinos farm on the outskirts of Havana. About 60 Cubans were holding a secret meeting on Thursday night in the farmhouse. A Spanish woman informed the authorities, who sent a detachment of troops to raid the place. The troops surrounded the house and ordered the Cubans to come out. As the unarmed men appeared the Spaniards fired, killing 12 outright and wounding 11. Fifteen were captured and the others escaped.

Spaniards say the Cubans were planning a rising in Havana, and allege the troops thought the men were armed. The next day Rev. Alberto Diaz, the Baptist missionary and American citizen, was arrested. The Spaniards say Diaz was privy to the meeting of Cubans, and also assert he acted as go-between for patriots in Havana and those in the field. Diaz has not been allowed to communicate with anyone since his arrest, and it is whispered that Weyler will order him tortured in an effort to extort a confession.

Rev. Diaz' friends implore the aid of clergymen of all denominations in the United States and hope that Americans will exhibit such activity as will compel the Spanish authorities to treat the prisoner with the consideration due to a man of his profession.

Slowly the truth about the defeat of the Spaniards at Le Chuzo is coming out. It is now alleged that Col. Deboo out of 1,500 men lost 1,000 killed and wounded. The losses in the columns of Gen. Echevarria and Col. Inclan are placed at 800 killed and wounded, making the total Spanish loss 1,800 in the battle. On Thursday three Spanish columns of 2,000 men each again crossed the trocha and attempted to dislodge Maceo. The insurgents gave battle and forced the Spaniards to retreat. It is said in Havana the Spanish loss in this affair was 1,200 killed and wounded.

Nashville, Tenn., April 20.—Every Baptist church in Nashville adopted resolutions petitioning President Cleveland to take immediate action looking to the release of A. J. Diaz, the Baptist missionary arrested in Cuba last Thursday. The resolutions were placed in the hands of Maj. John W. Thomas, who left at once for Washington to present them to the president and Secretary Olney.

Washington, April 21. — Information which has reached Minister Dupuy de Lome, of Spain, shows that the charge upon which Rev. A. J Diaz, the Baptist missionary, was arrested and incarcerated by the Spanish officials at Havana was that of being implicated in a contemplated uprising against the government on the outskirts of Havana. The prisoner will have a preliminary hearing to ascertain the truth of the offense with which he is charged.

SUITS CHAUNCEY.

Mr. Depew Says a Good Word for the President.

New York, April 20.—The Montauk club, of Brooklyn, Saturday night gave a dinner in honor of Chauncey M. Depew's birthday. Around the board were gathered many of the most distinguished citizens of Brooklyn. Mr. Depew, who was the guest of honor, was called upon for a speech at the close of the feast. The unique feature of his address was his reference to Grover Cleveland. Speaking of the president, he said:

"While I differ widely from President Cleveland on almost every part of his public policy while I think that his theories, so far as they have been practically carried out, have been disastrous, and, if wholly carried out, would have been fatal to our industries, nevertheless, in frankness and fairness, it is due to him to-day to say that the rout of the free-coinage of silver policy and the energizing of the national credit by the triumph of sound money, are more largely due to his throwing upon that side with magnificent courage and ability the whole strength and power of his great office and of his administration than to anything else.

"While we have had a period of distress which has brought much suffering to millions of homes, and while the cost has been more than that of a disastrous war, yet the suffering has not been in vain and the cost has not been lost if it shall have gained for us in education by discussion and by the experiences of our people the death of the absurdities of populism and the triumph of that sound money currency which shall keep this the great trading, business and commercial nation of the world."

Nine Fishermen Lost.

New Bedford, Mass., April 20.—Fishing schooner J. W. Campbell, of Gloucester, went down in a squall back of Long Island Friday night, and nine of the ablest sailors from that port lost their lives. Seven were saved. The vessel was bound to the Capes of Delaware after mackerel and all went well until Friday night, when, without a moment's warning, a squall struck the vessel and laid her aback. Of the crew of 16 men most of them were on deck. Some rushed for the stern and others took to the main rigging. Before the vessel righted she began to fill and sink. Those at the stern were drawn under by the suction, while those on the rigging were thrown so far away from the vessel that the undertow did not affect them. The others clung to a dory for 20 hours, when the tug Gladiator hove in sight and took them off.

National Congress of Religious Education.

Washington, April 18.—The first national congress of religious education, under the American society devoted to that cause, will be held in this city, beginning Monday evening next and continuing until Thursday afternoon. Associated with the officers of the society in the call for the congress is a committee representing seven of the leading denominations, including, besides prominent pastors, Justice Brewer, of the supreme court; Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, secretary of the navy; J. L. McCurry, ex-minister to Spain.

Held Up a Street Car.

Chicago, April 17. — Half a dozen thugs held up and robbed the conductor of an electric car on Chicago avenue in the midst of the evening's heaviest traffic. The motorman was beaten almost into insensibility, the car windows smashed and the conductor himself hurled over a dashboard. The passengers fled in terror.

Mayor's Vetoes Ignored.

Albany, N. Y., April 17.—The New York senate has passed the Greater New York bill over the mayoralty vetoes. The measure will be acted on by the house next week.

AN AID TO TRADE.

Seasonable Weather Brings Improvement in Business.

New York, April 18.—R. G. Dun & Co. in their weekly review of trade say:

"The sudden change from sleighing to midsummer heat has tested the prevalent idea that good weather only was needed to bring general improvement of business. Everywhere there has been more retail buying and in some branches better demand at wholesale and at the works has resulted, but not as yet in most lines. There is no abatement of the almost universal disposition to deal with unusual conservatism and not to anticipate future wants, and this has been especially conspicuous where combinations have been formed or prices advanced.

"Partly because of low prices, which were again the lowest ever known, the volume of business represented by clearing-house exchanges, 5.5 per cent. larger than last year, is 20.4 per cent. smaller than in April, 1893. Railroad earnings for April thus far show a gain of only 2.6 per cent. over last year. The stock market has grown stronger on stories about things done abroad, a few foreign purchases helping, though trusts weakened on the signing of an anti-trust law by Gov. Morton.

"Too many interested in iron ore and coke, steel billets, Bessemer pig and various forms of steel, it may be disappointing that the forming of combinations and fixing of prices have not started again the rush to buy ahead of needs, which made last year so memorable. But it is not easy to forget the lesson which the past year taught. Instead of increasing, purchases have been on the whole rather slackened, though a little better in plates at the east and in sheets at Chicago.

"The boot and shoe makers have put some quotations a shade lower since leather has fallen below the average a year ago, and hides at the lowest average since November, 1894, having declined three per cent. this week. The northern and northwestern demand is backward, though the south has bought freely. The silk association states that 40 per cent. of the machinery and hands in the country are idle, partly because of increasing Japanese competition. Several more woolen mills have shut down and some have reduced wages ten per cent., while many are working only half time, but recent advances by appraisers not only disclose heavy undervaluations in the past, but tend to check future imports. The demand for goods does not improve. Somewhat more demand for staple cottons has been aroused by bargain prices, but the closing of many mills for a time is urged as necessary.

"Wheat rose about five cents last week, met some reaction, but is a shade higher than a week ago. After remaining unchanged for many days, rumors either way having no effect, cotton rose a sixteenth on Thursday. Heavy commercial and mill stocks hinder most buyers, and possibilities of injury to the coming crop retard sellers at current prices.

"March imports were $3,912,455 smaller, and exports $12,366,107 larger than last year, and the excess of exports was $9,144,015.

"Failures for the past week have been 223 in the United States, against 241 last year and 36 in Canada, against 34 last year."

WAGES OF SIN.

An Eloping Couple and Two Children Are Drowned.

Hannibal, Mo., April 20.—For several weeks past Samuel Drew and family and Otto Oatman and family have been camped on the opposite side of the river, engaged in making willow baskets. Thursday night, while Oatman was in Quincy on business, Drew and Mrs. Oatman and her two children eloped and started down the river in a small flatboat. Friday the flatboat sank in the river at a point about 14 miles south of this city and all the party were drowned. The two children were a boy and a girl, aged seven and nine years, respectively. The boat sank in about ten feet of water.

PASSED AWAY.

Death of Arthur I. Boreman, West Virginia's First Governor.

Parkersburg, W. Va., April 20.—Arthur I. Boreman, first governor of West Virginia, afterwards United States senator and for eight years judge of the Fourth judicial circuit court, died Sunday morning at 9:30 after two weeks' illness. A general breaking down of his constitution, brought on by overwork and old age, was the cause of his death. He took an active part in the formation of the state of West Virginia and has been one of its leading citizens ever since. He was 73 years of age. His death leaves but two of the state's ex-governors living.

Seven Miners Killed.

Niehart, Mont., April 20.—An explosion occurred in the Broadwater mine at 11:15 Saturday morning, by which seven men lost their lives and six others were seriously hurt. The accident took place in the magazine used for thawing powder. Frank Doran was looking after the powder and had just commenced loading the magazine when the explosion followed. It is supposed that his candle must have ignited some powder. He was found 20 feet from the magazine in another drift, and must have seen the danger and tried to escape. The men had just finished eating their midnight lunch and were on their way back to work. Thirty of them had to pass this magazine, and it exploded as about half were past. Those in the center are the dead and seriously wounded.

Royalty Gathers at Nice.

Nice, April 20.—The Dowager Empress Frederick of Germany has arrived here for a visit to Queen Victoria, her mother. The dowager czarina of Russia, the duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha and the emperor and empress of Germany arrived Sunday evening to be present at the wedding of the hereditary Prince Ernest of Hohenlohe-Langenburg and Princess Alexandra, the third daughter of the duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha (the duke of Edinburgh) and granddaughter of Queen Victoria. The arrival of the royal personages was greeted with a firing of artillery salutes, the ringing of bells and the cheering of the people.

Celebrated Austrian Sculptor Dead.

Vienna, April 17.—Victor Oscar Tilgner, the celebrated Austrian sculptor, died here Thursday from a stroke of apoplexy. His death occurred only a few days before the time fixed for the unveiling of his masterpiece, a monument to Mozart. He was in his 52d year.

London, April 17.—The Standard announces this morning that ex-King Milan of Servia will start in May for a tour of the United States, which may extend to San Francisco and around the world.

Two Killed and Two Hurt.

Peoria, Ill., April 18.—By the explosion of a converter at the works of the American Glucose company Friday morning at 2:15 o'clock, John Hoey and William Burns were instantly killed. John Wilson, Mat Conolly and John Dooley were badly injured. The fourth story of the works, in which the converter was located, was wrecked.

Seek to Stop Dueling.

Berlin, April 18. — The center party have given notice that in the reichstag to-day they will ask the government what steps have been taken to curb the dueling nuisance.

MYSTERIES OF THE LOUVRE.

Vague Stories of Imperial Crime Reach the Outside World.

Everyone who has "done" the Louvre will remember the low-pitched and somewhat gloomy halls in which are stored the treasures of Egypt. Beneath these lie yet more darkly mysterious vaults, inaccessible to the public, though approached by a wide and handsome staircase, such as would lead one to imagine that it communicated with apartments of some importance. Yet one finds at the bottom nothing but broad passages disposed in the form of a cross, and without any sign whatever of door or window.

A recent examination, however, of the solid walls gives experts reason to believe that the masonry is more recent than the rest of the structure in this, the oldest portion of the fortress palace. M. Vaugneux, a well-known critic, believes that many of the bodies of victims killed in the revolution of 1830 were immured here, and that the government was afraid to reveal the facts when the remains of their comrades were collected beneath the Colonne de Juillet.

On the other hand, M. Blondel, the architect of the building, and M. Normand, the secretary of the Society for Protecting Parisian Monuments, hold the opinion that these subterranean passages led to the oubliettes into which Catherine de Medicis cast those who were unfortunate enough to incur her hate or fear. A judicious exploration would clear up the matter, and settle, too, several doubtful points as to the foundations of Lescot's original citadel. Unfortunately, the annual grant does not provide for any such archaeological research, and it would be necessary to appeal for funds to the generosity of the chamber.—London Chronicle.

HAD BEGUN TO PROSPER.

A Pathetically Humorous Story Told of a Cumberland Mountain Farmer.

A writer in the Detroit Free Press tells a pathetically humorous story of a friend of his, Jack Negly, a Cumberland farmer. The writer had lent Jack a few dollars, with which to buy a pair of steers, and had received from him many visits of apology; for Jack was an honest man, and did not enjoy being in debt.

He was a renter, and at least every other season he was occupying a different farm. By my advice, he had moved the year before into an entirely new field, a dozen miles from his usual haunts, and I had not seen him for several months. When I did see him, at last, it was by accident as business called me into his neighborhood. As I rode past his place he hailed me from the corn-field and came out to the fence.

"Hello," I exclaimed. "Is this your farm?"

"Yes, and I jist come over to tell you, colonel, that I'll be ready to pay part of that claim uv your'n afore long."

"You must be doing well?"

"I think I'm doing fust-rate, and I'm powerful obleeged to you, colonel, fer headin' me this way."

"I'm always glad to help, if I can."

"I knowed that, colonel, and that's why I come away over here so fer frum home. Hit's kinder strange to me, but ez long ez I'm doin' ez well ez I am I'm a-goin' to stand hit."

"Are you making any money?"

Jim's face brightened perceptibly.

"No, I ain't, colonel," he replied, hopefully; "but I'm losin' it slower'n I ever done in my life afore."

It struck me as rather odd at first, but upon reflection I concluded that Jim might have reason for his hopefulness.

EPITAPH ON A WATCHMAKER.

Curious Inscription Seen on a Tombstone in an English Graveyard.

The following curious inscription to the memory of George Routleigh, a watchmaker by trade, occurs in the churchyard at Lydford, Devon: "Here lies, in horizontal position, the outside case of George Rutleigh, whose abiding in that line was an honor to his profession. Integrity was his mainspring, and prudence the regulator of all the actions of his life. Humane, generous and liberal, his hand never stopped till he had relieved distress. Sincerely regular were his motions. He never went wrong except when set agoing by people who did not know his key. Even then he was easily set right again. He had the art of disposing of his time so well that his hours glided in one continual round of pleasure and delight till an unlucky minute put an end to his existence. He departed this life, November, 1802, wound up in hope of being taken in hand by his Maker and of being thoroughly cleaned, repaired and set agoing in the world to come."

Snakes for Iceland.

Iceland has from time immemorial enjoyed a strange immunity from reptiles. This seems to have grated upon the nerves of two German naturalists, who, emulated by the same spirit which induced the Chicago contractor to send in an offer to the town council of the Italian city of Pisa to straighten the leaning tower which is the principal attraction of the place, are now devoting their energies to introducing reptiles into Iceland. They have already experimented with frogs, both Danish and Prussian, and as the pioneer service of these humble handmaids of the biologist has proved successful, a cargo of able-bodied snakes is about to be dumped on the island, unless King Christian sees fit to resist this altogether novel form of German invasion.

Spring Medicine

Your blood in Spring is almost certain to be full of impurities—the accumulation of the winter months. Bad ventilation of sleeping rooms, impure air in dwellings, factories and shops, over-eating, heavy, improper foods, failure of the kidneys and liver properly to do extra work thus thrust upon them, are the prime causes of this condition. It is of the utmost importance that you

Purify Your Blood

Now, as when warmer weather comes and the tonic effect of cold bracing air is gone, your weak, thin, impure blood will not furnish necessary strength. That tired feeling, loss of appetite, will open the way for serious disease, ruined health, or breaking out of humors and impurities. To make pure, rich, red blood Hood's Sarsaparilla stands unequalled. Thousands testify to its merits. Millions take it as their Spring Medicine. Get Hood's, because

A SHINING EXAMPLE of what may be accomplished by never varying devotion to a single purpose is seen in the history of the McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., Chicago. For 65 years they have simply been building grain and grass-cutting machinery, and while there are probably forty manufacturers in this line, it is safe to say that the McCormick Company builds one-third of all the binders, reapers and mowers used throughout the entire world.

For your Protection we positively state that this remedy does not contain mercury or any other injurious drug. Nasal Catarrh is a local disease and is the result of colds and sudden climatic changes.

TELL ME SO.

If you love me, tell me so,
Wait not till the summer glow
Fades in autumn's changeful light,
Amber clouds and purple night;
Wait not till the winter hours
Heap with snowdrifts all the flowers,
Till the tide of life runs low—
If you love me, tell me so.

If you love me, tell me so,
While the river's dreamy flow
Holds the love-enchanted hours,
Steeped in music, crowned with flowers;
Ere the summer's vibrant days
Vanish in the opal haze;
Ere is hushed the music flow—
If you love me, tell me so.

If you love me, tell me so,
Let me hear the sweet words low!
Let me now, while life is fair,
Feel your kisses on my hair;
While in womanhood's first bloom,
Ere shall come dark days of gloom,
In the first fresh dawning glow—
If you love me, tell me so.

A SUBURBAN MYSTERY.

The purpose of this story is to clear up a suburban mystery and provide the last chapter which is to set at rest all speculation.

For more than two years the residents of Morton's Grove have been guessing at the cause of the tracks, and if they have not guessed correctly it is no discredit to them.

It was two years ago this last February, and on a certain evening toward the end of the month that a moist snow of big, lazy flakes began to fall upon the suburb of Morton's Grove.

There was hardly a breath of wind, and the snow sifted itself evenly and clung wherever it touched.

There were but few trees in Morton's Grove. In the christening of the suburb the real estate Napoleon had anticipated that period when all the shrubs and switches would have their growth. Therefore the snow did not lose itself in tangled boughs, but settled peacefully on broad levels of lawn and steep pitches of roof. Except where a wall or fence stood bolt upright there was an unbroken mantle of white. Even every picket wore a plume and every fence-board a ruff.

The snowfall eased at 11 o'clock, and by that time Morton's Grove was almost hushed for the night. The big wooden houses stood spaciously apart and were darker and more fantastic than ever against the white. One by one the windows winked themselves to darkness, and several hundred nice people slept, not realizing that a mystery was upon them.

If reports be true, the second Miss Eaton was the first to see the footprints.

She arose very early in the morning to reassure herself that the geraniums were far enough removed from the window and still not too near the base-burner. She walked to the window and looked across the snow at the dull, sealed houses across the way and the wiry bushes frozen in the front yard.

It was the gray of the dawn, and the shapes outside were not distinct, but when her eyes fell to the foreground she saw enough. First she stared in puzzled surprise, and then she moaned and ran to the stove to warm herself, still gazing at the window.

No wonder, indeed. This is what she had seen:

Huge footprints, marking the course of a man, undoubtedly, who had come from the street to the very window at which she had been standing. That was not the worst of it. The footprints led from the street to the window, but there were no footprints from the window to the street.

What did that mean?

It meant that the man had come to the window but had not gone away. He had come through the window into the house! He was in the house at that moment!

There was a pit-a-pat of slippered feet on the stairway, and the second Miss Eaton gave a gasp and disconnected account of her discovery to the first Miss Eaton, who was still in bed.

The first Miss Eaton couldn't understand what was meant, but she became convulsed with fright, merely through sympathy.

Christine, the Swedish girl employed as a man-of-all-work for the maiden ladies, heard the noise and came to the rescue. She valorously clad herself and went through the house from end to end, lifting every coverlet behind which man or boy might have concealed himself.

There was no man in the house and there was no sign that any man had been there during the night, although Miss Eaton discovered, to her horror, that the snow on the window sill had been disturbed as if by a man crawling in at the window.

"What large tracks," shivered the first Miss Eaton as she surveyed the hideous trail across the front yard. "Oh!"

The tracks were rather large for a fact. A foot that measures 13 inches from heel to toe goes above any known average and is supposed to belong only in burlesque literature.

But these were real tracks.

The Eaton sisters, or the "Eaton girls" as they were still termed, out of compliment, stood together at the window after breakfast. They saw Mr. Ballard Johnson, who lived in the first house to the east, come along the sidewalk.

Occasionally he stopped and shook his head, and then he walked on with his eyes fixed on the snow-covered ground. The Eaton girls rushed to the door and the first Miss Eaton shouted: "Oh, Mr. Johnson, have you seen those tracks, too?"

He turned, apparently somewhat confused, and replied: "Have I? Why, those tracks lead up to my front window. I thought at first some one had got into the house. Did you ever see a man with feet as big as these tracks?"

"No, but they're real tracks. What I can't understand is how the man ever got away again after walking up to our window. My, I'm so scared."

"Well, I'm going to follow these tracks and see where they go to."

The first Miss Eaton closed the door, and Mr. Johnson continued to follow the trail, leaning forward like an alert Indian scout.

Mr. Johnson had not proceeded far before he met Mr. Morton, who discovered the suburb before the first house was built.

"Are you looking at these tracks?" inquired Morton.

"Yes. Have you noticed them?"

"They beat anything I ever saw. I traced them up the street from my house a little distance, and all at once they stopped. Come on and I'll show you."

They followed the big footprints around into Baldwin street and thence over a block to the north, and then suddenly the trail ended at a place where the snow had been kicked about as if men had scuffled there.

"This is where it started," said Johnson. "Now, let's see how far we can follow it the other way."

They went back along Baldwin street to where the tracks led over to Morton's house, the same as they had at the Eaton and Johnson places, but strange to say, the trail divided, one set of tracks leading over to Morton's house, the other continuing south on Baldwin street.

At Chester avenue the trail turned toward the Eaton house and continued to the east, although there was a side trail leading over to the Eaton house and another to Mr. Johnson's front window.

The two men followed the main line. From Chester avenue it turned into Miller street and came to an abrupt end near the Methodist church. There were other tracks of ordinary size to be seen, but at the point where the trail ended the man with the giant feet had evidently gone up into the air. The snow was badly kicked about. Perhaps there had been another struggle.

"According to the size of his feet," observed Mr. Morton, thoughtfully, "that man should have been 14 feet high. What do you think of it?"

"I simply give it up," said Mr. Johnson. "I never in all my life ran across anything like it. These are real tracks. You can see the marks of the nails and the print of the heel. But they begin nowhere and end nowhere. Here's a single trail and suddenly it splits into two trails going in different directions. One set of tracks goes right up to a window, and yet there's nothing to show that the man turned around and came back. He didn't go in the window, though. Now what the—"

"Don't ask me," said Mr. Morton.

At the station that morning the men talked of the strange tracks and not one could explain them except by bringing in a supernatural agent. And they never did find out.

And now for the solution of this story of mystery.

Bertrand Thompson, one of the livelier spirits of the quiet suburb, had been to town on the evening of the snowfall. At a small free-and-easy club which he often visited he had become acquainted with a well-known minstrel performer. The minstrel gave Thompson a pair of huge shoes such as are often worn in burlesque pieces. He had promised them to Thompson long before and on this evening he brought them to the club.

Thompson reached Morton's Grove on the last night train. He started for home, the shoes wrapped up under his arm.

The snowfall had ceased and it was a clear night. He had taken a few drinks and was in an imaginative and creative state of mind. He saw the unmarked snow and it occurred to him that it might surprise people in the morning if they saw tracks 18 inches long.

He leaned against a fence and changed his shoes after some difficulty and then marched homeward.

When he came in front of Morton's house a brilliant idea came to him. He walked over to the front window of the house and then with extreme caution backed his way out to the street again, taking care to put the big shoes back in the footprints already made.

Then he took up his homeward journey again, but he thought of the Eaton girls, so he favored them with a special set of footprints, and afterward did as much for Mr. Johnson, whom he disliked very much.

When he reached the Methodist church corner he realized that he might be tracked to his home, so he changed shoes again, with a great deal of hopping around in the snow to keep from losing his balance while he was standing on one foot.

When he learned how successful his experiment had been he kept quiet, and allowed the tale of the monster footprints to become a suburban classic.—Chicago Record.

MURDERED FOR FUN.

Crimes That Mark Whitechapel, Bethnal Green and Shoreditch.

Whitechapel, Bethnal Green and Shoreditch are the three London parishes which have offered the most difficult problems to city medical officers of health and department of police. Whitechapel has become celebrated because it was the scene of a series of extraordinary crimes, made possible by its narrow and ill-lighted courts and alleys. Bethnal Green and Shorelitch adjoin Whitechapel, and have many of the gruesome peculiarities of that district, besides some of their own. Shoreditch, for instance, has given appropriate birth and breeding to more prize fighters than has any other part of England. Bethnal Green furnishes a larger proportion of drunkenness than does any other part of London of equal size. These two parishes form a region of dense ignorance which has as yet been scarcely thinned by the operation of London's enlightened school laws. Their poverty is pitiful. Their morals are rarely visible to the onlookers; details of their habitual immoralities would fill a volume.

Their population is still largely English—the English of the London slum. Some outsiders have crept in. There are Irish and Germans, and a comparatively small number of Jews (who swarm in Whitechapel) have penetrated into the twisted streets and narrow alleys, but they are not regarded with favor. Frequently, if they be orthodox, their beards are pulled; and if the spirit of religious reform has robbed their faces of convenient hair, the insular toughs, juvenile and adult, sometimes resort to missiles. One Jew was murdered in Shoreditch, most impersonally, almost merrily. A brick was the weapon, and the man who therewith it proclaimed in court that he had never seen his victim before the day on which he killed him. He hurled death at him merely because he was a Jew. He had not intended to kill him; he had wanted pleasantly to break his head.—Edward Marshall, in Century.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

A National Park.

Congressman McCleary has concluded to push his bill providing for the establisment of a national park at Pipestone. He introduced this bill early in the session and then found that there was in an Indian appropriation bill of 1894 a provision that unless the attorney-general began suit in the supreme court within a year to determine the status of this land, its title should be deemed to pass to the Indians. The attorney-general never began the suit because he could not initiate such an action in the supreme court. Congressman McCleary has consulted a number of lawyers on the subject and has reached the conclusion that because the condition imposed was an impossible one the failure to comply with it has amounted to nothing, and the status of the lands is not different from what it was before the bill referred to was passed.

He will therefore endeavor to have congress make a park out of the square mile which includes the famous Pipestone quarries. The rights of the Indians to quarry the stone will not be affected in the least by the passage of such a bill.

St. Paul Lady Chosen.

Miss Caroline Boeckman, of St. Paul, has been chosen to unveil the cast of the Ole Bull statue at the concert to be held May 17 at the Exposition building, at Minneapolis. There has been some talk of late that the cast would not be finished in time, owing to the illness of Jacob Fjelde, the sculptor, but there is no foundation for this, as the cast is practically finished now. The committee that acted on the selection of a young lady to perform the unveiling consisted of J. W. Arctander, Charles Kittleson, T. E. Nilson, Eric Oulle and C. F. Struck.

A Tough Young One.

Fred Johnson, a 19-year old lad, pleaded guilty to burglary in the second degree and was sentenced by Judge Russell, of Minneapolis, to the reformatory. Johnson said that he had gone to the house occupied by Emma Lind and Lizzie Smith at 1021 Second street S. and tried to get in. They wouldn't let him in so he kicked in the door. The presence of a lot of silverware which was found in his possession, however, did not sustain his position in the matter and he concluded to plead guilty.

First Place.

First place in the Minnesota Intercollegiate Oratorical Association has at last been won by the University of Minnesota. Not only that, but second place, too.

The 16th annual contest of the association occurred at the First Congregational church, Minneapolis, under the auspices of the university association. Adolph O. Eliason and Warren W. Pendergast, both of the university, took first and second places, respectively, and A. H. Tasker, of Hamline, was third.

An Old Man.

C. A. Combs, a colored man who was born in 1784, died at his home on Sibley street, St, Paul, at the unusual age of 112 years. This announcement will astonish many, but the friends of the decease claim that the record is complete. He first saw the light in Kentucky, where he was born of slave parents, and in his manhood became the body servant of Zachary Taylor, with whom he served all through the Mexican war. He was for 60 years a slave.

Convention of School Boards.

The first covention of the school boards of the state met at Northfield, the 14th. The following officers were elected: President, Dr. W. A. Hunt, Northfield; vice president, George S. Spaulding, Alexandria; secretary, Luth Jaeger, Minneapolis; treasurer, J. W. Todd, Montevideo. Delegates to the national convention: W. G. Crosby, Duluth; G. W. Buswell, Blue Earth City; H. Benedixeu, Springfield.

News in Brief.

The Cannon Valley G. A. R. encampment will be held at Northfield, June 23, 24 and 25. Posts from 17 towns and cities will be represented, the association being composed of old soldiers residing in the counties of Le Sueur, Waseca, Blue Earth, Rice and a part of Steele, Goodhue and Dakota.

A. H. Ranney, of Minneapolis, was kicked in the head by a horse, and a portion of the skull broken and pressed down on the brain.

The Southern Minnesota Dental Association held a five days' session at Mankato.

The city engineer at St. Cloud, with a crew, worked on the ice all night, and in the morning the entire body began moving, and went out so rapidly that nine men, including the engineer, had a narrow escape from drowning before they could reach shore. The ice and logs piled up 30 feet high, going over the dam, presented a grand sight. All went over without damage to the dam or bridges.

The ice in Lake Pepin has practically disappeared and the navigation season for 1896 is now practically open.

An attempt was made to burn the home of the Kotchutz family of father, mother and eight children, at Fountain City. The front door and steps had been saturated with oil and considerable paper burned. A timely rain put out the blaze.

Mary A. Kidder was commissioned postmaster at Thomson, and Walter W. Wright at Swan River.

The farmers around Owatonna have organized and will build an elevator.

Three little boys were found locked up in a box car at St. Paul. They were playing hide and seek at Chippewa Falls, Wis., about a freight, when, before they knew it, they were locked in the car and pulled out of town. They were nearly 24 hours without anything to eat.

A committee of Methodists met at Hennepin Avenue church, Minneapolis, and after full consideration decided to make no fight for the general conference of 1900. The reason advanced was that there was no hall in the city satisfactory to the committee.

The agricultural committee of the board of state university regents has located the second of the new experimental stations at Grand Rapids, Itasca county.

John Hechtman, has been appointed postmaster at Osseo.

At a meeting of State Board of Health it was decided to do all possible in the matter of pushing the bacteriological laboratory of the state.

The large boarding house at Merritt, owned by Thomas Asbjornson, of Minneapolis, and occupied by Iver Asbjornson, burned to the ground. John Hedelberg, lost his life in the flames.

TWO TEMPTING RECEIPTS.

A Confection of Figs and a Celebrated Rule for Making Chocolate.

Take dry figs. The choicest thin-skinned ones are not necessary for this purpose. Wash and cut them carefully to be sure no imperfections are left. Pour boiling water on them and let them simmer until the skins are quitet tender. Then remove the figs and add sugar sufficiently to make a rich sirup of the water in which they were boiled, and lemon or grape juice to give color and acidity. Pour this on the figs and set them away to cool.

When William M. Evarts occupied a seat in the United States senate and a fine house, with his family, in Washington, the chocolate at their afternoon receptions became famous. The receipt for it was as follows: One quart milk, one cake chocolate, essence of vanilla. Grate the chocolate very fine, mix with a teaspoonful of hot water and rub smooth. Allow the milk to come to a boil, put in the chocolate and boil about five minutes, or until of desired thickness. After removing it from the fire season with the essence of vanilla according to taste. Boil in a farina kettle. The chocolate should then be poured into dainty cups while still in the kitchen and served quickly steaming hot.

Fill the cups two-thirds full with the delicious brown mixture and add thick, beaten cream. This addition constitutes the making of the famous Vienna chocolate introduced at the centennial. If only one square of chocolate is required, draw a line across the two squares at the end dividing them in half. With a sharp knife shave off the chocolate until you come to the line, which saves waste of time and material.—Chicago News.

How she Spelled It.

Every one knows how to spell "hard water" with three letters, but probably some readers would be puzzled to spell "yesterday" with six. A Cincinnati girl could tell them how, according to the Enquirer. She does not go to school, but is taught by her mother at home. The other night her father was hearing her spell. One word after another was successfully disposed of, and then he said: "Now, Annie, I am going to give you a hard one. If you spell it correctly I'll bring you some candy. How do you spell 'yesterday?'" It was a hard one. Annie thought of the candy, and just then her eye caught the calendar hanging against the wall. Then she answered, with a smile of triumph: "F-r-i, yester, d-a-y, day, yesterday."—Atlanta Constitution.

Chicken Salad Dressing.

To make the dressing, first chill the plate, eggs and oil. Put the yolks of two eggs in a soup plate; add one-half teaspoonful of salt and stir with a silver fork until the yolks are well beaten and mixed; add the oil, drop by drop, being careful to always stir in the same direction, adding a drop of vinegar whenever the mixture begins to look oily. Add only acid enough to keep the dressing from separating. Two eggs will take a pint of oil. Season with salt and red pepper, and lemon juice, if necessary. A perfect mayonaise should not be too acid, as that destroys the flavor of the oil.—St. Louis Republic.

A Dish to Try.

A remnant of beefsteak that is sound and rare-cooked may be made into a luncheon or breakfast dish by mincing, mixing with an equal quantity of bread crumbs, and seasoning with salt and pepper and either onion juice or chopped parsley. Beat a fresh egg, mix with the bread and meat to hold them together, and make into a roll. Wrap in wax paper to prevent drying, and cook about 20 minutes in a hot oven. This dish is improved by a sauce of tomatoes, which can be easily and quickly made if one has a cupful of canned tomatoes in the larder. — Detroit Free Press.

CONSTANTLY IN A TREMOR.

A New York Street Has a Chronic Case of the Shivers.

A section of Twenty-sixth street, New York, daily enjoys sensations similar to those caused by a constant succession of earthquaake shocks. Everything in the vicinity trembles as if suffering from a mild attack of the ague. It is really, says the New York Journal, perpetual motion. There is a clubhouse in this section, right in the center of the trembling district. A recent visitor, one who had not been there before, noticed that objects on the mantel or elsewhere always moved slightly, and that he himself felt a strange vibration.

The friend with whom he was dining laughed at his uneasiness. "It's always that way here," he said. "It's only a little shake, perhaps the hundredth part of an inch, but it's perpetual. Some day I fear the building will shake to pieces all at once, just like the 'wonderful one-horse shay.' The cause? Oh, it's that electric light plant opposite. Engines and dynamos running all the time. Enough steam power is exerted to blow the block to Jericho; enough electricity generated to light a square mile brilliantly every night. All the houses around here shake. I remember when this block was a most exclusive residential neighborhood. Now at least half of it—the half that shakes most—is given over to small shops and cheap theatrical boarding-houses. There's one pleasanter aspect, however, to this vibration."

Then the clubman performed a pleasing experiment. He requested the caterer to bring him a glass of milk, some rum, ice and sugar. These he blended, after which he placed the glass upon the window sill. "In three minutes," said the clubman, "it will be a perfect milk shake."

It was no exaggeration. The vibration, though annoying, at least supplied one want.

Gypsine.

Sanitarians say that the use of kalsomine and paper on the walls promotes disease, owing to the fact that the glue and paste used, being animal matter, decay and breed germs. To have the home strictly healthful and clean, one should use a tinting or coloring for the wall that does not contain anything of an animal nature. Permanent wall finishes are now made to overcome this objection, and at the same time, by their lasting cement qualities, to overcome the further objection to kalsomine, that it has to be washed off. The wall finishes harden with age, and can be recoated thirty or forty times, each successive coat cementing itself to the others and making the plaster wall so much stronger and better. One of the best known and most used of the permanent finishes is Gypsine, called by the manufacturers, "The Everlasting, Healthful Finish," which adequately and truthfully describe it.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. GYPSINE.

Q. What is Gypsine?
A. Gypsine is a permanent and everlasting wall finish, entirely different from all Kalsomine preparations.
Q. How is it more durable than Kalsomines?
A. It is made from a Gypsum Rock cement base and grows hard on the wall with age.
Q. How about Kalsomines?
A. They are but temporary, softening after a short time and have to be washed and scraped off, in fact spoil any wall to which they are applied, as they rub and scale.
Q. Will not Gypsine rub and scale off?
A. No, when originally applied to a clean wall it is everlasting, and can be recoated to change tints or when necessary
Q. Is Gypsine injurious to the health?
A. Unlike all poisonous wall paper held on with vegetable paste or whiting and glue kalsomine, it is recommended by the leading physicians and sanitarians everywhere.
Q. Can anything but plain wall tinting be done with Gypsine?
A. Any kind of frescoing or relief decorating can be done with it.
Q. Where can I purchase it?
A. From your local paint dealer.
Q. How can I learn more about Gypsine?
A. Ask your dealer or write for copy of GYPSINE ADVOCATE and sample circular.

DELANO DIARY

—The Eagle Printing Company is one of the newest firms in town.

—E. S. Babb's little boy has been sick with diphtheria this week and the residence quarantined.

—Rev. J. R. Davies will preach an anniversary sermon for the I. O. O. F. on Sunday morning at the Presbyterian church.

—The M. E. Church is undergoing some repairs on the interior. The seats have been rearranged and make things look quite different from what people have been accustomed to, for so long a time.

—A crew of men are working on the R. R. bridge across the Watertown road making much needed repairs. It is to be hoped they will leave out about two rows of old piling making a better crossing.

—Conzet's baled hay came in handy to some of our villagers who were not looking for so long a wet spell, and such muddy roads that it would be next to impossible for farmers to haul their surplus to town.

—Damon and Pythias at the City Hall Monday evening, under the auspices of the Lodge of Knights of Pythias of Delano. was well rendered, to a fair sized audience. by, Sanford Dodge and the Lyceum.

—Those who are posted in gardening and finances are making considerable fun of the learned argument in favor of a canning establishment recently advanced by the Eagle. They claim the old bird is away off her nest.

—Andrew Hanseman reports the building business rushing. He has undertaken a contract to erect a two story brick venered farm residence for Charley Wandersee near Ruckold's bridge: Also a house in the village for Mr. Wyandok.

—George P. Shaffer is accumulating quite an outfit of burglars clothing a couple of years ago a burglar left at his residence a hat and a pair of shoes; last Monday morning at his store, a coat, a neck scarf and pair of arctic over shoes, a leather belt and a brown coat, with a bunch of keys and other useful implements. George had just as soon the owners would keep their clothing.

—In Minneapolis one day this week we understand a policeman arrested eight of the University students, one a Miss, and that they were fined $2, each for riding on the side walk with bicycles, and that simply around a small mud hole. In Delano the wheels go at a break neck speed from one end to another of our sidewalks, while pedestrians must be prepared to dodge out of the way. Wheels should take the streets same as other vehicles. Our village authorities will, doubtless, attend to this matter at their first meeting.

—On Sunday night a burglar was found by nighewatchman Goodrick, in Shaffers store. He had crawled in at a back window, and wore a handkerchief over the lower part of his face. Charles Mills was summoned from the livery barn near by and went to the front of the store while Goodrick bursted in the back door and tried to capture the intruder. Goodrick got behind the counter and desk to go toward the front of the store, the burglar fired at him, the bullet lodging in the water tank, probably saving a murder. The nightwatch fired back, putting a bullet into the new coffee mill of the proprietor of the store. The man fired again without effect further than to break a showcase, twice. As he was running out the door left open, Goodrich fired again putting a bullet in the wall beside the door. It was after the electeic lights were extinguished and a dim light burned in the front of the store while the man carried a candle in his hand. A coat, a belt, apair of overshoes and a neck handkerchief were found under a box in the rear of the building where they had been left. In the pockets of the coat were found 29 house keyes tied together with a round shoe string; a new hone, gimblet, screwdriver, wooden fishing bob, a box of caps, and a piece of candle, some pieces of rope. The coat was a brown woolen one, with a small patch on each shoulder. The new articles found are claimed to have been taken from John Coolen's hardware store. John Brandser when going home about ten in the eyening saw some one in Coolens store but did not wait to find out who it was.

Duane Chapel was arrested on suspicion and brought before Justice Walters for examination. He refused counsel and plead not guilty. The County Attorney came over Thursday and assisted in the examination. Chapel was bound over to appear at the June term of court and sent to Hennepin County jail to await the time. He denied all knoledge of the coat found which has a patch on each shoulder. as if made by carrying a hod, or some such thing. Several persons testified to having seen him wear it, or one patched like it, while several of his nearest neighbors clamed they never saw such coat, as for the overshoes they were ladies overshoes and appear much two small for him, and the leather belt found was an ordinary strap, hard to identify.

—Probst has started a new hedge fence; the first in town. It looks nice.

—We received by this mornings mail a copy of the Annual Report of the Railroad and Warehouse commission. It is handy for refference.

—This is Arbor Day and the exercises at the Public schools were varied from the usual order. Trees were planted out and the day remembered in a fiting manner.

—The Epworth League sociable at the City Hall last night was well attended and a social time had: The gross receipts of the evening amounted to over ten dollars.

—Miss Tillie Eppel has resigned her position here as assistant to the postmaster and returned to her home in Delano. She was very efficient in her duties and the people are sorry to lose her services. —Howard Lake Herald.

—Several of our citizens visited the entertainment by the A F & A M and the Eastern Star at Buffalo last night. They pronounce it a big time. A special train from Minneapolis and yisitors from all over the country. Dick Dudley was given the Third Degree. C. H. Halgren and Dr. E. E. Shrader of Watertown went over with the Delanoites.

The Christian Endeavor Conventien at Rockford was well attended last week.

Rev. J. L. Farber went to Rockford Saturday and held Quarterly conference for Elder Chaffee, and Sunday preached to the C. E. Society meeting.

The Howard Lake Editor, in refusing to accept our nomination of him as Clerk of Court, says: "Saylor would would not under any circumstances accept the nomination." He halts! He stutters! Evidence that he might.

Read up on the new election law, and dont forget to attend the primary for your party in your own voting precinct. When it is held, your vote may be the turning yote between a gold standard and bimetallism, so far as your own party goes.

It may appear strange that Buffalo saloon keepers in preference to the Great Northern Rail Road bonds, were sought by Mr. Howard, at Buffalo. But then it may be thought that saloons can exert more "influence" than the G. N. with the G. J., in June.

We are told daily that we must not have any thing else but a gold Standard or the country will be bankrupt. Did you ever hear of so many bankrupt people before as you do now? And ain't we running on the gold standard plan?

Among Our Exchanges.

Editor Saterlee has yeilded up the editorial pen of the Atwater Republican to L. E. Covell, formerly principal of the Atwater schools. Mr. Saterlee will establish a new paper at Red Lake Falls.—Dassel Anchor.

If there are to be two Democratic tickets in the field Democratic voters will find it more profitable to retire from politics for a time than to waste their time campaigning with certain defeat ahead of them. But, the two ticket story is a fake.—St. Cloud Times.

The union manufacturers of Pennsylvania are sending out hundreds of thousands of dollars to boom McKinley for president. The money that the millionaires will spend to buy McKinley the nomination will amount to a fabulous sum.—The Broad Axe.

R. J. Bell of the Rosseau County Times says: "The Populists of this county are certainly making effort to perfect a complete organization of their party. Every town in the county will have its local league and a plan of education has been adopted which will no doubt prove effective next fall. From present appearance, the Republicans won't get a smell in this county. As for the Democrats, they ain't in it a little bit.—Moorhead News.

At the earnest solicitation of friends we now read The Representative, the official journal of the State Farmers Alliance and an advocate of Peoples Party principles, published at Minneapolis of which Ignatius Donneley is editor-in-chief and F. N. Stacy assistant editor. Being so strongly fortified with irrefutable argument on any and all topics of the day, our friends will perhaps(?) soon hear us voicing the doctrines of Populism.—Clearwater News.

The name of President Cleveland is being persistently mentioned in connection with the Democratic nomination this year. It would be a losing venture to nominate him. The west would give him a very slim support, for two reasons. To begin with, we don't believe any man can be elected for the third time, except under the most exceptional circumstances, and secondly, President Cleveland's financial policy is not popular except in the money centers of the country.—Litchfield Independent.

"Judge Crisp," said Secretary Smith in his latest debate with the ex-Speaker, "has sought to create the impression that I am opposed to the use of both gold and silver. I am in favor of that system which will give us the largest use of both." That is the position of „gold-bugs" everewhere. They want all the silver, as well as gold, that will circulate. Under what the free-silverites miscall "bimetallism" there never was anything but monometallism, in this or any other country.—Courier Journal.

Entered as Second-Class Mail Matter, at the Post Office in Delano, Minn

RECENT issues of the Minneapolis Tribune have contained expressions, in its editorial columns, that would be more appropriate to an account of criminal court proceedings than a statesman like discussion of the tariff question. We don't know whether they have coralled a cigarette fiend or not; but it reads like it.

THE Louisville Courier Journal, has become quite a sensational sheet. Recently it gave whole pages to Holme's confession, now it is giving Scott Jackson great notoriety. The paper, we are glad to see, however, is not yet entirely depraved, as it makes quite an apology for giving its readers such "news". There has been to much such news lately. It deserves to be called "olds" and laid by for something more elevating to the general public.

CONGRESSMAN KEIFER of St Paul is quoted by the Pioneer Press as having said in answer to the question as to which question as a statesman he regarded as most important: "The tariff question" is most important (a high tariff is necessary to create revenue and open avenues of employment but farther he claims the tariff question and the money question are inseperable. Again he says: "America cannot accept silver as a metal of equal value with gold for commercial uses except as one nation in an international conference agreeing upon it." We would like for the Congressman to explain what sense there is in building a high Protective tariff wall around the country to keep foreign goods from coming here, and then making an INTERNATIONAL currency so that other nations will take our money. Does Mr. Keifer think that foreigners should be more favored in their schemes of investing their money in our mills, mines, lands, breweries, railroads and of carrying their dividends and interest home? Does he think it a good policy for people to resolve to live within their inclosure, and wholy upon their own products and then to allow outsiders to come in and buy up all their necessaries of life and luxuries, and sell them at a profit, and put the money in their pockets and walk off? What other reason can the Congressman give for advocating a High Protective tariff and an International Standard of money, than that he wants English and other capitalists to send their wealth here to control our industries and have their returns in a money they can cart home without expense to them. Possibly when he gets through drawing his salary he proposes to seek a foreign home and thinks it might be convenient to carry it along without the trouble and expense of making an exchange. If we are to have free international currency let us have free innernational trade also.

Wright County Jail.

Quite a discussion has been going on as to whether or not Wright County should build a jail of its own. Both sides have advanced strong arguments. Things have come to such a pitch that, possibly, the main issue in electing County Commissioners will be as to whether or not the candidates favor the erection of a building for jail purposes.

Wright County is a large county; thickly settled, with a variety of people, among them her full quota of the criminal classes. She always has had, and probably always will have, people to care for, to board, to look after. The care of prisoners could as well be had in Wright as in Hennepin County.

The erection of a building might cause a decrease in the large sums of money deposited in the several banks of the county; might deprive those institutions of the privilege of hiring thousands of dollars at their own price and letting it out at big rates of interest to the taxpaying property owner to pay his taxes with; thus forming an "endless chain" with wonderful drawing powers on peoples' pocket books. But then it would, if properly managed, give some of our citizens an opportunity to earn a few dollars by working or furnishing material for its construction.

After it is completed it can, as in other counties serve as a residence for the Sherriff, or his deputy, who has charge of the prisoners, and who boards them, patroniging our own people in the purchase of supplies. The butcher, miller, merchant, the doctor lawyer, minister, editor, the washerwoman, even, would be abled to do their share toward earning a few pennies now being pocketed by our sister county, and that should rightly be left within our county's borders. Wright County farmers should raise the provisions on which its own citizens are fed. Officials elected by the voters of the county for the purpose, should have charge of those under arrest for wrong doing. Then could our County Commissioners better determine the legality and justness of some of the claims sent in. And the prisoners would be nearer home where they could more conveniently look up their cases.

The United States government is making appropriations for building fine houses in counties where there use would not be so great as that of a jail in Buffalo, compared to their respective costs. And the very fellows that cry out against a jail are hurrahing for Uncle Sam's wisdom and liberality in distributing the governments surplus tariff receipts among the people.

A respectable building, properly located, and neatly kept would be an attraction to our County Seat, a convenience to officials, and to prisoners and their friends. All things considered we believe a jail at home would cost the county no more than the present system and would be much better all round. Wright County is big enough, old enough, rich enough, and wicked enough to have a jail of its own.

Lambs from the Minnesota University Experiment Station.

(From the Northwestern Agriculturist.)

Eighty lambs were shipped from our Experiment Station a short time since. They were about eleven and a-half months old when shipped and they averaged in weight 127½ pounds when they left the station for Chicago. The original intention was to ship 100-the whole number fed, but owing to the size of the lambs, the car would not hold so many. These lambs came from the southern part of the state. They were put under experiment at the Holiday season and were marketed about the middle of March or a little later. The grain foods fed were corn, barley and oats. And in each instance a moderate amount of oil-cake was fed. The gains were most excellent, from eleven to twelve pounds per month on the average, and there was not much difference in the gains. Each pound of gain was made for less than three cents per pound. The lambs brought $4.65 per hundred in Chicago. To what better use could we put our cheap corn, barley, oats and oil-cake? The full particulars will be brought out in bulletin form within a few weeks under the direction of Professor Shaw. --Nortewestern Agriculturist.

We will send the Northwestern Agriculturist free for the balance of 1896 to all who pay now the regular subscription to the GAZETTE up to December 31, 1896.

Singing Tournament

The 17th of May, there will be given in Minneapolis, 3 o'cl. in the afternoon, a festival of rather an extraordinary kind. It is called "The International Singing Tournament", and is giyen for the benefit of "The Ole Bull Monument Fund". Ten Singing Societies of St. Paul and Minneapolis, 2 German, "The "Forhsinn" of Minneapolis, and "Concordia" of St. Paul, 4 Swedish The "Orpheus" and "Young Svea" 'Vega' 'Apollo' of St. Paul, and 4 Norwegian "The Norsemen" and "Grieg" of Minneapolis, "The Norsemen" and "Norways Echo" of St Paul, will eahc sing a song of their respectiye nationalities contesting for a 1st and 2nd prize, a silk banner and an American silk flag to be awarded by 5 judges to the best Singing Society and for a popular prize, a drinking horn of silver, valued at $150, to be voted to the best singing society by the audience. Besides this interesting contest between the singing societies, 2 soloes will be given by the Swedish Nightingale Mrs Agnes Staberg Hall, Danz's celebrated Orchestra will give 3 numbers, Hon. Ignatus Donnelly will deliver an oration, and the 9 feet high Ole Bull Monument will be exhibited on the stage. This being the only ocasion the puplic will have to see the great work of Mr. Fjelde, the sculptor, nntil the unveiling of the statue next year.

It is expected that many parties in this locality will make use of this opportunity for a cheap trip 1½ fare to the cities and at the same time get an opportunity to be present at one of the most interesting Music-Festivals, that ever has been given in the state. Orders by mail for reserved seats a 50 cents to the immense Auditorium which seats nearly 6000 people, addressed to Fr. Waage, Clerk of the Ole Bull Committee, Room 913 N. Y. Life Bbg., Minneapolis, will receive prompt attention. Orders from the country received prior to the opening of the sale on May 12th, will be filled before the city sale opens.

Horses for Sale.

Several good, well broken, gentle horses for sale, for cash or time, (with improved note with small interest) to suit the purchaser. Have also as good a (heavy) brood mare as can be found in the country. For further information apply at this office. 25 tf.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 24, 1896.

The people are sometimes quicker to see the undesirability of proposed legislation than the Congressmen are, and in election years, if at no other time, the expressed disapprobation of the people is quickly deferred to by the men who control Congress. A case in point is the Pacific Railroads Bill which has been reported to both House and Senate. Now, although this bill involves an enormous amount of money, and that it is much more favorable to C. P. Huntington and his ring of capitalists than to the government, as was so ably shown by the protest written by Senator Morgan, from a sick bed, and presented to the Senate as a minority report, it was proposed to railroad it through Congress during the last days of the session. This programme had the support of Speaker Reed and of leading men in the Senate, and was being whooped up by Huntington and his lobby. The bill has been so generally condemned by the people that a halt has been called in the program, and it is now said that the bill will not be acted upon at this session of Congress, if it ever is in its present shape.

Senator Cockrell succeeded in his humane effort to have the Senate amend the Indian appropriation bill so that it provides that two years shall be allowed the sectarian (Catholic) Indian Schools to prepare to turn their scholars over to government schools, if they do not wish to teach them at their own expense; but there is no certainty that the A. P. A., which has shown its control of the House several times during the session, will agree to it.

President Cleveland assured the delegates to the National Arbitration Conference which met in Washington this week, who called on him, that he was thoroughly in sympathy with their aim to bring about a system of international arbitration of all disputes not affecting the soverignty of nations.

The unseating of Representative Cobb, of Ala. in favor of Goodwynn, the Populist who contested the seat, by the republican majority of the House, was a part of the deal through which it is expected to carry Alabama this year by a republican-populist combine. This was so patpable that a few republican members refused to vote for it, but not enough to defeat it. The danger of putting young men with more egotism than parliamentary knowledge in the Speaker's chair was exemplified during the debate in this case. Speaker Reed desiring to consult with some of his boomers called representative Barrett, of Mass., to the chair and retired to his private room to figure on his chances for the Presidential nomination. Mr. Barrett got tangled up, and was about to get the House into the biggest sort of a row by attempting to shut off Mr. Cobb, who had been allowed one hour to speak in his own behalf. Fortunately somebody sent for Mr. Reed and he returned to the chair and straightened out matters. He also tried to let Mr. Barrett down easy by saying that he had misunderstood the agreement under which the House was acting, but Representative Bailey, of Texas, promptly called him down by shouting: "Ignorance, not misunderstanding." This man hopes to be Speaker of the next house. If Reed becomes President and the House remains republican—a formidable "if."

Senator Smith, of N. J., has probably been scratched off Andy Carnegie's list of friends if he was ever on it. The reason is an amendment which Mr. Smith wishes to have attached to the Naval appropriation bill. This amendment instructs the Secretary of the Navy to make no contracts for armor plate for the battle ships provided for in that bill unless the price be at least as low as $300 a ton of 2,000 pounds. Carnegie is now making Uncle Sam pay $500 a ton for armor plate, but has promised to reduce the price, to prevent the government undertaking to make its own armor Senator Smith wants to make sure that the reduction is what it should be, and yet there is no injustice in the figures he names as that is the price at which Carnegie and his associates have taken a Russian contract. It remains to be seen whether Carnegie's friends in Congress can head off that Smith amendment.

There has been some excitement in Congress this week on account of a statement made by Representative Sulzer, of N. Y. to the effect that Walter Dygert, a young American recently imprisoned by the Spanish authorities, had been secretly executed. Mr. Sulzer's information came from Cubans in New York who got it direct from their friends on the island Secretary Olney thinks there is a mastake about it, as he has the promises of the Spanish authorities that young Dygert would be given his liberty and allowed to leave Cuba If investigation proves that execution story to be true Spain would better look out for serious trouble.

I. O. O. F. ANNIVERSARY.

Sermon by J. R. Davies.

On Sunday, April 26, Delano Lodge No 80, I. O. O. F. met at their hall and invested themselves with regalia and with banner flying marched to the Presbyterian church, where with a fair sized audience, they listened to an eloquent sermon by their brother, Reverend J. R. Davies, of Brooklyn Center, who had been invited to preach to them upon the occasion of the 77th anniversary of the order in America. Below we giye a synopsis of the sermon:

"Whatsoever He sayeth unto you, do it." St. John II, 5.

Few recorded incidents in the life of Christ contain so many lessons as the one before us. These lessons touch the marriage relation, home life and those pleasures in which we may safely engage. But for this occasion the text contains a few suggestions.

1. There is something for each to do. The responsibilities of life are not confined to one person or to one class. The appliances of modern civilization increases our opportunities and, therefore, our responsibilities.

a. This is the age of work. All departments of life, business, society and politics demand work. There is no success without it. A man is judged by his doing and not by the accident of birth. In this 19th century hive there is no place for drones. A boy might as well enter school and expect his diploma after seven years of sleep as that a man should expect to succeed in this age without work.

b. Deeds are immortal. They live after the doer has passed away. Some say there is no immortality but obscrvation refutes such a statement. Emerson says, "Every man who pushes a fore-plane is debtor to the age and the man that produced the fore-plane. Every sailor that crosses the ocean borrows his chart from Columbus." We are debtors to the past for implements and machines. We, our Delano, to the axe of the pioneer. Deeds are as lasting as time.

c. We say this is true of great deeds, but we are not the doers of great deeds but of small deeds. But it is a mistake to speak of small things. There are none. All things—all deeds are related. Life's deeds form a chain. Whether this chain is strong or weak is no small concern. So it occurs that we liye in influence. Solon and Washington are not dead but they truly live in the jurisprudence and freedom of men. Thomas Wildey, who 77 years ago established Odd Fellowship in the U. S. lives today—in the life of that society. So in influence shall we all live after our bodies have mouldered to dust.

d. Self sacrifice immortalizes. It was sacrifice that endeared Florence Nightingale to the world. That which makes Jonathan prominent in such history is not his friendship for David, only, but the cost of it. It cost him his kingdom. It is self sacrifice that endears Jesus Christ to the millions. Our work as a society is of that sort. Hence our usefulness.

2. In the work of life we need guidance. The text suggests Christ as our guide. I present Him today not for Theological reasons or because of His morality, though either of these gives Him the right to command. I present Him because He is the first Grand Master Odd Fellow. His work so proclaims Him. And the influence of His work is not only the almshouse and hospital but fraternal societies as well. Therefore whatsoever He sayeth unto you in precept or example do it.

3. Reasons for todays meeting.

1. To honor the dead or to celebrate our anniversary. In either case we can do it best by living the principles of our order.

2. We came to learn some lessons for ourselves. Among these:

a. Lodge is a means not an end. Initiation, payment of dues and attendance upon meetings do not make a good Odd Fellow. The Lodge is a guide to activities. We enter it to do better our life work.

b. There is a purpose in each life. Seek for it and when you have found it perform it.

c. Remember that deeds are immortal. What you do you do for all time. Hence do good. Let yours be deeds of righeousness: so that you need not fear the future.

d. As you enter into lifes work take the best guide. You would in traveling, or house building. Why not in life? Christ is that guide.

Conclusion. Be worthy of remembrance. To be so you must be an Odd Fellow indeed. Act in your own sphere. Do good.

"Honor and shame from no conditions rise;
Act well your part—there all the honor lies."

ROCKFORD NEWS.

Chapin Farnham went to Annandale last Sunday and had Drs. Moore, of Minneapolis, and Ridgway, of Annandale, perform an operation on his leg, which was broken about a year ago and had never properly united.

J. S. Lillie and family moved to the city last Saturday.

The wind storm of last Saturday done considerable damage North of town. John Sleight's and Lee Conklin's wind mills were destroyed. John Elliot's House, George Conklin's barn and Adolph Hohl's granary were all damaged.

Miss Tollefson, of Marshall, Minn., is visiting with her sister, Mrs. Geo. Hatch.

Lee Warner has been on the sick list for the last week.

Mr. Parker, agent of The Warder, Bushnell and Glessner Co., was in town, Monday, and contracted with Geo. Irving to handle the champion mowers and binders this season.

D. D. Ames started, Monday, selling King's self copying inks. He left the post office in charge of Miss Blanch Marsh.

INDEPENDENCE.

Farmers are about through with their seeding, will all finish up by the last of the week any way.

Our country roads are in very bad condition. We need more good roads conventions.

Wood Cain, of Mich., is calling on old friends in our town.

W. W. Mills is still going on crutches.

The weather has been rather unfavorable for making garden; not much done at it yet.

The woods are full of woodticks and politicians. We think the tick will come out on top for he seems to have the right of way.

The Sing given at the M. E. church Armstrong last Sunday evening and Monday evening also, by Mrs. Alice Bailey and Miss Alice Tavern was well worthy of patronage, the church was about full both evenings.

While your correspondent was in Minneapolis last Saturday attending assessors meeting he found the city full of bicycles and candidates for office. We could hardly see the town for the running gears of these two Domesticated animals. The assessors meeting was largely attended and there was quite an interest manifested in regard to taking this year's assessment. Everybody seems to be kicking on high taxes; and some are crying vote for high protection and that will help the farmer out. When I hear a western farmer talking that way I make up my mind that the balance wheel in his head causes too much friction.

While our meeting was in session the Court House chime of bells favored us with a number of familiar pieces, and I would say it caused me to put on the swell and metropolitan airs to think we, Hennepin County, had a $5,000, 000 Court House, and a chime of bells, you see it leaves a legacy to our great grand children. Inside of the new Court House is very nice, but it reminds me of an overgrown elephant with two pairs of legs under it insufficient for the body it has to carry.

Your correspondent also visited George N. Morgan, Post, No. 4, G. A. R. on Friday evening. I think it is the largest post in the state. It has a membership of 350 or more. There I met a number of my comrades in arms. All the posts in the city are mustering new recruits at every meeting; getting ready for the National Encampment, at St. Paul, next Sept.

Maple Plain and vicinity will observe Memorial day in the usual way. Stephen B. Howard will deliver the oration on that day. Mr. Howard is an all wool republican a yard wide but is for free silver 16 to 1; come out and hear him on memorial day; do not expect he will talk politics, but he will talk good; and by the way the woods are full of free silver Rerublicans, and democrats, and more are falling into line every day. They have cartooned their bodies with war paint, and have sworn allegiance to stand by the money of the constitution, and throttle by the throat that iniquitous city of Sodom and Gomoro, (New York) and if necessary dethrown the banking jew, and convert Wall Street into an asylum for the poor. The common people of this country are not anarchists as some would like to make it appear, but are loyal and true to the flag of our country and the free institutions established by the blood of the Revolution and the principles of Thomas Jefferson and his followers, but what they want is equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

THE New York World

Thrice-a-week Edition

18 PAGES A WEEK. 156 PAPERS A YEAR.

Is larger than any weekly or semi-weekly paper published and is the only important Democratic "weekly" published in New York City. Three times as large as the leading Republican weekly of New York City. It will be of especial advantage to you during the Presidential Campaign, as it is published every other day, except Sunday, and has all the freshness and timeliness of a daily. It combines all the news with a long list of interesting departments, unique features, cartoons and graphic illustrations, the latter being a specialty.

All these improvements have been made without any increase in the cost, which remain at one dollar per year.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and the BUFFALO GAZETTE together one year for $1.75

A YOUNG woman says in the Atchison (Kan.) Globe that she "should think there would be as much hugging in teaching a girl to ride a bicycle as in teaching a girl to skate or to waltz." No, dear, the fact that girls learn so quickly disproves that theory.

THE south is developing some novelties in politics. One of the Taylor brothers fiddled himself into the governorship of Tennessee, and now Tyre Zork, in seeking a nomination for congress in North Carolina, is riding around the district on the back of a bull.

TROUBLE has been prevalent for some time in the Transvaal, in Matabeleland, in Abyssinia and in the Soudan. And now advices come of difficulties in Bechuanaland and in the Congo Free State. There seems to be an African in every woodpile in the Dark continent.

CHURCHES in North Carolina are taking concerted action on the subject of lynching, hundreds of pastors delivering discourses recently against such an overthrow of law. This movement should be extended throughout the entire country where lynchings occur.

A GENTLEMAN in Rochester, N. Y., reiterates the old suggestion that the typewriting machine be called a typer and the operator a typist. The objection to this is that the typewriter girls would refuse to be called typists. They prefer to be known as secretaries or amanuenses.

THE dispatches say that 15,000 Italians will soon leave Naples for the United States. If this sort of thing keeps on it will soon be in order for King Humbert to move his headquarters to this country, call the roll, and reorganize his little nation somewhere on the North American continent.

THE southwestern states are agitating the capital punishment for train-wrecking or robbery. If there is a man who ought not to live on this planet it is the man who jeopardizes the lives of innocent men, women and children for the purpose of gain. THE decision of the Chinese government to enter the postal union is more significant than would appear at first glance. FREDERICK ST. GEORGE DE LATOUR BOOTH-TUCKER is the full name of the new commander of the American wing of the Salvation Army, and he has begun proceedings in New York to secure citizenship in the United States. IT is generally conceded in Europe, since the recent Olympic games, that American athletes compare favorably with any of the heroes of whom Pindar sings as victors. It is a little unfair to assume so much in the absence of those gentlemen and their inability to assert themselves as against the living, but there is no reason why American athletes should not be better than they Certainly they devote time enough to the expansion of muscle.

THE Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Boston, which is to visit England this summer, has invited the prince of Wales to dine with the organization at King's Hall, Holland restaurant, on the 9th of July. E., etc., Captain General and Colonel the Honourable Artillery Company." His royal highness makes no pretensions to being a literary man, but he is certainly a man of letters—and a great many, at that—in fact, a regular abecedarian.

HOW FAST does electricity travel is a question frequently asked, but is seldom answered to the satisfaction of the querulous. Wheatstone says that the speed of electricity from point to point along a proper conductor is practically instantaneous. Various attempts have been made to ascertain the exact number of miles which the current will travel in a given length of time. According to the most reliable estimates made its speed is not less than 114,000 miles per second. The writer adds: "Such speed the mind cannot contemplate without staggering." A live wire staggers one in a hurry.

ALL the world will regret the death in Hungary of that practical philanthropist, Baron de Hirsch, whose immense wealth and great abilities were generously employed to rescue the oppressed subjects of a tyrannical government and place them beyond its power. Perhaps no man has labored on a grander scale for poverty-stricken and down-trodden humanity, and, fortunately, success had blessed his splendid efforts before he passed away. Many a grateful heart will mourn his sudden end, and many an earnest prayer will be offered up for this benefactor of mankind by those whom he released from bondage.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Proceedings of the First Session.

Washington, April 24.—The Indian appropriation bill carrying, with amendments, about $9,100,000, was passed by the senate yesterday and the sundry civil appropriation bill was discussed. At a caucus of republican senators it was the unanimous opinion that final adjournment ought to be possible by May 18. In the house the entire time was spent on the general pension bill. A bill to admit Oklahoma to statehood was favorably reported.

Washington, April 25.—The senate gave the time yesterday to the sundry civil appropriation bill without completing it. A bill was introduced establishing new regulations for forest reservations. In the house nearly the entire session was consumed in discussing the pension bill. A bill was passed authorizing the free entry into the United States of articles or animals exported for exhibition in other countries.

Washington, April 27.—The sundry civil appropriation bill was completed and passed in the senate on Saturday. It carries $37,000,000. Most of the time in the house was occupied with the general pension bill. Eulogies were delivered on the late Representative William H. Crain, of Texas.

Washington, April 28.—The naval appropriation bill was before the senate throughout the entire session yesterday. The house completed the pension bill and passed it to a third reading and engrossment. The only amendment adopted was one providing that the pension office should construe the pension laws liberally in the interest of the claimant.

FROM WASHINGTON.

In the United States there were 238 business failures in the seven days ended on the 24th, against 223 the week previous and 230 in the corresponding period of 1895.

At the leading clearing houses in the United States the exchanges during the week ended on the 24th aggregated $1,612,358,300, against $784,338,764 the previous week. The increase, compared with the corresponding week in 1895, was 1.7.

Advices say that the national treasury deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, will be, approximately, $25,000,000.

On the 27th the visible supply of grain in the United States was: Wheat, 58,030,000 bushels; corn, 15,156,000 bushels; oats, 9,737,000 bushels; rye, 1,510,000 bushels; barley, 1,229,000 bushels.

THE EAST.

C. G. Finney, who was governor of Ohio from 1866 to 1868, died in San Buena Ventura, Cal.

From using alkali water ex-Congressman Lamison, of Ohio, died at Topeka, Kan.

At Scott, La., Martin Bernaud, a merchant, was murdered and robbed of $7,000. The autopsy showed that there were 52 stiletto wounds about his neck and breast.

Illinois Fifteenth district republicans renominated B. F. Marsh for congress by acclamation.

Flames that started in a dancehouse at Cripple Creek, Col., swept away 250 buildings and entailed a loss of upward of $1,000,000, with only $250,000 insurance. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

Fire destroyed a shipping stable at Calloway, O., belonging to Ed Courtwright, and 42 horses, some of them quite valuable, were burned to death.

Indian territory republicans met at Muskogee and selected delegates to the national convention instructed for McKinley.

At Rockville, Ind., Peter Egbert, a carpenter, 22 years old, without apparent cause or provocation shot and instantly killed Mrs. Herman Haschke and two children and Sheriff W. M. Mull and Deputy Sheriff William Sweem and then killed himself.

Victor and William Hillis were taken from the jail at McMinville, Tenn., by a mob and hanged for the murder of Carroll Martin in 1894.

By a cyclone which passed over Clay county, Kan., nine persons were killed outright, three were fatally and 17 more or less injured, and great destruction of property was wrought.

Frank Dailey and James Bivard, two young farmers, were drowned near Fort Wayne, Ind., while fishing.

The Ohio Seventy-second general assembly adjourned sine die.

Near Sanborn, N. D., a cyclone wrecked houses and barns and did other damage, but no lives were lost.

Large elevators at Manley, Plymouth and Rock Falls, in Iowa, were moved from their foundations by a tornado and outbuildings were overturned and a number of bridges damaged.

Near Tipton, Mich., Eugene Camburn, a farmer, was shot and fatally wounded by Harry Luce, who then shot himself dead. Luce had been paying attentions to Camburn's daughter against the father's wishes.

The death of Mrs. Clerihan, aged 101, occurred at her home in Jacksonville, Ill.

GRANT'S BIRTHDAY.

The Anniversary Appropriately Observed in Various Places.

A Notable Celebration at Galena, Ill.—Longstreet, Grant's Former Foe, Pays a Tribute—Eminent Men Gather in Philadelphia.

Galena, Ill., April 28.—Business was generally suspended here Monday and the city was in holiday garb, the occasion being the observance of the anniversary of the birth of Gen. Grant. Hundreds of visitors were present from Illinois and many from Iowa. There was a civic parade, after which a reunion of the survivors of Grant's old regiment, the Twelfth Illinois volunteers. The chief feature of the programme was the mass meeting in the afternoon in Turner hall, at which, after patriotic selections by the orchestra and audience, ex-Congressman John

GEN. ULYSSES S. GRANT.

C. Black, now United States attorney for the Northern district of Illinois, delivered an oration.

Tribute from a Former Foe.

Boston, April 28.—Gen. Longstreet, of Georgia, Grant's great antagonist, is the guest of the Middlesex club and on Monday night was the principal speaker at its annual Grant banquet.

Gen. Longstreet, upon rising to respond to the toast, was received with long-continued cheers, the audience standing and rapturously greeting him, and even during the first few sentences it was impossible for the general to be heard consecutively, owing to the interruption of applause. He said, among other things:

"Of all of the union commanders he was the great leader who accurately surveyed the great field of war, the elements of strength, and points of error, and considered the vast means so necessary to solve the problem.

"He stood alone as the man for the time. When it was ended the war with him was over. His heavy blows were changed to pleasant salutations. Incapable of malice, his generous heart offered all that his enemy could ask as terms for surrender, with abundance of provisions for the hungry soldiers and transportation to their distant homes.

"If he could have been in Chicago in May of last year and witnessed the unveiling of a monument over the dead confederate prisoners of war and could have been with us at the dedication of the national park at Chickamauga in September last, to witness the assembling of Gov. Morton, Gov. McKinley, Gen. Alger, Gen. Grosvenor, Gen. Bates, Gen. Gordon, and multitudes of those of the blue and the gray in cordial, fraternal greetings, he could have known that his prophecy of peace was not a delusive hope, but a happy fruition, mirrored in the expressions of all his countrymen."

Philadelphia, April 28.—Gen Grant's memory was honored with speech, story and good fellowship at the Union League Monday night. Many prominent men in military, naval, official and civil life were present. Col. Fred Grant was the guest of honor. Those responding to toasts were Gen. Bragg, Mayor Warwick, Hon. Robert S. Cousins, of Iowa; Hon. J. L. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania; Hon. Andrew D. White, of New York; Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton, of Princeton; Gen. C. H. Grosvenor, of Ohio; Hon. Charles A. Boutelle, of Maine, and Senator M. C. Butler, of South Carolina.

FISTS AND INKSTANDS.

They Figure Prominently in a Dispute Between Congressmen.

Washington, April 24.—A desperate and sensational encounter took place just before 12 o'clock Thursday in the house naval committee-room between Representative Hall (dem., Mo.) and Representative and Senator-elect Money (dem., Miss.). Representative Money had his head badly gashed above the right temple. Representative Hall is unhurt save a a bad bruise on his neck. The weapons were fists and heavy cut-glass inkstands.

The fight was over the Wilson bill for reorganizing the personnel of the naval engineer corps. Representative Hall said the statements made by the line officers of the navy against the bill were false and without foundation. Representative Money took offense at this, and asked if that assertion applied to all who took the same view as the line officers.

Representative Hall's reply was unsatisfactory, and Representative Money called him a "d— liar."

STREWN WITH FLOWERS.

Graves of Confederate Dead Are Decorated in the South.

Jackson, Miss., April 27.—Decoration day was celebrated here Sunday. The procession and crowd were the largest ever seen here on a similar occasion. Several old federal soldiers joined in the ceremonies, and graves of northern as well as southern soldiers were covered with flowers. Capt. W. A. Montgomery, of Edwards, was the orator of the day.

Lake City, Fla., April 27.—The usual programme for confederate Memorial day here was carried out Sunday afternoon. Music was furnished by the Cadet band. The cadets of the state college, public school children, veterans of both armies, town officers, fire department and citizens joined in the procession, and the attendance was large. The floral decorations were pretty and appropriate. A salute of three rounds was fired over the graves at the conclusion of the exercises by the cadets of the college.

BOURGEOIS IS OUT.

France Once More in the Throes of a Cabinet Crisis.

Paris, April 24.—The Bourgeois cabinet has resigned. The resignation was announced by the premier immediately upon the reconvening of the chamber of deputies Thursday, and at the conclusion of the announcement M. Bourgeois and his colleagues withdrew.

Bourgeois, in announcing the resignation of the ministry, read the statement contesting the right of the senate to overthrow a ministry or to be the sole interpreter of the constitution, but he added, in view of the improbability of securing proper military reliefs for Madagascar, the cabinet was compelled to resign.

The premier was frequently interrupted with cries from the extreme left of "Down with the senate!" and when the ministers filed out of the house there was loud applause from the right and center, to which the left replied with loud cries of "Turn out the senate!" "Down with the senate!" A scene of prolonged tumult followed.

London, April 24.—The Daily News publishes a dispatch from its Paris correspondent, who contends that there is no escape from a deadlock, except a dissolution of the chambers or President Faure's resignation as a means to secure a speedy revision of an unworkable constitution. The president, it is added, will be in a tight place if he has the weakness to go with society and the senate. The ministers are mutually pledged not to enter any cabinet unless it is distinctly radical.

Paris, April 25.—President Faure Friday consulted with MM. Loubet, Peytral, Brisson and Poincare in regard to the formation of a new ministry. The radicals advocate the premiership of M. Brisson, now president of the chamber of deputies. The opportunists demand a ministry under the premiership of M. Constans and the dissolution of the chamber of deputies.

The Paris newspapers are unanimous in expressing the opinion that Thursday's vote in the chamber of deputies on the question of adjourning the sitting and upon the motion offered by M. Henri Ricard reaffirming the chamber's right of preponderance in the representation of the principle of universal suffrage has made the constitutional conflict still more acute. The moderate organs expect that the chamber will be dissolved.

The Gaulois declares that President Faure is determined to uphold the constitution despite the rancor of the socialists. The radical newspapers declare that revision of the constitution is inevitable, and the socialists demand the convening of the national assembly. The conservatives predict a crisis in the presidency of the republic.

London, April 25.—The Morning Post's Paris correspondent hints at the beginning of a revolutionary era. The Paris correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that the crisis is the most acute of any that has prevailed since 1877.

Paris, April 27.—M. Sarrien, minister of the interior in the retiring Bourgeois cabinet, who had been summoned by President Faure to form a ministry, has finally informed President Faure that he finds himself unable to form a conciliation cabinet.

QUAY IN THE FIELD.

Pennsylvania Republicans Launch the Boom of a Favorite Son.

Harrisburg, Pa., April 24.—The republican state convention was called to order in the opera house at 10:30 o'clock by Frank Willing Leach, of Philadelphia, chairman of the executive committee of the state committee.

Ex-State Treasurer H. K. Boyer, of Philadelphia, was the temporary chairman, and Gen. Amos H. Mylen, of Lancaster, was selected to preside permanently.

Following are the main points of the platform:

"The time has come when the state which has so long and faithfully led the republican column may justly and properly submit its own preference for the republican nomination for the presidency. In the presentation of Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay, the republicans not alone of Pennsylvania, but of the entire union, will recognize one of their foremost leaders—wise in counsel and brilliant and able in action, at once the type of the American citizen, scholar, a soldier and statesman.

"First of all national issues stands protection and first among its advocates have been the republicans of Pennsylvania. We believe in protection as a right to all American industries, but as a special favor to none.

"We demand the restoration of that wise policy of reciprocity which was framed by James G. Blaine and adopted by the wise and beneficent administration of Benjamin Harrison, to the great benefit of the commerce of the country, and which has been abandoned by the present democratic administration.

"Faithful to its record, believing the people are entitled to the use of the best money and anxious to restore and preserve the industrial and commercial prosperity of the union, the republican party favors international bimetallism until that can be established upon a secure basis, opposes the coinage of silver, except upon government account, and demands the maintenance of the existing gold standard of value."

NINE PERISH.

Great Loss of Life by a Cyclone in Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., April 27.—A cyclone passed over Clay county Saturday at midnight. Nine persons were killed and 50 injured. The cyclone wrought great destruction of property and a great deal of live stock was killed. The dead are Frank Peterson, wife and child, Eli Balthazar and wife Julius Trembly, Jesse Hazen, Mrs. Halverson, and a grandchild of Peter Anderson.

The cyclone started about six miles south of Clifton and went in a northeasterly direction for 12 or 15 miles, and then lost its force by spreading. It passed about half way between Clifton and Morganville. Its track varied from 150 yards to a quarter of a mile in width. It tore through a farming community and left nothing standing. Houses and barns were wrecked, trees torn up or broken, fences leveled and haystacks blown in every direction. The cyclone was followed by a terrific rainstorm, which lasted several hours, flooding the devastated district. The cyclone took the people unawares.

Strike Rumors False.

Chicago, April 25.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is in this city. In an interview he denied that an industrial upheaval has been planned for May 1. The report that he had said that on that date 500,000 men would be on strike he pronounced false. He said that he did believe, however, that before the second week in May 100,000 workingmen will be working from one to two hours less a day than they are working at present, but it was his belief that for the most part the shortening of the working day will be with the consent of the employer and without resort to the strike.

ADVOCATES OF PEACE.

Resolutions Adopted by the International Arbitration Congress.

Washington, April 24.—The international arbitration congress which began a two days' session Wednesday was a distinguished gathering of prominent men from all parts of the country. Senator Edmunds was made permanent chairman. Thursday afternoon the committee on resolutions presented the following report as a substitute for the several propositions referred to them:

"This national conference of American citizens, assembled at Washington, April 22, 1896, to promote international arbitration, profoundly convinced that experience has shown that war, as a method of determining disputes between nations, is oppressive in its operation, uncertain and unequal in its results, and productive of immense evils, and that the spirit and humanity of the age, as well as the precepts of religion, require the adoption of every practicable means for the establishment of reason and justice between nations, and considering that the people of the United States and the people of Great Britain, bound together by the ties of a common language and literature, of like political and legal institutions, and of many mutual interests, and animated by a spirit of devotion to law and justice, have on many occasions, by recourse to peaceful and friendly arbitration, manifested their just desire to substitute reason for force in the settlement of their differences, and to establish a reign of peace among nations: that the common sense and enlightened public opinion of both nations is utterly averse to any further war between them, that the same good sense, reinforced by common principles of humanity, religion and justice, requires the adoption of a permanent method for the peaceful adjustment of international controversies, which method shall not only provide for the uniform application of principles of law and justice in the settlement of their own differences, but shall also, by its example and results, promote the peace and progress of all peoples, does hereby adopt the following resolutions:

"1. That in the judgment of this conference, religion, humanity and justice, as well as the material interests of civilized society, demand the immediate establishment between the United States and Great Britain of a permanent system of arbitration.

"2. That it is earnestly recommended to our government so soon as it is assured of a corresponding disposition on the part of the British government to negotiate a treaty providing for the widest practicable application of the method of arbitration to international controversies.

"3. That a committee of this conference be appointed to prepare and present to the president of the United States a memorial respectfully urging the taking of such steps on the part of the United States as will best conduce to the end in view."

During a protracted discussion which followed ex-Senator Edmunds left the chair and addressed the conference in favor of offering arbitration to all civilized nations. He contended that unless some expression were adopted looking to the fate of other nations it would be felt that England and the United States were allies and that other nations were excluded from the alliance. Mr. Edmunds suggested adding after the word Great Britain: "And as far as possible with other civilized nations." Mr. Graham, of Virginia, proposed to modify the amendment of Mr Edmunds so as to provide the opportunity of extending arbitration to all civilized nations at the earliest possible day. Mr. Edmunds accepted the amendment and it was adopted.

The appointment of a committee, consisting of Messrs. Edmunds, Curry, Angel, Hubbard and Hitchcock, to lay the resolutions adopted before the president ended the business of the conference.

JACK THE RIPPER.

Man Supposed to Be He Electrocuted at Sing Sing.

New York, April 28.—"Jack the Ripper" sat in Sing Sing's death chair Monday and was killed. His lawyer declared that the man executed was the fiend who set the world horror-stricken with his revel of blood in Whitechapel, and who was put out of existence for the murder of a woman.

This remarkable criminal, who was electrocuted for killing Mrs. Johanna Hoffman, defied the police of all the continents. He murdered when and where he chose. And now no detective is to reap the glory of bringing the worst assassin of the century to his doom. To a lawyer belongs the credit of revealing the probable identity of the man who, as Carl Fiegenbaum, was executed Monday.

As the murderer's body was being carried from the death chair to the autopsy room William Sanford Lawton, his counsel, who fought for more than a year and a half to save the life of his miserable client, made a statement, declaring his full belief that Fiegenbaum was "Jack the Ripper," author of many of the Whitechapel murders. Mr. Lawton said that Fiegenbaum told him that he had got into trouble solely because he was the victim of a mania which was beyond his control and which led him to mutilate women.

The lawyer was the only man whom Fiegenbaum trusted. And Mr. Lawton, knowing at least some of the man's secrets, said after seeing him go calmly to his death with a half-spoken prayer on his lips: "I will stake my professional reputation that if the police will trace this man's movements carefully for the last few years their investigations will lead them to London and to the Whitechapel."

THE WEATHER HELPS.

The Hopeful Feeling in Trade Circles Continues.

New York, April 25.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"Business has been favored by seasonable weather and the distribution of products has made fair progress, not yet reducing retail or wholesale stocks far enough, however, to materially improve the position of industries. Money markets have grown more favorable, as well as the state of foreign commerce, and until an apparently groundless revival of discussion about the Venezuela difficulty there was a brighter prospect of European investments here. The belief that agitation for cheap money will be permanently laid at rest this year is gaining ground, and in financial quarters causes more confidence for the future. Prices of commodities are on the whole lower than ever before, having declined about two per cent. since April 1 and 17 per cent. since July, 1890, or October, 1892. The fall in manufactured products is a little less than it was April 1, but in farm products greater.

"Failures for the week have been 238 in the United States, against 230 last year, and 44 in Canada, against 37 last year."

DISASTER IN A MINE.

Sixty-Seven Men Buried Alive and Nearly All Are Probably Dead.

El Paso, Tex., April 27.—News has reached here of a horrible catastrophe at the Santa Eulalia mines, near Chihuahua, Mexico, Thursday night when it caved in, burying alive 67 of the men, all of whom were Mexicans. Gov. Ahumada is on the ground with a large force of men working to recover the buried. Thirty-seven men have been recovered, ten dead, seven dying and 20 fatally hurt. There are 30 men still in the ruins and no hope is entertained of recovering them alive.

FAITHFULNESS OF A DOG.

Saved the Life of a Seriously-Wounded Officer.

Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont, in her story of "The Guard," a body of young men who followed "The Pathfinder" into the civil war and made a brilliant record for their courage and gallantry, tells a pathetic story of a dumb beast who also was loyal and courageous:

While the guard—a body of cavalry—was drilling one day near St. Louis, a little fox-terrier followed one of the men, Herr Wisa, a Hungarian officer, going with him to camp. He could not be driven away.

The men all made a pet of him, and named him "the corporal;" but though he was affable to them all, he made the Hungarian soldier his companion and friend, sleeping at his feet at night, and following him by day.

When the guard made their memorable charge at Springfield, Mo., the Corporal charged with them, keeping beside his master's horse throughout the battle. Herr Wisa was wounded, and fell, apparently dead, in a thicket. The corps swept past, his horse fled, wild with terror, but the little Corporal nestled close beside him, licking his face and trying to rouse him.

There the dog remained through the bitter cold night. When morning came he ran to the distant road, and by his frantic barks and cries induced a passer-by to enter the thicket.

The man, seeing only a cold, stiff body, supposed the soldier to be dead, and would have hurried on; but the Corporal furiously drove him back, and would not be silenced until he saw his master move and speak, when he crouched, dumb and contented, at his feet.

WITH HIS CONSENT.

Alpheus Monrough had made his pile as a speculator, principally in rails, but he still amused himself by dealing now and again to the extent of $1,000,000 or so, although for general business he had practically retired from 'change. He was a widower, with an only daughter, Miss Phyllis Monrough, aged 20—a fine, handsome blonde, who had taken up the study of science.

Phyllis had, of course, heaps of offers, eligible and otherwise, but she had not met the man whom she cared to marry, and, at her urgent desire, her father had sent her to Harvard to enable her to pursue her studies.

She went to the university with a mind fully made up to devote her life to science and to abjure matrimony. In fact, as she herself put it, she had locked up her heart and thrown away the key.

But we are told that "love laughs at locksmiths," and, in confirmation thereof, she had not been long at Harvard when she found herself head over ears in love with George Stanislaus Rockerton, who was studying law there.

Young Rockerton came from a good family, was rich, good-looking, and in every way eligible; but when Phyllis wrote to her papa informing him of her tender passion and asking his consent to her engagement, she received a telegram (he was so urgent that he would not wait for the post to carry his refusal):

"No. Come home at once."

Phyllis had so rarely been denied anything that she was angry, astonished, dumfounded, broken-hearted all at once. No mere words can accurately describe her feelings. However, there was no help for it. She must obey. And so, after an interview with her lover, in which they vowed eternal attachment, she precipitately threw up her studies and her newly-found hopes of bliss and returned to New York.

Her father received her kindly, but with a firm-set countenance, which she knew from her observations of his dealings with others indicated that his mind was made up, and that nothing could alter it.

She, of course, burst into tears to begin with. But it made no visible effect on her parent.

"My dear Phyllis," he said, "you cannot imagine how it pains me to be obliged to run counter to your desire, but when I have explained matters to you, I hope you will agree with me and give up the idea of marrying this young Rockerton.

"When I was a lad, my father had a farm out west, the adjoining farm to which belonged to Ralph Rockerton, the grandfather of the young man you have met.

"I need not go into details; it will suffice for you to know that my father and old Rockerton had a bitter quarrel, and that a feud arose between the two families which can never be healed.

"I would rather see you in your coffin," he added, melodramatically, "than to see you the wife of one of that brood."

"But, papa," urged Phyllis, "it is a very long time ago, and I don't think that a quarrel between my grandfather and his grandfather should be any reason why Geo—I mean Mr. Rockerton—should not be a good husband to me. He is rich. I've always done as you've wished, and now, when I feel that my life's happiness is at stake, you make this stupid objection."

She sobbed afresh, but her tears were thrown away on her obdurate parent, so she tried to cross-examine him on the subject of the quarrel.

"It must have been a very dreadful quarrel, papa, for you to harbor revenge all these years. Tell me more about it. If my life is to be blighted," she said, sighing deeply, "I should like to know why."

Mr. Monrough felt himself getting into a corner with his daughter's wiles and tears, and he got a bit angry.

"It would be of no use," he answered, shortly; "my mind is irrevocably made up. But I may say this, as was common in those days, the quarrel led to fighting, and until your grandfather's death, which happened about two years afterward, every member of either family took every opportunity of trying to take the life of some member of the other. After father's death we sold the farm and came east, and so the enmity ceased actively; but I could never consent to your marrying into that hated family—never!"

"But, papa," insisted the girl, "what was it about? What led to the quarrel?"

"It was about a stream, my dear, which ran between the two estates. Old Rockerton insisted that the water was all on his land, whereas it was the boundary, and we had the right on one side of the stream and he on the other. But it really distresses me to think about that dreadful time, when for two whole years I walked about with my life in my hand, so to speak. I beg you will say no more on the subject."

"Well, just one question, papa," asked Phyllis, with an eye to future contingencies. "Was anyone killed?"

"No. No one was killed," answered Mr. Monrough; "but your grandfather was shot in the arm, and I can never forgive them—never—never!"

Her father then insisted on her promising him that she would never marry without his consent, which she did readily enough, but she saw it was useless arguing with him any further, and for the time the matter ended.

II.

It soon became evident to Mr. Monrough that Phyllis was really fretting and making herself ill about "that confounded fellow Rockerton," as he said to himself. He was a man of action, and determined to give her a thorough change.

"Phyllis, my girl," he said the next morning at breakfast, "how would you like to go to England for a bit?"

"Oh, papa!" she exclaimed, with the most brilliant look on her face that he had seen there for a long time. "That would be delightful. You know I've always wanted to go across and see the old world. But can you spare the time?"

"Well, no, my girl, I can't just now," he replied. "I am obliged to remain here for a time, as I have a speculation on which requires my presence on the spot, but Mrs. Laking is going over by the next Cunarder and she would chaperon you to your uncle's in Manchester, where you could stay and amuse yourself till I arrived, which probably would be in about three months."

So it was settled, and the following week Phyllis, having first informed young Rockerton, with whom she kept up a secret correspondence, of her departure and her destination, stepped on board the mail steamship under the care of her lady friend and in due course arrived at her uncle's in Manchester.

She was warmly received by her English relatives. Thomas Spander, her late mother's brother, had a large business in the cotton spinning trade in Manchester, and resided at Birkdale, going backward and forward to his business, so that she had the benefit of the sea air. What with that and her voyage over and her new surroundings she in a very short time resumed her old healthy look; "she seemed to have entirely forgotten her love affair."

She also, of course, frequently wrote to her father. In one of her letters she said:

"I am awfully comfortable here. Everybody seems to do everything possible to make me happy. Uncle Thomas' son George is at home from the university, where he is studying for the church. He seems a very nice young man, not at all solemn, as one would think, and he plays tennis lovely. He returns to Cambridge to-morrow."

"Um!" reflected old Monrough, as he read the letter. "That's more like it, now! But I'd rather she didn't marry a parson. Still, if they knock their heads together, I won't stand in the way. I'll give her plenty of money, and" (he had rather vague ideas of church matters) "it'll get him a deanery or a bishopric, or something."

Phyllis had been in England for two months, and everything had settled down quietly, when Mr. Monrough was electrified one morning to receive a cablegram from her:

George has come all the way from Cambridge. Wants to marry me immediately. Do consent and make me happy.

PHYLLIS.

"Well! this beats cock fighting!" murmured Mr. Monrough, as he stared at the message. "He must have fallen very deeply in love with her, indeed. Oh, I consent. But how about the settlement? I suppose that Tom Spander reckons on my doing what is right, and so I will. I wish I could get over, but I'm stuck fast with that confounded speculation for another month. It might lose me a million if I left it, and I can't afford that. Well, here goes!"

And he sent this reply telegram:

Don't understand the hurry, but I consent. Am very pleased. Wish every happiness. Cannot leave here for a month. Tell uncle I will arrange handsomely.

MONROUGH.

III.

Ten days after this message, on the morning of the arrival of the Cunard steamship at New York, Mr. Monrough was sitting in his private office when the door opened and in walked his daughter, leaning on the arm of a very well-set-up young man—of course, her husband.

The old man jumped up.

"Well, this is a surprise!" he shouted. "What on earth made you in such a hurry to get married? Ah! well, I was young myself once, and I know when I fell in love with your mother I was in a deuce of a hurry to get married."

"Oh, papa!" murmured Phyllis, as she threw her arms around his neck and kissed him. "It was so kind of you to give your consent. I am so happy. I thought you would, though, when you knew what a long way George had come to seek me!"

"Oh, well, I guess it's not such a very long way, after all," replied her father. "England's only a little place altogether, you know."

"Well," said George, "that's true; but it's nigh upon 4,000 miles before you get there."

The elder man stared at this observation, which (like some of the redoubtable Capt. Bunsby's) he couldn't understand the application of. However, he passed it over.

"Well, George, my boy," he said, as he shook his hand in a hearty grip, "I'm truly glad to have you for a son-in-law. And how's your father?"

"My father?" echoed George. "He's been dead this ten years or more."

"What does all this mean?" cried Mr. Monrough, in amazement. "Am I mad, or what is it? You have just left your father, my brother-in-law, Tom Spander, in England, haven't you?"

Phyllis threw up her arms and, with a wild shriek, fell down on the thickest part of the soft fur rug that lay before the fireplace, in what appeared to be a dead faint.

"My name is not Spander," said George, hurriedly, as he rubbed his head with one hand and supported Phyllis with his disengaged arm. "My name's Rockerton, and I went all the way from Harvard university in Cambridge, Mass., to England to secure your daughter."

The pen refuses to record Mr. Monrough's forcible language when he was thus suddenly made acquainted with the fact that he had given his consent to his daughter's marriage with the son of the family to which he had sworn deadly hatred, and the very man he had before refused, while all the time he had thought Phyllis was marrying George Spander, his brother-in-law's son.

For about five minutes the place would hardly hold him, and his anger was such that he took no means to restore his daughter, leaving her newfound husband to "bring her round" as best he could.

However, by the time he had roared himself out of breath he saw the futility of his further opposition and resentment, and, like the good business man that he was, he veered round and met the wind as it blew.

"Well! well!" he said, "I've been done, but what's done can't be helped."

He then turned to assist Phyllis, but by a strange coincidence that young lady had just come to, and in a burst of hysterical tears, begged forgiveness for the little misunderstanding.

"I forgive you, you little witch," her father cried. "But I have my suspicions about the misunderstanding."

And Mr. Monrough has never been able to decide in his own mind whether it was accidental or of malice prepense on Phyllis' part that the misunderstanding occurred. He has on several occasions tackled his daughter on the subject, but she has always managed most skillfully to evade the question, and as she and her husband are the happiest couple imaginable, and "George is not such a bad chap after all," Mr. Monrough has long since ceased to inquire into it and has also, of course, buried the hatchet with the Rockerton family.—Tit-Bits.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

A Boy and a Bear.

James, the 9-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gregerson, is the hero of the hour, on account of having saved his baby sister from the clutches of a hungry bear, and then, with his father's rifle, killed the brute. The Gregersons reside a few miles from Olga, and left James to keep house and care for the baby while they did some shopping. During their absence, the bear made its appearance at the house, driving James from the room where the baby lay. The boy recovered his nerve in a few moments, and on returning to the room was horrified to see the bear clawing at the bed clothes on the crib, where the baby was screaming with terror. The boy, without a moment's hesitation, dashed into the room past the astonished bear, and catching the infant in his arms, made a race for the door, reaching it just ahead of the now angry bear. Slamming the door shut James deposited it in a place of safety, and returning to the house by the back way secured his father's rifle. Poking the muzzle through the window of the room in which the bear was caged, he fired several bullets into the animal's body. When Mr. and Mrs. Gregerson returned, an hour later, they found James hiding in the barn with the baby, while the bear lay dead upon the floor of the house. Beyond a few scratches the baby was unhurt.

Officially Notified.

Gov. Clough was officially notified by Judge S. H. Moer, of Duluth, that Joseph Soular and William Verrill had been convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to be hanged.

Both of the condemned murderers are boys, Soular being but 17 and Verrill 18 years of age. The crime of which they are convicted is the murder of Samuel DeMars, who was found lying dead on the road near Biwabik, on the Gogebic range. Separate trials were demanded and had, but on April 10 both were convicted and sentenced.

In both cases a plea of extraordinary circumstances was entered, but Judge Moer does not recommend clemency in either.

It now remains for the governor to set the day for the execution of these two youthful criminals.

No Strike Probable.

Advices from Masaba say authoritatively that there will be no strike by miners' unions on the Masaba and Vermillion ranges this year if wages are at all fair, neither will an attempt be made to enforce the eight-hour rate. It is the purpose of the unions to work slowly, gaining strength by adding members, and to work for needed reforms. Two things are to be asked of the legislature this year—first, a law providing for a mining inspector, to be elected by the people of the county, and providing penalties for mine owners who do not take every possible precaution for the safety of their workingmen; and another law, making heavy penalties for blacklisting union men simply because of their membership in a union.

Mahagey Arrested.

Herbert Mahaffey was brought to Mankato, before United States Commissioner Ogle by Deputy United States Marshal Sheehan, who arrested him at Albert Lea. He is under indictment by the United States circuit court in Nebraska on the charge of forcibly breaking into the postoffice at Red Cloud, Neb., and taking a letter addressed to another party which contained a postoffice order for $15, forging the signature of the person to whom the order was payable, thereby securing money on it. He was bound over to appear before Judge Nelson at St. Paul, who will issue requisition papers to the Nebraska authorities. The bond was placed at $1,000.

Interstate Veterans.

At the meeting of the Interstate Veterans' Association, Ortonville was selected as the place for holding their annual encampment, and June 16, 17, 18 and 19 fixed as the dates. The last day will be devoted to excursions on Big Stone lake. Among the prominent speakers who will be present are Governor Sheldon, Maj. Pickler and Judge C. S. Palmer, of South Dakota; and J. J. McCardy, Ell Torrance, Capt. Van Sant and J. K. Mertz. A large number of posts from Minnesota and North and South Dakota will be represented. It will be the largest encampment ever held in that part of the state.

LUXURY OF SHABBINESS.

Being Occasionally in Old Clothes Brings a Delightful Sense of Freedom.

There is a luxury in shabbiness which exceeds any feeling which has its root in pride. It is the luxury of a kind which loves above all things to avoid trouble, and to feel the advantage of a sort of disguise which increases real freedom of action. When Haroun-al-Rashid went about in Bagdad in the disguise of a merchant he probably felt twice as powerful as he did when he sat on the throne of the Caliphs, for he felt twice as free. He was free to act like an ordinary citizen, and yet free also to assume his sovereign power at pleasure. To ordinary men the comfort of shabbiness, where shabbiness is not imposed upon them by their narrow income, is that they feel really at liberty to spend exactly as they please, without conforming to anybody else's judgment of what it would become them to do. Besides, even the richest man or woman is unwilling to expose good clothes to injury or ruin, whereas it is sometimes quite a relief to find a suitable occasion for finally repudiating clothes of which one is weary, partly because they are so shabby, more because like old servants, they are so presuming, and seem to claim a right over you, and take for granted that you can never turn off such old and tried friends.

Now, if the conventions of society restrict your liberty in one way, the habits of which you have got weary restrict it in another, and you never feel so free as when you are dressed in shabby clothes, for the protection of which you feel no kind of anxiety, and which you would not be sorry for an opportunity of finally discarding. The last uses of a shabby suit are the pleasantest ones. You feel no responsibility for them, and yet you are not willing to find an opportunity for a rupture with a disguise which you begin to think a little unworthy of you. In shabby clothes you persuade yourself that your dignity is all interior, and that you have no need of dress to sustain it. But none the less you anticipate without unmixed regret the prospect of assuming a costume more in proportion to your intrinsic merits. And when you can combine the freedom of a nearly worn-out dress with the anticipations of casting off the chrysalis and coming forth like a butterfly, you are probably at the high-water mark of self-satisfaction. To unite the keen sense of being above dress with an equally keen sense of being fully entitled to dress well, and of the intention to justify that title is perhaps the very acme of any luxury that clothes can confer. You enjoy your proud superiority doubly, first in parading your indifference to the "accidents" of dress, and next to the immediate prospect of properly asserting that superiority on a fitting and near occasion.—N. Y. Ledger.

A Remarkable Photograph.

Prof. Boys, of London, recently delivered an illustrated lecture in which he showed photographs of the Lee-Metford bullet as it passed through a quarter-inch sheet of glass. Just before the bullet touched the sheet the airwave cut a disk of glass about half an inch in diameter clean out. At the same time the glass around the hole was crushed into powder and driven back at an extremely rapid rate. The glass stuck to the bullet for a short time after it had passed through, the disk being driven out in front of the "bow-wave." In this experiment the waves caused by the vibrations of the glass were plainly shown. A photograph of the bullet after it had cleared the glass by nine inches showed the remainder of the glass intact, but when the bullet had proceeded another 16 inches the sheet of glass was seen to break and fall in fragments.—N. Y. Sun.

A Disappointing Haul.

Some folks say, said a fisherman, that if a fish once gets into a pound net it never gets out until it is taken out; but as a matter of fact fish often get out of pound nets. It is common for sheepshead, bluefish, Spanish mackerel and shad to get out of them. I've been to a pound net on a Sunday and counted 285 bluefish and when the net was hauled on Monday found only four or five. The fish get in and if they find the opening and get started right they can get out. They follow one another like a flock of sheep.—Chicago News.

INDIGESTION.

As a Result of It, There Were Many Disorders.

The Disease Will Create the Symptoms of Heart Disease, Kidney Disease, Etc.

From the Standard-Union, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Few women have had a more miserable existence and lived to tell the tale than Mrs. Anna L. Smith of 311 Pulaski Avenue, Brooklyn. With all the comforts that money affords, with all the happiness that many loving friends can give, the joy of Mrs. Smith's life was blasted for years by the terrible ravages of sickness. The story is most interesting as told to a reporter:

"I was an invalid for years, suffering first with one complaint and then with another. My case was truly that of a complication of diseases, due to an accident which I received some years ago. The thing which caused me the most discomfort and made me offensive to my family was the worst case of indigestion imaginable. I made all around me miserable by my sufferings, and was most miserable myself. I had the best physician we could find, and occasionally his prescriptions relieved me temporarily. But the pains and misery would all soon return again. I became desperate, and started in to try remedies of which I read. Among them were the Pink Pills. Their appearance captivated me instantly, for I am a great believer in the beautiful. I took the pills and followed out the directions to the letter, and before many days I began to feel like a different woman. For six weeks I took the pills regularly, and I can truthfully add after that I was as well as any one in the family. This change for the better in my condition has caused my relatives and friends to take the pills. We buy them all from the drug store of John Duryea, at the corner of De Kalb and Summer Avenues.

"I assure you it was impossible for me to oversee my household for three years. Now I visit my kitchen every day, do my own marketing and shopping; in a word, look after everything connected with my home and family.

"Oh, yes, I still keep taking the pills. I take one daily after dinner. Prevention, you know, is better and cheaper than cure. I verily believe one half of the women who are suffering from the ills which our sex are heir to would be up and well if they could be induced to give the Pink Pills a fair trial. I certainly recommend them heartily and feel grateful to the physician who put them on the market."

Mrs. Smith is a woman of some means and standing in the community and, therefore, her testimony will be accepted without question by all thoughtful people.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

GYPSINE.

Won't rub off!!

Neither will Gypsine!

Q. What is Gypsine?
A. Gypsine is a permanent and everlasting wall finish, entirely different from all Kalsomine preparations.
Q. How is it more durable than Kalsomines?
A. It is made from a Gypsum Rock cement base and grows hard on the wall with age.
Q. How about Kalsomines?
A. They are but temporary, softening after a short time and have to be washed and scraped off, in fact spoil any wall to which they are applied, as they rub and scale.
Q. Will not Gypsine rub and scale off?
A. No, when originally applied to a clean wall it is everlasting, and can be recoated to change tints or when necessary
Q. Is Gypsine injurious to the health?
A. Unlike all poisonous wall paper held on with vegetable paste or whiting and glue kalsomine, it is recommended by the leading physicians and sanitarians everywhere.
Q. Can anything but plain wall tinting be done with Gypsine?
A. Any kind of frescoing or relief decorating can be done with it.
Q. Where can I purchase it?
A. From your local paint dealer.
Q. How can I learn more about Gypsine?
A. Ask your dealer or write for copy of GYPSINE ADVOCATE and sample circular.

DELANO DIARY

—Some of the finest Maple Syrup we have ever seen come to town recently.

—Dar Welker is moving into the Kashelmer house. Mr. Jones, the new livery man occupies Ed Steward's residence on second street.

—Don't forget to plant some sorghum seed the first dry day that comes. Get it in early. A keg of good molasses will help round out many a meal next winter.

—The bicyclers have had a good rest for a couple of weeks: except a few who have charged around on the sidewalks at the imminent risk of running over somebody.

—Measles are keeping quite a number of the smaller children away from school now. Most of them get along quite nicely, but a few have found them rather unpleasant to entertain.

—Potatoes are cheap now and the seed for planting an acre or two would cost but little. We predict that next fall they will bring a bigger price than they did last fall. Plant enough so that you can have a few to sell.

—Farmers have been laughed at and abused time and again for allowing costly machinery to stand out in the fields and go to wreck. They can now reciprocate by viewing the expensive Delano Road grader standing where the sidewalk aught to be, near the old school building.

—From the number of boxes of eggs and firkin's of butter shipped from Delano we should judge that we are now living in one of the best dairying and poultry raising districts of the state. These are indications of thrift among the farmers, and when the farmers are thriving the villagers have a better chance.

—The watering trough in lower town has been replaced, and hoisted up high enough so that it is quite useful to travlers for watering teams. It is much more convenient than last year. The iron fountain for R. R. Ave. has not yet arrived. But the old town pump continues to lead all other contrivances for business.

—It is an outrage on the community for the mayor to have dirt hauled from the alleys and street to fill up his private property, while other citizens are refused even a load of gravel to help make alleys passable. It is also a shame to put load after load of nice gravel into the ditch caved in over the water pipes while there is none to spare for alleys. But some people appear to enjoy such shames.

—On Monday evening the City Council of Howard Lake, visited Delano to look over the water and electric light plants. An arc light was brought up from the City and hung on the wires near the GAZETTE office to show what it could do. It took most all the shine off the old ones making them look red and feeble. We understand the Howard folks were well pleased especially with the water exhibition given by the fire company.

—Don't depend altogether on your cows supporting your family and keeping up the farm unless you do something for them. Plant a good lot of sweet corn, build a silo, a small one for your own use, or several farmers could put up a large one in partnership, and feed your animals up to the paying notch. There is more money in keeping a few cows well than in keeping a larger number half fed. Raise all the produce you need if possiblie, and take care of the surplus roots, vegetables, etc. for feed.

—Memorial Day comes this month and should be observed by our citizens in an appropriate manner. Maple Plain, Rockford, Montrose, and Watertown, our nearest neighbors, from the four points of the compass, though much smaller towns than ours, each have a G. A. R. Post, and each give Memorial Day the attention it should have. Delano, though having two graveyards near, containing soldiers of the late war, and many of their comrades yet above ground, has no G. A. R: and makes no well regulated effort to keep alive the remembrance of those who risked their lives at their country's call. The annual encampment is to occur at St. Paul this summer and it certainly will be no particular credit to a village like ours to be unrepresented in that body of old soldiers, many of whom will clasp hands for the last time on earth, at St. Paul. What has become of your patriotism? Attention! Fall in! March, as a full post. Don't be among the missing.

County Cullings.

Hon. S. M. Owen will speak at Annandale, Saturday, May 23d. at 1 P. M., on financial questions.

The local agents of the political push, at Moorhead, undertook to buy Geo. N. Lamphere out of his business, failing in which a couple of men were imported from St. Paul to teach the people of Clay county hard dollars by the gang.—Midway News,

Several of our neighbor republican county newspapers are claiming that A. Y. Eaton has lost his grip; that his influence is gone; that he don't amount to much anyway. But it seems to us they certainly are very unkind to keep abusing him in such violent articles, at such length, and so often, if what they say is true. Anyway we think they are mistaken. At least some of A. Y's. articles disprove some of their assertions.

We have not the pleasure of personal aquaintance with Mr. Rank, but had learned to respect him for several manly stands his paper has taken; but must confess we are surprised that he should pronounce the mention of his name among probable candidates for Clerk of Court as "childish." As for his idea of silliness he certainly don't know how silly some of the Eagle force can appear. We havent lived neighbors to them so long and learned nothing. Can't Mr. Rank see that if one Eagle candidate don't hit the mark the next one has a chance?

It just beats the Dutch how our remarks about there being so many candidates for office among the Republican County Printing Syndicate Quintette stirred up the animals; and how in unison are their references to the subject. There's one Rank thinks it "childish." There is Saylor who stameringly refuses to accept. Then comes French and tries to make out we don't know anything. He talks as if he was subject to attacks of "Magnus Caput". Wonder if the trio would like this better. We understand that it would be "silly" "childish" to nominate Sam Rank; that Editor Saylor don't want office; and that as for any one who would dare suggest the French (by name) gentleman, of Monticello, why what he knows about county politics wouldn't fiill a "fly leaf."

From the Clearwater News we clip the following item of interest concerning a well known man in our county and whose obituary notice was published in several papers a few years ago. This report appears to be as true as the other; whether or not it is more so we are not prepared to say; and having sent the elder word that he might as well have died for he was not apt to get any better obituary notice, we refrain from further comment on the following:

"Rev. John Doran of this village and Miss Maria Cartner, of Canada, were united in marriage at Rose Hill, Canada, Monday April 6th. They arrived here Saturday and will take up their residence in the village where Mr. D. has property. The groom is one of the oldest Methodist ministers in the state. The bride is a sister of his former wife.—Eden Valley Journal.

LIENEAU, the St. Paul editor, is now a republican. He was a candidate for several federal offices under the present administration, and failing to secure them, says that he is disgusted with the "Local democracy." The feeling seems to be mutual as the "local democracy" have been quite disgusted with Mr. Lieneau.—St. Peter Herald.

We have heard it whispered that modest Sam Ash, of the Buffalo Journal, has political aspirations, and a great many friends who would like to see him made register of deeds. If it be true this adds another name, and a good one too, to the already large list of county office seekers. Mr. Ash is a very worthey young man, and merits a chance for the nomination. His party might do worse.—Maple Lake Messenger

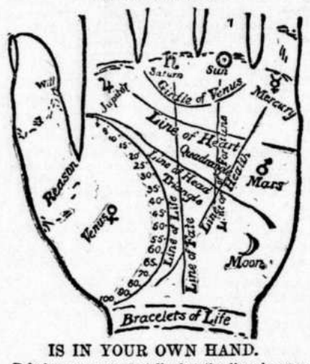
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1894 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning facnlty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

OUR National Law makers have resolved to Adjourn Congress May 18. They might as well as for any good they appear to have done.

MR. SEABURY, of the State Capitol Commission, began by raising the first shovel full of dirt for the excavation, the building of Minnesota's new Capitol building, on Wednesday last.

THE gold bugs have flooded the country with offers to country papers to furnish them a couple colums of plate matter on the gold standard side of the financial question free of charge. Why are they so liberal?

THE M. E. General Conference, at Cleveland have been having a time over the question of allowing women to act as delegates and vote. The ladies were allowed to remain, but final action has again been postponed.

JACOB H. G. FJELD, Minneapolis' great sculptor, died at the St. Barnabes hospital, after a lingering illness with disease of the bones of the head. His funeral will take place today. He had just completed the Ole Bull statue which is to be on exhibition at the entertainment to be given the 17th. of May, in Minneapolis.

ST. PAUL went republican last Tuesday, electing the Mayor and all the Aldermen but one lone man from the Tenth Ward. The Democrats were so split up into factions as to be unable to agree on any body, but appear to have gone into the fight, more to beat the other fellow than expecting to win themselves. It pays better to get through washing the party linen before making a ticket, and not continue to fight each other when the united strength of the party is needed to preserve it from defeat.

THE Central Minnesota Immigration Convention is to meet at St. Cloud Thursday and Friday May 14 and 15. The object of the convention is to acquaint people coming west with the resources of this part of the country, and induce them to stop here instead of seeking homes in newer places. J. J. Hill, Bishop Ireland, Governor Clough, Ex-Gov. Ramsey and others will address the meeting. Reduced railroad fare and hotel rates will be offered. Everybody is invited to attend. The press committee has furnished circulars to editors from which we glean the above for the information of the interested.

EX-EDITOR TANNER in another column, addresses some remarks to us on the financial question. He says: "You are correct in asserting that when silver was demonetized it was worth more than gold. We not only admit this but we strenuously maintain it." He then claims that the story that the creditor class combined with Wall Street to impose a dollar on the people, came to a violent end. Nevertheless the fact remains today, that we have a dollar worth about twice what it was before the legislation alluded to. Measure the standard dollar by your horses, your wheat, your potatoes; or by the silver from the mines: or compare your debts with what it would have taken, a few years ago, to have paid them, and see if you do not think so. Isn't the present standard the highest we ever had? If no silver was offered for coinage for twenty years, why was it? What was done with the silver during that time? Why was it high priced in 1873? Why was it demonetized?

Mr. Tanner claims that bimetallism never existed except theoretically "The double standard of value is an exploded fallacy. He takes the ground that a legal enactment cannot establish a ratio that differs from the market ratio. If Mr. T. is correct in this how is he going to harmonize it with his first admission that he so "strenuously" maintains. If "bimetallism" did not exist, how can silver be demonetized" and gold not? Everybody knows that we have had both metals for years.

The gentleman from Middleville further says: "The worst form of currency in circulation regulates the value of the whole currency, and drives all other forms of currency out of circulation." Then is gold the worst form; and has it driven silver, and is it driving greenbacks and every other kind of money out of circulation?

Mr T. then claims that "the crime of '73 was not a crime at all; that the bill was made quite public. If the gentleman can produce a file of some old newspaper that he has sayed since that time and ban show Mr. Harvey "Coin" the article he can, we understand have $100 cash. Mr. Harvey has long been offering this inducement to his opponents to prove that the bill was made public, at the time it was being passed, and no one seems to have laid claim to it until recently we understand the editor of the Omaha Bee claimed the reward. We have not yet heard if his claim was substantiated. Anyway there are plenty of people who knew nothing of the bill, and eminent Congressmen claim not to have been aware that it would demonetize silver.

THE racket in Congress about the Marquette statue, presented to the government by the state of Wisconsin, is all wrong. And yet it is in keeping with the actions of many of the individuals who are opposing its acceptance. If the state of Wisconsin recognizes in Pierre Marquette their foremost citizen, if they acknowledge him as the one, who as a pioneer, did more than any other man for the state and the advancement of its interests, and whose statute is worthy a position among those from other states at the capitol of our country it is right to accept the offering. The question of fitness for the subject of a statue to be placed at Washington, to the credit of Wisconsin, or of any other state, is not upon any one point. It is not as to whether the man whose physical frame served for a model for the statue was a Catholic or a Protestant; it is not as to whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, it is not as to whether he believed in one thing, or another thing, only that in this case he was a pioneer, whose heart and hand were ever ready to aid in the advancement of his state and the welfare of its inhabitans. It may be possible that were the Catholics to cast about for a subject for a statue to the memory of the most zealous in their cause that Pierre Marquette would be chosen; but that need not deprive him of the privilege of being the first citizen of his state when measured by the requirements for the statute at his country's capitol.

Wisconsin should as other states be allowed the privilege of making her own selection for a statue to the memory of her foremost pioneer, if that is what the statues are to represent, and in enlightened America no man should be barred from his rights on account of religious, political or other beliefs. or non-beliefs. If A. P. A's. are not satisfied they should remember that no A. P. A. earned the right to the place: or, if he did that which entitled him more than Pierre Marquette, to the honor he should have had his statue in the place now occupied by the priest. As we said before no belief entertained by the man should deprive him, whoever he may be of honors justly earned. But the man standing pre-eminently out from others as the one should be chosen.

There is altogether too much of this selection of improper persons, from family ties, from fraternal feelings, from party prejudice and from Nationpride for the country's good. When a deed has been done, it is not for us to refrain from recognizing its merit because of our not agreeing in some other particular with the doer.

Be honest, be careful, and select the proper person for the occasion and when men loy down thei. selfish prejudices they will recognize that the right thing has been done, and will respect your choice.

A Gold Standard.

You are correct in asserting that when silver was demonetized, it was worth more than gold. We not only admit this but we strenuously maintain it. Silver was the dear dollar and gold the cheap one. The story told with pathos on many a free silver stump that the creditor class combined with Wall Street to impose a dollar on the people came to a violent end as the real facts were brought to light. The dear dollar was the one discarded, and it may be well to mention in this connection that at the time the United States passed the act of 1873, she had not been offered a pennyworth of silver for coinage in twenty years. (See Gunton's Social Economist for May 1895.)

Our contention is that bimetallism never existed in this country nor any other except theoretically, and the idea that a legal enactment can establish a ratio that differs from the market ratio of the metals has been disfavored on any and every occasion where it has been tried. The double standard of value is an exploded fallacy.

"The worst form of currency in circulation regulates the value of the whole currency, and drives all other forms of currency out of circulation,"

In the early days of the Republic we had silver monometallism becaus by a very slight amount, silver had been over-rated. As a natural consequence the coin which was underated disappeared from circulation and the coin which was overrated alone remained current.

This state of things lasted until the year 1834 when President Jackson determined to restore gold. But in this instance there was an over valuation of gold and an underrating of silver. The effect of the change is just what we should expect: gold droye silver out of circulation and one metal simply displaced the other.

"At no time during the present century," says an eminent writer in a recent issue of the Review of Reviews, "did the market and legal ratios coincide. The divergence was now above and now below."

With regard to what our free silver friends call "the crime of '73," to those who believe with us that silver practically disappeared with its undervaluation in 1834 to 1837, the action of Congress will not appear so very mysterious after all. So far from being hurried through, it has been shown that this very demonetization bill was before congress two years and ten months; that it was printed 13 times by order of congress; that the debates on it occupy 66 columns in the Senate proceedings and 78 columns in the House proceedings; and that the discontinuance of the silver dollar was specially discussed in the House. (See Horace White's "Money and Banking illustrated by American History.")

If in spite of all this, people are prepared to maintain that the demonetization of silver was secretly brought about by an English-German conspiracy through direct and wholesale bribery of congressmen. I should be the last person to dispute their right to the belief, together with all the satisfaction that they may derive from its continued enjoyment. But let it be thoroughly understood that it is a myth worthy of as much credence as the story of Aladdin's lamp or the roc's egg; that it has been denied and refuted times without number as far as language can be used to deny and refute; and that the real conspiracy threatening the happiness and prosperity of the nation was the costly and abortive attempt to "rehabilitate" silver which we so eagerly entered into and no less eagerly abandoned at a special session of congress called for the purpose.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1, 1896.

Senator Gorman's speech protesting against republican extravagance in providing for an expenditure of $600,000,000 when the estimates of the government receipts for the next fiscal year are only $574,000,000 was a notice served upon the republicans that during the coming campaign the people should be fully posted upon republican intentions, not avowed, but surely indicated by the action of their leaders in both branches of this Congress, to increase Federal taxation all around, in order to raise the money to meet needless appropriations. The men who are in control of the republican party apparently wish to put this country upon a European basis in the matter of expenditures, and perhaps in other ways. Now, Mr. Gorman and other leading democrats believe that a majority—an overwhelming majority, of the plain, everyday people of this country favor the American idea of economy in public expenditure, and oppose public extravagance in any and every form; and they intend to see that the facts are placed before the people.

Not a little amusement has been caused by the testimony of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, before the Senate Naval committee in the investigation as to the cost of armor plates for our fighting vessels, which although given some time ago was not made public until this week. Mr. Carnegie had the nerve to tell the committee that he considered making the armor for the government at $550 a ton a work of patriotism. The public is wondering what Mr. Carnegie calls the contract he has made with the Russian government to furnish the same kind of armor for $300 a ton. Abuses brought to light by that investigation caused the Senato amend the Naval appropriation bill so as to prohibit the employment of naval officers by private contractors after June 30, 1897. While nothing positively criminal was shown in connection with such employment enough suspicion was engendered to make it desirable to put a stop to the practice.

Ex-Congressman John D. Anderson, of W. Va., takes a rosy view of Democratic prospects in that State. He says: "The democrats of my state are going to make a great fight this year to redeem the state from republican rule, and I think they are going to win. It is going to be a pretty exciting contest, but our party is united, and the conditions are all favorable to success."

The Senate evidently is not afraid of the A. P. A., whatever its other falts may be. After listening to masterly eulogies on the life and character of Father Marquette by senators Vilas and Mitchell, of Wis., and Kyle of South Dakota, who by the way, is a Protestant minister, it adopted a joint resolution offered by Senator Palmer, of Ill., accepting the statue of Father Marquette, now in Statuary Hall, and thanking the state of Wis. It remains to be seen whether the A. P. A. can prevent the house adopting this resolution. It is understood that it will make the attempt.

Representative Clarke, who was the unsuccessful "sound money" democratic candidate for Gov. of Alabama, has returned to his seat in the House, and he brings good news. He says: "No matter how much we may differ on financial questions, the democrats of Alabama are harmonius in agreeing that the best interests of the State require that it shall remain under democratic control. We are all together in support of the ticket just nominated and will elect it fairly and triumphantly." That's the way for a democrat to talk. There is no sore head under that man's hat.

McKinley's managers stole a march on Reed when they captured that Vermont state convention, even if they failed to get everything they wanted from the Illinois convention. It gegins to look as though Quay and Platt had undertaken a gigantic task in trying to keep McKinley from getting that nomination. Their latest scheme of uniting all the oppositon to McKinley on Harrison is not at all pleasing Reed, who hates Harrison. One of Reed's friends speaking of this scheme said: "If Platt and Quay can't beat McKinley without taking up Harrison they can't beat him at all. Just remember what I say. If these men try to stampede the convention to Harrison McKinley will be nominated, and the man who will do most to bring it about will be Tom Reed. Reed wants the nomination himself, and next to getting it he wants to keep Harrison out of it."

FROM CALIFORNIA.

Tourists, Festivities, Harbor, Unpleasant April.

BY HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

While the end of the California tourist is drawing near there are still many strangers here. A few important occasions transpired recently which had the effect to increase the number of visitors for the time. First was the visit of the Minneapolis aldermen, taking in Southern California in their junket to the Pacific coast. They were royally entertained by the City of Los Angeles. Next was the visit of the Hotel Men's Association known as the H. M. M. B. A. This body of tourists comprised a large number of hotel proprietors their families and others, requiring two or more large trains of Pullman and Wagner sleeping coaches to convey them over the country. Both, the Minneapolis Aldermen and the H. M. M. B. A. took in Pasadena and Mount Lowe.

The visit of the H. M. M. B. A. was timed so that they might be present at the celebration of the carnival known as La Fiesta de Los Angeles, an annual festival occasion of the city of Los Angeles, commenced in the spring of 1894, and this year it began April 21 and continued through five days.

La Fiesta is similar to carnival occasions that have been celebrated in Spain, Italy, and other European countries from time immemorial. La Fiesta, on this occasion, was organized by the selection of a lady as queen and designated, La Reina de La Fiesta, accompanied by the selection 16 young ladies as attendants of the queen, all being of the elite of the city of Los Angeles. Similar to all soverigns the queen had an army at her control, and on this occasion the carnival was inaugurated by the Queen's army making an attack on the city. The army consisted of many groups, attired to represent military, poetical, fantastical and mythological features and constituted large street processions. The movements of the army were an imitation of an army in war times invading a city. The attack was begun by the Queen's own lancers, followed by a large company of maskers, the Jonathan Fiesta club and other groups amongst which was a group representing that evil accompanied all revolutions however righteous. It consisted of a representation of his Satanic majesty and a few of his imps.

The army overran the city, looted business establishments carrying off goods and making prisoners of proprietors and clerks, nothing withstanding its movements, even the city council beat a hasty retreat, and the city fell a pray to the invading army. The whole was connected with various antics and fantastical movements, amongst which his satanic majesty played his part. Following this was the reception of the queen who was adorned with a crown and queenly robes and accompanied by her train of 16 lady attendants all making the greatest spectacular display of the inaugural part of the carnival.

On the days following, the processions consisted of floats bearing figures and paraphanalia representing each of the industries of California accompanied by one designated California. These were followed by others representing other times and other nations, conspicuously was the Chinese Dragon. It was serpent like in form, 200 feet in length and manipulated by 80 Chinese. The head and countenance of the monster filled completely the mythological idea of the dragon. The carnival operations were not confined to daylight but extended into night, accompanied both day and night by maskers with attires representing various characters, emulating Black Crook in certain features. Many pranks upon each other were played by the participants, and amongst them was a very corpulent gentleman from Pasadena, masked and riding a bicycle. Another masker mistaking the character of the rotundness of his fellow masker for a padding, struck him about the abdomen with a rubber hose. The assailant soon found to his dismay that he had struck the real instead of the counterfit and seriously injured a fellow participant in the sport. The corpulent gentleman was cared for and from latest accounts was on a fair way to recovery.

The question as to which point, San Pedro Bay or Santa Monica, shall become the sea port or harbor for the city of Los Angeles has never been settled, Los Angeles being 25 to 30 miles inland, so at present there is considerable interest merging into anxiety as to the outcome, manifested on the part of the metropolis of Southern California. San Pedro Bay has the endorsement and support of Los Angeles and the recommendation of civil and maritime engineers of the U. S. Government as being the most suitable place for such harbor, and to the casual observer San Pedro presents itself as being the most suitable for the purpose, being a bay lying between the mainland and a peninsula projecting southerly from the mainland, affording a naturally well protected water space suitable for an outer and inner harbor.

Santa Monica is situated directly on the ocean, without a peninsula or natural object to protect its landing from the ocean gales, so it is proposed to build a breakwater of about one and a half miles long situated about the same distance from the shore and running parallel with the shore, which must necessarily be a massive structure to ensure sufficient strength to withstand the action of a portion of the largest ocean of the globe The main supporter of Santa Monica in its contest for an appropriation to build a harbor there, is the Southern Pacific R. R. Co., through its president C. P. Huntington, who has had sufficient influence to obtain favorable action of the lower house of the present Congress in authorizing an appropriation of about three million dollars for the construction of a harbor at Santa Monica. This act also contains a much smaller appropriation for an inner harbor at San Pedro Bay, $392,000. It is beleived that the effect of this act, if it becomes a law, will be to rule out San Pedro Bay entirely as it is supposed that the government will refuse to construct two harbors to accomodate the one purpose, hence the anxiety of the supporters of San Pedro Bay or Wilmington as the point appears in Congressional proceedings. Senator Nelson, of Minnesota is much applauded by the people of Los Angeles for his action in their behalf. The question is now before the Senate.

The haymaking process on tracts and patches of land not used in fruit raising is now in operation. Some of the material made into hay is wheat, barley and other small grain, harvested while it is yet green. The seed of the material to be made into hay is sown in December, just in advance of the heaviest rainfall, so that it grows from a natural fall of moisture. Under the rainfall the grain tracts and unused tracts become green so that during the first three months of the year the surface of the ground is at its greenest period. All fruit tracts are kept well cultivated between the trees in the same manner as the Eastern farmer keeps his cornfield cultivated such being necessary for successful fruit raising, nothing being sown or planted between the trees. Oranges and lemons require some irrigation, while some other fruits, especially those of the eastern varieties grow without irrigation. Early in March, apple, pear, peach, apricot, and other deciduons fruit trees began blooming, followed soon by the shooting of leaves, and likewise orange trees became fragrant with bloosoms while many of the trees were still laden with fruit.

This April now about it close was the most unpleasant month that I have seen in all my California experience and it is said to have been the worst month on record in California. It neither rained nor snowed, the worst feature being the wind accompanied by a rather cool temperature, making it unpleasant for basking in the sunshine although the sun was shining most of the time. The winds are neither cyclones nor hurricanes nor of such force as to carry barrels, boards and loose things generally across peoples lots but sufficiently disagreeable to interfere with the daily enjoyment of Heaven's blessed sunshine.

Polish Methodists.

The following is making the rounds of the papers whether or not there is any truth in it we cannot say:

Cleveland, Ohio, May 5.—A profound sensation has arisen in the Church of the Immaculate Heart of the Blessed Virgin Mary (Independent Catholic) which was organized in this city about three years ago, and has been presided over by Father A. F. Kolaszewski. Father Kolaszewski and his 3,000 Polish parishioners desire to ally themselves with the Methodist Episcipal church. Although Father Kolaszewski refuses to say anything whatever concerning the action, the statement as to his desiring to ally himself with the M. E. church is verified by Chaplin C. C. McCabe, of the Methodist general conference. In speaking of the matter, the chaplain said:

"Yes, it is true that the priest does desire to ally himself with the Methodist church, and the 3,000 Poles comprising his congregation as well. They do not believe in the infallibility of the pope and trans-substantiation any longer. They are becoming more and more educated all the time, and as all people are enlightened, they do not believe these fallacies. Many thousand Poles are going to join the Methodist church."

Father Kalaszewski, when questioned about the matter, said:

"Nothing has been done in that matter yet, and there is nothing to be said at this time, I prefer not to discuss it.

It Must be the Issue.

It looks as if the financial question was going to be the issue this year. It must be fought to a finish for compromises can no longer settle the question. Declarations of "parity," "international bimetallism," or "one dollar as good as another" will no longer satisfy either side. The free coinage issue is becoming so clearcut in the old parties that it cannot be evaded any longer. The republicans may try to follow the example of Ohio, but it will cost them thousands of votes if they do. The democrats will declare either for the gold standard or for free silver; but whichever way it is the other faction of that party are sure to withdraw. Party names can not be conjured with this year. People are going to ask the politicians how they stand, and they will not take any compromise.—The Broad Axe.

M'Kinley's Triumph is Democratic Opportunity.

McKinley's nomination, predicted as certain by The World six weeks ago, is now conceded by everybody who speaks his honest thought.

McKinley's triumph is Democratic opportunity.

The Ohio leader represents every element and phase and consequence of Republicanism that is antagonistic to Democracy. His nomination will present the issue between the parties square-cut on every side. Twice on these issues he and his party have been overwhelmingly defeated before the people.

In 1888 the Republicans carried, the country, electing their President and a marjority of Congress. Mr. McKinley stood sponsor for the tariff bill which represented the policy of his party and the claims of its campaign contributors.

At the election of 1890 the people passed judgment upon it. They converted a working Republican majority in the House into a Democratic majority of 148. They left McKinley himself at home. They rolled up a popular majority against McKinleyism of 1,332,000.

The Republican contention was that the vote was hasty. The people, they said, had not experienced sufficiently long the beauties of the McKinley tariff and the Reed expenditures. But in 1892, after two years' experience, the people reaffirmed their verdict. They elected Grover Cleveland by an electoral majority of 132 and a popular pluraty of 382,956. They returned a Democratic majority of 94 in the House. They recovered the Senate and elected a majority of Governors.

It was a tidal-wave submerging—the second overthrow of McKinleyism.

Again McKinley is coming before the country as the champion of Protection—though we have a tariff quite as high as that recommended by the Republican Tariff Commission in 1883 and enacted by a Republican Congress.

He is to be posed as "the advance agent of Prosperity"—prosperity of the sort illustrated by the Homestead strike and riots, by hundreds of other strikes and lockouts, by the failure to secure any advance in wages to accompany the large advance in bounties to the protected industries, and finally, in the last year of his tariff, by a million workingmen out of employment, an empty Treasury, a dissipated gold reserve and a monetary panic.

McKinley's triumph is Democratic opportunity. Is the party wise enouge to improve it?—N. Y. World.

A WRITER in the London Speaker declares that the greatest aid to digestion is conversation at meals, and that laughter is almost a cure for dyspepsia. Try it and see.

IT is stated that Barney Barnato's chestnut horse Worcester won the City and Suburban handicap in England recently. Then the horse could not have been a chestnut.

EUROPEAN scientists say that the X rays will not kill microbes. The only sure way to get rid of the pests is to swallow a piece of sticky fly paper. If you don't believe it, try it.

NEW JERSEY people take little things too seriously. A justice of the peace hid $100 in a cigar box, his son threw the box into the fire as rubbish, and the old man committed suicide.

A NEW YORK contemporary prints what it calls the latest photograph of the moon. Its most striking peculiarity is that it looks like the earlier photographs. The moon hasn't changed much.

LAST year, at the opening of summer, all Europe and even America was threatened by the scourge of cholera. This year the disease as an epidemic has wholly disappeared. It is a cause for profound thankfulness.

ONE of the counts in a divorce suit filed in an Indiana court is that the wife of the complainant refuses to patch his trousers. Too many men neglect notifying their wives of damage to their masculine bloomers until the damage has gone so far that it is easier to wear the patch and give the garment to the poor.

A NEW JERSEY farmer who raises vegetables for the New York market has spent $25,000 in electric culture and facilities, and is said to have increased his production from 40 to 60 per cent. There should be no trouble in keeping boys on the farm when the work is confined to touching a button and cutting coupons.

A EUROPEAN savant with several centimeters of name has discovered a means of proving the existence or absence of true love by photography. He photographs the electric spark which jumps from the tips of the fingers of those who truly love each other. No spark, no true love. So even sparking seems to have a basis of scientific exactitude.

A BRIGHT Boston newspaper claims that its advertising columns "ward off business death"—which is merely another way of saying that publicity operates as a life insurance to business. If it be a wise policy to insure a stock against fire it is surely as equally wise a policy to give the stock that measure of protection against moths which a liberal application of printer's ink affords.

THE American girls were very much in evidence at the queen's drawing-room recently. We have no doubt they bore themselves well. They were not noticeable because of the rank of their husbands, but because they were American girls. At least, Americans do not care anything about their titles, but they are always glad when the American woman does honor to American womankind.

THE phrase "dime novel" has come to mean the cheapest trash in the way of sensational stories. But the first dime novel published in this country was not trashy or sensational, but was a piece of good literary work. This was "The Dead Letter," published anonymously, but written by Metta Victoria Victor. It had a great run and its popularity opened the way to the modern, cheap novel, but to the older circle of readers the phrase "dime novel" did not mean literary trash.

THE thrashing that China received at the hands of Japan a year or so ago was possibly a blessing in disguise. Since the war the Chinese have shown a disposition to break away from many of the old absurd and hampering customs, and while conditions in the empire may not be favorable to prompt and immediate enlightenment, the light is bound to shine in time. The recent concessions granted to missionaries and the expunging of all restrictions heretofore placed upon the propagation of the Christian religion show that the old Chinese idea of isolation and exclusion is dying out.

THE naval hydrographic office in Washington has issued a superb map, on a large scale, of "The Arctic Regions, with the Tracks of the Search Parties and the Progress of Discovery," compiled from the latest and best information. The map shows in colored lines no less than 76 different Arctic expeditions, from the expedition of Sir John Franklin in 1848 down to that of Peary in 1895. The results of 48 explorations of Arctic coast regions are delineated in colors, beginning with the cartographic work of the Russians in 1734 and coming down to Peary's delineation of the Greenland coast last year.

WHAT will become of King Humbert's kingdom if the present exodus of his subjects continues is not of so much moment on this side as the other end of the question, what will become of America? From January 1 to April 17 of this year 19,936 Italians came to the port of New York. This is nearly twice as many as arrived during the same period last year. Still there are, upon authentic information, 7,797 more on the way thither, of whom 4,000 will arrive before the end of the month. The increase over the number of Italian arrivals last year, from January 1 to May 1, was not less than 11,000.

INTERESTING NEWS COMPILATION.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Proceedings of the First Session.

Washington, May 1.—The naval appropriation bill was further discussed in the senate yesterday. A bill was favorably reported to protect free labor from convict competition by confining the scale of goods manufactured by convict labor to the state where produced. Senator Hill introduced a bill in relation to contempts of United States courts, the bill defining direct contempts to be those committed during the sitting of a court or a judge in chambers in its or his presence; all other contempts are indirect. In the house the general debate on the bankruptcy bill was concluded. A bill was introduced to provide for the purchase of the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln in Kentucky and to erect on the site a national soldiers' home, to be known as the "Lincoln Soldiers' Home."

Washington, May 2.—During the discussion of the naval appropriation bill in the senate yesterday Senator Tillman (S. C.) made a bitter attack on the president and secretary of the treasury and was replied to by Senator Hill (N. Y.). Senator Butler (N. C.) introduced a bill to make the Mexican silver dollar, the Japanese yen and the trade dollar equal in value to the standard dollar of the United States. The house devoted the major portion of the day to debate on the bankruptcy bill. A bill to provide for a delegate in congress from the territory of Alaska was defeated, 44 to 60.

Washington, May 4.—After a week's debate, which has taken a wide range, the senate on Saturday passed the naval appropriation bill. It provides, among other things, for two battle ships and 13 torpedo boats. In the house, after five days of debate, the Henderson bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy was passed by a vote of 157 to 81. It provides for both voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy.

Washington, May 5.—In the senate yesterday the time was occupied in discusing the resolution to investigate the issue of bonds, Senator Hill speaking against it. In the house Mr. Woodman (Ill.) introduced a resolution requesting the president to immediately issue a proclamation recognizing the Cuban revolutionists as belligerents. The naval appropriation bill was considered and a bill was passed for the protection of American yacht owners and shipbuilders.

TILLMAN AND HILL.

The Former Again Uses His Famous Pitchfork.

Criticises a Speech Made by the Senator from New York and Attacks the Administration—Hill Eulogizes Carlisle.

Washington, May 2.—The session of the senate Friday was enlivened by two characteristic speeches—a fiery and impetuous one by Senator Tillman (S.C.) and a temperate and suggestive one by Senator Hill (N. Y.). Senator Tillman, wearing in his necktie an emblem of his last speech in the senate, a miniature gold pitchfork, strode up and down in the rear of the back seats on the democratic side of the chamber, gesticulating forcibly and inveighing against the president, the secretary of the treasury and the bankers and money lenders of Wall street, and threatening the withdrawal of his state from the democratic column if the Chicago convention should not declare in favor of free silver at sixteen to one. Senator Tillman had arisen to speak on the naval appropriation bill, but leaving the question of ships he said he would follow the precedent set in the discussion and talk of the financial question. He proceeded to criticise one of the speeches made some time ago by Senator Hill (dem., N. Y.) in defense of the administration in issuing bonds. He characterized Senator Hill's argument on that point as "The tyrant's plea of necessity."

"With the representatives of the people in session," he continued, "the president overrides all decency; overrides the will of his own party and accomplishes by indirection what he has no authority to do directly."

"There is a greater feeling in the states west of the Mississippi against the bondholding people of New York and the east than there ever was against the people of the south. To paraphrase the remark of Charles Sumner: 'Gold monometalism is sectonal; free silver is national.'"

Senator Tillman went on to contrast the two democratic leaders, Calhoun and Cleveland, and said that Calhoun stood up for the people at large, while Cleveland was the exemplar and tool of the money classes and represented only the almighty dollar. He sneered at Mr. Cleveland's veto of small pension bills while he "turned over $10,000,000 to one Jew." Senator Tillman declared that Mr. Cleveland had no financial policy except that of Senator Sherman; and said that Secretary Carlisle and Senator Sherman had exactly the same notions. Whenever he mentioned Carlisle, he meant Sherman, for they were interchangeable, except that the one was honest to his friends, the bankers, while the other had proven treacherous to his party.

"No one," Senator Tillman continued, "had the slightest idea that the democrats would win in the next election. On the one side were Cleveland and Carlisle and Sherman, and on the other side were Jackson, Jefferson and Lincoln. "The senator from New York," he continued, "asked me what I was going to do with South Carolina at Chicago. I will say this to him. I expect to go to Chicago as a delegate to the national convention. I expect to do my level best as a democrat to keep my party back out of the woods of republicanism, and to throw off all the slough and rottenness that it has accumulated during the last three years. But if boodle is to win at Chicago, then I am willing to take my hat and bid the senator from New York, and all like him, a long farewell."

"As to where I will go," he continued, "I do not know. I will not go to populism. But populism is simply an expression of wrath and anger on the part of disgusted democrats and disgusted republicans. The populists were in error at the last presidential election. They spattered themselves on the wall (laughter). Those of us democrats who have not been debauched, or who do not allow gold to control us, will line up somewhere, but we shall not be, after the election, under the gold standard. If we do not get a recognition of silver at the Chicago convention, then the democratic party is dead and gone forever. A new party will spring into existence. If we cannot beat you this time, we will serve notice on you that we will have America for Americans, and 'to —— with Great Britain and the tories!' (Laughter). If we do not beat you in 1896, we will interest you in 1900."

Senator Hill's reply to Senator Tillman was dignified, but sarcastic. He, too, spoke of the Chicago convention; declared that he did not believe that Mr. Cleveland was a candidate for the renomination; said that he was not pledged to him or to any member of his cabinet; eulogized Mr. Carlisle for his public services, while criticising him for his interference against the reelection of Senator Blackburn, and closed a long speech by declaring that the policy of the democratic party should be "in essentials, unity; in nonessentials, liberty; in all things, charity."

Lightning Kills a Child.

Baraboo, Wis., May 2.—A bolt of lightning struck the high school building at Wonewoc Friday afternoon while the scholars were holding Arbor day exercises, killing Leo White instantly and almost completely paralyzing a boy, Roy Harrison. Other children were injured.

His Father Dead.

Washington, May 2.—Secretary Mallet-Provost, of the Venezuelan commission, in a telegram to Justice Brewer Friday morning announced the death of his father in Philadelphia, where the secretary has been for the past week.

A Fatal Fall.

Chicago, May 5.—Louis H. Boldenweck, brother of Trustee William Boldenweck, of the sanitary board, was found dead at 11:30 o'clock Monday night. His body was lying on the floor of a vacant building at 14 Custom House place, about ten feet from the base of an elevator shaft, down which he had fallen. Apparently he had been dead several hours when his body was found.

Diamonds Stolen.

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 5. — Two trays of diamond rings, valued at $7,000, were stolen from the store of M. G. Cohen, on Fifth avenue.

RUIN AND DEATH.

Awful Result of Explosion of Gasoline in Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, May 5.—What may prove to be the most disastrous calamity of the year occurred in this city Monday night, when a five-story brick structure, filled with people, completely collapsed and fell, a conglomerate mass of brick and shattered timbers, burying the unfortunate inmates beneath its ruins. It is impossible to say how many persons have been killed, some placing the number as high as 40, other as low as 15. Up to midnight six persons were known to be dead, and eleven injured. Following is a list of the unfortunates:

DEAD—Adolph Drachs and his five-year-old daughter; Nolan Davitt, traveling man from Hamilton, O.; Mamie Kennedy and two others yet unidentified.

MISSING—R. E. Fricke, of Norwood; Joseph Worthner, barkeeper; Louis Fey, wife and baby, also two servant girls in the families of Fey and Drachs.

INJURED—H. A. Hunwick, 34, bookkeeper; Joseph Spriggs, 21, colored, porter; C. S. Wells, 44, clerk; Sidney W. Johnson, 33, barkeeper; W. D. Crosby, 24, paper hanger; Willard E. Cook, 25 clerk, Avondale; J. B. Ward, 29, race horse man, Toledo, O.; Barbara Huddfelman, 43, domestic John McCarthy, of Cincinnati Wharf company; Pete Burns, refuses to give address; Charles Spille.

It is thought several of the injured will die. It is known that more victims are in the ruins. No accurate statement can be given on this point until the debris shall have been cleared away. The building was situated on the east side of Walnut street just south of Fifth street. The lower floor was occupied by Drach's saloon. The upper apartments were rented out to lodgers.

The explosion was caused by the ignition of a gasoline tank. Adolph Drach, proprietor of the saloon on the lower floor had recently placed a gasoline engine in his cellar for the purpose of generating his own gasoline fuel. Best authorities agree that the commutator of the engine had burned out, setting fire to the tank of gasoline.

The explosion came like a thunderclap from a clear sky. Eyewitnesses say that the building was seen to shake for an instant and then to slump in, and almost a second later only an indiscriminate mass of ruins remained. The walls of the two adjoining buildings on either side stood up stark and naked.

BUSINESS IMPROVES.

Threatened Failures Prevented by Activity in Retail Trade.

New York, May 2.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"As the season advances there is more business, but advices indicate that on the whole the prevalent feeling is that the gain is less than there was reason to expect, while retail trade has been active enough to materially lessen stocks and obligations, and thus to prevent a great many threatened embarrassments. It has not yet brought enough new business to mills or factories to prevent decrease of unfilled orders and closing of some works. Substantially the same state of things exists in all the great industries, notwithstanding the strong combinations in some, and evidence of inadequate consumption appears in the fact that the general range of prices of commodities, farm and mine as well as manufactured products, is nearly one per cent. lower than it was April 1, and the lowest ever known, the decline since October, 1892, being 16.7 per cent. Nor can this be attributed to scarcity of money, which is easier and more abundant as the liquidation of many dealers lessens outstanding obligations. Foreign operations have been of no influence in American securities, but shipments of silver have again been large. Stocks have remained practically without change.

"Speculation has raised cotton an eighth, though receipts and crop prospects still favor lower prices, and accumulated stocks of unsold goods are very large. Wheat has declined 4⅝ cents for cash. With only two months of the crop year remaining there is little to encourage higher prices. Silk has weakened a little owing to the overbuying of Japanese dealers. Wool is weak, the wool year closing with the greatest quantity of wool on hand ever carried at this season. Woolen goods have not improved in demand, and hairless have opened 5 to 15 per cent. lower than last year. Dress goods are helped by the restriction of foreign imports, but the association reports that on the whole, wool machinery is not more than half employed. Some cotton mills have ceased production. There is fair demand for boots and shoes, though not enough to prevent gradual exhaustion of orders untilled, but the only change in prices has been a slight advance in some qualities. Leather is weaker, with a very narrow demand, and quotations average a shade lower, as do prices of hides.

"The volume of domestic business shown by clearings has been $154,000,000 daily in April against $153,000,000 last year; 126,000,000 in 1894; $181,000,000 in 1893, and 188,000,000 in 1892. These figures show a greater shrinkage than appeared in recent months, and indicate that improvement is slow.

"Failures for the week have been 238 in the United States, against 231 last year, and 31 in Canada, against 34 last year."

ENTOMBED.

Remains of the Late Secretary Gresham Interred.

Washington, May 4.—The burial of the remains of the late Secretary Gresham Saturday afternoon was devoid of any display whatsoever. The funeral party reached Washington by a train on the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad at four o'clock p. m. and was met at the station by Secretary Lamont and his aide, Capt. Barry. Mrs. Gresham and her son and daughter entered the carriage and followed the hearse up Pennsylvania avenue through the white house grounds en route to Arlington cemetery. The president and Secretary Olney and Secretary Carlisle and Secretary Herbert and Gen. Miles were waiting at the cemetery. The body was lifted from the hearse by eight troopers from Fort Myer, and the little procession then wended its way through the beautiful grounds to the newly-made grave in front of the old mansion on the brow of the hill, in close proximity to the monument of Gen. Sheridan. Without ceremony except the sounding of "taps" by a bugler the body was lowered into its last resting place and the party returned to the city. There was no military display.

TRAGEDY DOWN EAST.

Edwin Plant Kills His Wife, Babe and Himself.

Canaan, Conn., May 5.—Edwin Plant, of Clayton, Mass., three miles from here, on Monday shot and instantly killed his wife, Ada, and then fired a bullet into the heart of his two-weeks-old child, killing it. Plant fled to the swamp near Karkapot river, where he was surrounded by a posse. After a lively exchange of shots with his pursuers Plant killed himself. Plant was married April 16, and the same day his wife gave birth to the infant.

A Young Girl Murdered.

Washington, May 5.—Elsie Kreglo, a white girl of 16 years old, was murdered Monday in a ravine near the National Zoological park. The body was found in a small creek about 100 yards from the girl's home. Cries for help were heard by the Kreglo family, and a sister and a colored boy rushed to the scene whence the cries proceeded. They found Elsie standing in a creek of shallow water between two hills. Overcome by the loss of blood and exhaustion, she fell back dead into the water before help arrived. The girl's throat had been gashed six times with a knife.

SHAH SHOT.

An Assassin Takes the Life of Persia's Ruler.

Washington, May 2.—Secretary Olney at three p. m. Friday received the following cable message from United States Minister Alex McDonald at Teheran:

"Teheran, Persia, May 1, 1896.—To Olney, Secretary of State, Washington: Shah, visiting shrine near city to-day for devotion, on entering inner sanctuary, was shot by assassin disguised as woman, bullet entering region of heart. Expired in a few minutes. Regicide revolutionary fanatic. Great distress, but city quiet."

Shortly after the receipt of the news of the assassination, Secretary Olney sent a cable message to Minister McDonald, saying that the president directed that sincere condolences be tendered, and abhorrence of the crime expressed to the government of Persia and the family of the shah.

[Nasir ed-Din was born April 24, 1829, and has ruled Persia since 1848, and early began to carry out the plans of his father to extend his possessions into Afghanistan and Beluchistan, but English intervention in 1853 compelled him to sign a treaty to not interfere with internal affairs at Herat. In 1856, however, the Persians invested Herat, and an English army was sent to Persia. The Persians were repeatedly defeated in battle and in 1857 they were compelled to restore Herat. Since then Persia has not attempted to interfere with the "key to India."

In many disputes over the fixing of Persian boundaries the shah uniformly displayed the powers of a diplomat of ability. He cooperated with the English, and in 1881 made satisfactory terms with Russia to protect his dominions from encroaches of the Turkomans. The Indo-European telegraph system was made possible by the shah's friendliness to overland telegraphic communication.

The magnificence of this monarch's court and traveling retinues was always the subject of much discussion. He was classed as a despot and a true aristocrat. But travel in Europe and affiliation with great Englishmen gained for him the reputation of being a very shrewd ruler.]

Tiflis, May 4.—Immediately after the death of the shah the heir apparent (valiahd) Muzaffer Ed-Din was proclaimed shah. Russia and Great Britain recognized Muzaffer Ed-Din as heir to the Persian throne in 1858. The grand vizier will govern until the arrival of the new shah at Teheran from Tabriz.

A WONDERFUL SHOW.

Gov. Morton Opens the National Electrical Exposition at New York.

New York, May 5.—The national electrical exposition was formally opened Monday night in the Grand Central palace. There were delegates present from over 1,000 electric light plants in the United States. The introductory speech was made by C. H. Wilmerding, president of the National Electric Light association. Mr. Wilmerding introduced Mayor Wurster, of Brooklyn, as chairman of the meeting. At the conclusion of a few remarks the chairman introduced ex-Senator and Commodore Perry Vedder, who made an address on the "Electric Era."

Gov. Morton was next introduced to the meeting. He was received with the greatest enthusiasm. In a brief address the governor declared the exposition duly opened, at the same time pressing the golden key which was to cause artillery salutes simultaneously at San Francisco, New Orleans, St. Paul, and Augusta, Me. There was great enthusiasm when Gov. Morton pressed the golden key. A few moments afterwards messages were received from San Francisco, New Orleans, St. Paul, and Augusta, Me., stating that the cannon had been fired.

Perhaps the most interesting feature of the exposition was the demonstration of the power generated by the Niagara falls. The current turned a model of the power plant in the building, and by putting a receiver to the ear the visitors were able to distinctly hear the roar of the great cataract, 462 miles away.

FAMOUS BANKER DEAD.

George S. Coe, of New York, Succumbs to a Paralytic Stroke.

New York, May 4.—George S. Coe, for nearly 30 years president of the American exchange bank of this city, died at his home at Englewood Cliffs, N. J., Sunday morning. The immediate cause of his death was paralysis, of which disease he had had several strokes. Mr. Coe was born in Newport, R. I., on March 27, 1827. For more than 30 years there was no banker in the United States whose opinion was more generally sought or whose judgment on financial subjects was more generally trusted than Mr. Coe's. He was an intimate friend of President Lincoln and Secretary Chase, and during the dark days of the rebellion was frequently summoned to consult with the officers of the administration concerning financial questions of importance. Mr. Coe devised the system of issuing clearing house certificates and this system has been the means of arresting many panics.

MURDER SUSPECTED.

Prominent Citizen of West Superior, Wis., Found Dead.

West Superior, Wis., May 2.—Lewis C. Bratrud, a prominent board of trade man, was found dead on the street at nine o'clock Thursday evening. He was shot through the head. A revolver lay by his side. Three suspicious characters were seen around there shortly before the shot was fired, and it is believed he was murdered. Bratrud was well-to-do, but is reported to have lost heavily on the Chicago board last winter. He came to Superior from Watertown, S. D., three years ago.

What the Census Shows.

Chicago, May 1. — Superintendent Stafford, of the school census bureau, says the returns will not show over 1,500,000 population for Chicago. This does not show any increase over the last census, but this is due to the fact that there was a five per cent. addition to the figures at that time.

That

Extreme tired feeling afflicts nearly everybody at this season. The hustlers cease to push, the tireless grow weary, the energetic become enervated. You know just what we mean. Some men and women endeavor temporarily to overcome that

Tired

Feeling by great force of will. But this is unsafe, as it pulls powerfully upon the nervous system, which will not long stand such strain. Too many people "work on their nerves," and the result is seen in unfortunate wrecks marked "nervous prostration," in every direction. That tired

Feel-

ing is a positive proof of thin, weak, impure blood; for if the blood is rich, red, vitalized and vigorous, it imparts life and energy to every nerve, organ and tissue of the body. The necessity of taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for that tired feeling is, therefore, apparent to every one, and the good it will do you is equally beyond question. Remember that

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, of ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor.) He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

CASTLES.

There's a building boom in Nowhere land—
It's the one that comes each year,
When the spring is new
And the skies grow blue
And the south wind whispers cheer.
With Fancy as architect, we've planned
(His charges are small, but fair)
Improvements great
For each vast estate
And our castle's in the air.

It's only a minute we need to see
The minarets and towers
In beauty rise
'Neath our very eyes
And these treasures all are ours.
Your likes may be fickle and strange and free,
For easily you repair
The wreck that falls
When the old charm palls
In your castles in the air.

When the golden rivers of twilight start
And the scarlet sun sinks low,
It's a journey slight
To that land of light
Where the maybe blossoms blow,
And it's only the friend with the honest heart
Who has followed through ill and fair,
Who can be your guest
As you dream and rest
In your castle in the air.

TRANSPLANTED.

It was the biggest ball of the season, and the assembly room of the fashionable watering place was looking its gayest and brightest, thanks to lavish decoration and the kaleidoscopic effect produced by the throngs of brilliantly dressed dancers as they whirled round in all the infinite variety and picturesque incongruity of fancy costume.

And yet, despite all the life and color, there was something fictitious and unreal in the brilliant gayety of the picturesque scene; just as there was an undertone of passionate pain in the sweet music of the valse which rang through the room, an undertone which seemed strangely out of harmony with the superficial enjoyment of the crowd.

Or was it only the look in a girl's face that was out of keeping, and seemed at once to give the lie to all the hollow pretense of pleasure around her? To one unobserved spectator this idea suddenly occurred with the force of a conviction.

It was a beautiful face, beautiful alike in regularity of feature and exquisite delicacy of coloring. But the smile on the sweet mouth was forced and full of unnatural gayety, while the great gray eyes had a haunting look of weariness which gave them an indescribable pathos. The girl was tall and slight, and the white dress she wore, graceful though it was, seemed almost too rich and elaborate for her slender figure. She was young—scarcely one-and-twenty—and looked even younger than her years; and the man who was watching her drew yet further back into the shadow of the heavily curtained doorway as a flood of memories rushed over him—memories held in check till now by an iron will, but released in a moment by the sight of the beautiful, sad face that was all the world to him, though for four long years it had passed out of his life. How he had missed her! Surely he had never fully realized it till now.

A chance remark arrested his attention. Two men near were talking together, commenting audibly enough on the scene before them.

"How charming Maud Carruthers is looking to-night! That girl grows prettier every time I see her!"

"Is it true that she's engaged to young Melbourne?"

"Wants confirmation, I should say. He's hard hit, and her people approve of him naturally; he's well connected and fabulously wealthy; but as to the fair Maud herself—if she is engaged to him she might look a little more cheerful over it."

"Yes, I shouldn't feel flattered in his place," the younger man assented. "She's not a bit like the other girls one meets about; don't know why, but she seems out of it some how."

"Well, her story is rather an odd one, you know."

"But I don't know more. Where does the oddness come in? Her people are conventional enough."

"Yes; but she never saw them till she was 16 or 17; for her mother married beneath her, and was cut in consequence. The marriage turned out badly, I believe, and Mrs. Carruthers died in Australia, where the child was brought up by the people with whom she was staying at the time; rather a rough and ready bringing up, I fancy."

"Then how does she come to be here, and forgiven?"

"Oh, it all came out somehow; Carruthers died, and then inquiries were made as to the child's whereabouts, and she was transplanted over here; rather a change from her experiences in the bush."

"An agreeable one, I should think."

"H'm, that depends on how you look at it! Now, from her point of view we may be a little tame and commonplace. I don't know anything about it, mind you, but it's just possible she may prefer primitive nature to our enervating and overdone nineteenth century civilization. To my mind the girl looks bored."

"Then if she marries Melbourne—"

"It will merely be to escape from the present position. Since her grandfather's death a year ago, she has found it more wearisome than ever, or I'm much mistaken. She was really fond of poor old Draycourt, but for the rest of them—'Pon my soul, I'm sorry for the girl!"

The music ceased, and the speakers moved away and the long procession of dancers began to pace out into the cooler air of the long, flower-decked corridor.

But the man near them still kept his place in the deep shadow of the curtains, and watched, with eager eyes, to see that tall, white-robed figure pass through the doorway.

But he watched in vain. He had lost sight of her just before the dance ended, and she had no doubt left the ballroom by some other door. From the station he had chosen he could command the whole room, and he soon saw that Maud Carruthers was no longer there.

And to-night he held every moment wasted in which she was out of sight. For the last time—it was for the last time—and already the precious moments were slipping rapidly away!

He must find her again, even though in order to do so he must risk discovery and recognition.

Little risk that she would recognize him after four years, and in such widely different surroundings! His dress, too, with its heavy cloak and broad somber hat, would surely be a sufficient disguise if she should still chance to retain slight recollection of her old friend and would-be brother; the man under whose roof all her happy childhood had been passed.

And even if she did know him, what then?

He was surely capable of keeping his secret still, as he had kept it in the old days. She was little likely to guess it now in all the pride of her triumphant youth and beauty; now when so many younger, richer men were at her feet. Oh, he knew his place! And he smiled grimly to himself. Had not her self-complacent relations been careful to point it out to him—most considerately, no doubt—four years ago? Certainly, there was little likelihood of his forgetting now. No, there could be no real risk in the meeting should they chance to meet. No possible risk for her, and for himself—he would gladly give the ten best years of his life just to hear her voice again; just to meet her gray eyes once more with the old frank smile in them that he knew so well. No possible risk—no; he had been a fool and coward ever to think of it; and his resolution to keep out of her way—the resolution that he had thought so wise and so good—was entirely foolish and unnecessary. She need never know the reason of his brief visit "home." Why should not he have business in England as well as another man; and how should she suspect the mad desire to see her face to face once more that had brought him from the other side of the world?

Thus thinking—if, indeed, the rapid stream of recollections, suggestions and reassuring convictions that rushed through his mind could rightly be dignified with the name of thought—he strode boldly out into the corridor; a noticeable figure enough from his commanding stature and grand breadth of shoulder. Many eyes followed him as he passed between the banks of flowers with which the wide corridor was lined on either side, and many were the speculations as to who he was, and why he was at the ball; since he spoke to no one, and nobody seemed to know him. But he passed on, unconscious alike of admiring eyes and fruitless speculation.

Meantime Maud had suffered her partner to lead her to a wide window seat at the farther end of the corridor from that where her old friend was seeking her. The girl's face looked strangely pale now that the flush dancing brought to it had died away; and there was an expression of something very like despair in her wide gray eyes as she listened to her companion's eager words.

"You know you promised me my answer to-night, Maud, and we mayn't have such a chance again. No one has found out this corner yet; but it won't escape the observation of the crowd long. I've waited patiently, and haven't bothered you a bit, and now—at last—time's up. You won't ask me to wait any longer?" A look of sudden dismay clouded the boyish brightness of his face as he spoke, but only for a moment.

"No, I won't ask you to wait any longer;" the girl's words came slowly, and with an evident effort; "but—why do you want me to say yes, when you know that I don't care for you? No, hear me out," as he would have interrupted her. "I like you, but I don't care for you in that way, and I never shall."

"But you will, Maud; you must when you see how awfully fond I—"

"No, I never shall, I know. If you insist on marrying me, you shall at least do it with your eyes open, Mr. Melbourne."

"Oh, don't speak to me like that!"

"But I feel to you like that, and I must speak as I feel. Feel!" with swift self-scorn. "What have I to do with feeling at all? If I marry you it will be to escape from my present life; to get away from myself—from the everlasting, purposeless round of dances and dinners. I have told you this before."

"Yes, and I have told you that I love you."

"And yet you don't hesitate?"

"For myself, no." He was silent a moment, a look of most unusual indecision on his face. "But you put things differently to-night," he said, at length. "You say you know you shall never care for me. I don't see how you can know that unless—"

"Unless—?" she faced him bravely, though a sudden flush showed she already grasped his meaning.

"You care for some one else," he said, very deliberately. "Do you, Maud?"

Did she?

For a moment he thought she was going to break into indignant denials, then all at once her face softened and changed, and the light of a wonderful joy flashed into it as she sprang to her feet, exclaiming:

"Denzil! At last!"

Young Melbourne turned in astonishment. Who was this stately-looking man that Maud should go to meet him with outstretched hands of welcome and brilliant, rapturous smile?

No matter who he was, the boy felt that his question was answered. He took his dismissal quietly, and left them without a word; nor did anyone see him again that night.

And Denzil?

At the sight of Maud's eager eyes, and sweet, well-remembered smile, he forgot all his stern resolutions and carefully-cultivated convictions. He had never even dreamed of the possibility of such a meeting as this, and the glad recognition that rang in her voice fairly swept him off his feet, strong, self-contained man though he was.

For she loved him; he saw it in her eyes, heard it in her voice, knew it at last—astonishing, well-nigh impossible fact though it was; and this being so, nothing could come between them; no proud, disdainful relations could part them any more, and when Denzil Claxton returned to Australia after his brief visit was over, his wife accompanied him, and great was the wrath and indignation among the Draycourts, who had tried so hard to make her in all respects one with themselves, only to fail so signally at the last!

But Maud was happy, and once back again among Denzil's people, and all the congenial associations of the past, she soon regained the bright serenity and sunny sweetness of nature which she had well-nigh lost in that alien land, to which unkind fate, and Denzil's stern sense of duty, had for a time transplanted her.—Household Words.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

The Encampment.

The early predictions of a large attendance at the 30th National Encampment, G. A. R., in St. Paul, during the first week in September, are being verified every day, although the encampment is four months in the future.

The state departments are represented in St. Paul almost daily, obtaining department headquarters and locating the rank and file, who will come to the Northwest in great numbers.

New England will send an immense turn out of veterans and tourists, Massachusetts expects to send 1,500. Their representative, H. J. Lacey, of Fitchburg, has been there and secured headquarters for this department, and returned home prepared to let loose a broadside of approval of Northwestern people and methods.

Special efforts are being made to secure the attendance of Grand Army posts from states adjoining Minnesota, and also of the Minnesota posts. This important work is in the hands of General R. A. Becker, of St. Paul, who has addressed a preliminary letter to every post in Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota the Dakotas, inviting and urging a large turn out from every Grand Army post in the Northwest.

Red Lake Pine Lands.

July 1 is the date of sale of Red Lake pine lands in the Duluth district, and July 15 as the date of the sale of that portion of land in the Crookston district. This land will be sold at auction in local offices in 40-acre tracts, on the basis of the timber stand thereon, at not less than $3 per thousand feet. No land is to be sold, however, at less than $1.25 per acre.

There are 115,242 acres of land to be sold, on which there are 225,977,000 feet of timber. Of this 3,914 acres, embracing 4,595,000 feet of timber, are in the Duluth district, and the balance in Crookston district. All land will be offered at the time of sale, and such as is not bought at that time will be sold at private sale at any time at the appraised value of the standing timber, and it is expected that some tracts will bring more than the appraised value. The probability is that the Indian fund will be increased to the extent of nearly a million dollars.

Minnesota Appropriations.

The senate commerce committee has completed consideration of the Minnesota item in the river and harbor bill. The appropriation for the St. Croix river is increased from $10,000 to $15,000 and a provision inserted that $10,000 of this amount shall be spent on the harbor at Stillwater. The appropriation for the Red River of the North is increased $10,000, with a provision that portions of it shall be spent on the Red Lake river, between Thief River Falls and its mouth. Other Minneasota items remain unchanged.

Convicted.

The jury at Mankato found a verdict against Alfred C. Roberts, the Jackson photographer who has been selling "spirit" photographs and love powders. Roberts was tried in the United States court on the charge of useing the mail to give information how to obtain obsence pictures. He was sentenced to two years at Stillwater, and to pay a fine of $100.

Wonderland '96.

Such is the name of a book issued by the Northern Pacific railroad, picturing the country, the cities, resorts and game found along the line of the road. The work is of a practical nature, but presented in such shape that it is as interesting as a good story. It is a model of typography, and any one can have it if they will pay 6 cents postage.

News in Brief.

Fremont Perkins, of Royalton, attempted to commit suicide, stabbing himself twice in the left breast with a pocket knife. He is 22 years old and single. The chances are against his recovery.

Herman Loefker, of Lakefield, on his way home from town, attempted to cross the Sioux river on the commonly used bridge. The bridge was gone and both horses were drowned.

The state farm summer school opened the third year with 50 pupils registered. The summer session is especially for the young women, and the most practical of all branches are taught.

Elijah Revenberg was found dead in his barn at Robbinsdale by a member of his family. It is in all probability a case of apoplexy.

The large barn of Henry Schutt, near Lewiston, was struck by lightning, and with its contents, was totally consumed.

Some boys playing ball in Minneapolis, discovered quite a sum of counterfeit money in the hollow of a decayed oak tree. The ball had rolled into the tree, and a fielder in reaching into the tree for the ball, found a stack of silver dollars. There were $20 in all, and the boys at once took the money to the North Side police station, where it was pronounced bad.

T. B. Walker has purchased the machinery for a steamer to be built for use on Red Lake, and will construct the boat at once.

The body of Orio Billings was found in Linden township, 12 miles from Lake Crystal, he having been thrown from a wagon and his neck broken.

John Becker, a farmer who resides northwest of Pipestone, was fatally wounded by the accidental discharge of a gun he was carrrying upon a sulky plow while plowing.

The dry goods store of Ed. Warren, of Vernon Center, was broken into and $40 worth of jewelry, besides other articles, taken.

Lightning struck the barn of Iver Bendjord, of Bandon, burning the barn, 16 head of cattle and 45 hogs. The barn was partly insured. No insurance on cattle or hogs.

Prof. Hult, principal of the Wells schools, has been arrested for the alleged inhuman flogging of one of the boys in his charge. The boy is clamed to have been given over 30 lashes with a rawhide. The principal claims to have inflicted only what punishment was necessary.

The Itasca Lumber Company will build a lumber broad gauge road from the old line at Deer river to a point nine miles north. It is reported that the road is the nucleus of something larger and may strike the Red River valley next year.

Ole H. Blom was appointed postmaster at Hagan, Chippewa county, vice James H. Johnson, resigned.

The house of John McGrath at Sauk Rapids was burned. Loss $500.

Four men were seriously burned by the explosion of gas in the basement of the grocery store of Christopher & Haines, of Minneapolis.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

—A good authority on horses says that the gray will live the longest, and that the roans come next in order. Blacks seldom live to be over 20, and creams rarely exceed 10 or 15.

—Cut flowers will keep very fresh if a small pinch of common saltpeter is put in the water in which they stand. The ends of the stem should be cut off a little every day to keep open the absorbing pores.

—One of the six graduating students of the West Penn medical college blew out the gas in a hotel bedroom in Pittsburgh, Pa., the other day. All six students were sleeping in the room and all came very near being asphyxiated.

—A Buluwayo (South Africa) paper recently contained the following item: "In consequence of our local baker departing suddenly from our midst, regretted by his friends, except his creditors, Buluwayo has been without bread the greater part of the week."

—The French language contains 13 per cent. of useless letters. There are 6,800 journals published in the language, and they print 108,000,000,000 letters every year, so that 14,040,000,000 letters are useless, simply because they have ceased to be used in the French language as it is spoken.

—At a recent sale of the assets of a riding academy in New York city the saddle horses brought an average of less than $30 apiece. This is said to be the lowest price on record for horses of this description, and the fact was generally noted that in New York the market value of a horse is lower than that of a bicycle.

—The ceremonies at the creation of knights have been various. The principal was a box on the ear and a stroke with a sword on the shoulders by a sovereign prince. They put on him a shoulder belt and a gilt sword, spurs and other military accouterments, after which, being armed as a knight, he was led to the church with great pomp.

ANCIENT JEWELRY.

The Early Egyptians Were More Artistic Than Their Descendants.

Among the richest of recent archaeological discoveries are those afforded by the opening of the two brick pyramids at Dashur on the Nile, the most southerly of the great chain of Memphian pyramids, and of some of the ancient tombs surrounding them. The explorers found that the tombs had long ago been plundered of most of the gold and jewels buried with the royal personages for whom they were constructed. Fortunately, however, some of those precious relics had escaped the plunderers, being carefully concealed in the tombs of some princesses situated on the north side of one of the pyramids.

Here were unearthed three splendid breast ornaments, beautifully worked in gold, set with cornelian, lapis lazuli and turquoise, and covered with human figures and the curious insignia employed by the ancient Egyptians.

Nothing, perhaps, gives a greater interest to these specimens of jewelry than the fact that they are far more beautiful and artistic in their workmanship than similar objects made by the Egyptians at a much later time. Although they are not less than 5,000 years old, these Dashur jewels are set and finished in a manner that excites the admiration of our 19th century experts.

Not less wonderful as a specimen of the artistic skill of the men who constructed the pyramids is a statue representing the king, Ra-Fou-Ab, at the age of about 16 years, which was found in a chamber near the sarcophagus containing his mummified body. The statue is carved out of a hard, almost black wood, with great attention to detail, every muscle being carefully wrought, so that anatomical experts have pronounced it a remarkably correct representation of the human figure.

It is believed that many other not less interesting discoveries remain to be made among the tombs of Dashur.—Youth's Companion.

Coiffure Ornaments.

Some of the new Parisian novelties in hair mounts are very beautiful—off the head at least. A bunch of luscious scarlet cherries is attached to a gold pin that is to be thrust through the knot at the back of the head, letting the cherries droop slightly just above and behind the ear. Fruit in the hair, however, under any guise of enamel and metal, is not to be commended. Its incongruity is obvious. We have accepted it on our bonnets, where its use is less distasteful than the plumage of murdered birds, but in the coiffure the association is not acceptable. French women regard their hair ornaments with great attention and take as much care to suitably complete the coiffure toilet as that of the corsage. Steel, jet, gilt and silver ornaments are especially suited to dark hair. Fair-haired women could wear amber and clear tortoise shell. For evening wear, jeweled ornaments are properly much worn. Except against a beautiful neck there is no part of a woman's toilet where gems may be so well displayed as in the hair. —St. Louis Republic.

Small Fruit Salad.

The salad is made by stripping the fruit from the stalks and piling it high on a dish and sprinkling it over with powdered sugar. This may be done with strawberries, raspberries, currants or any small fruits mixed. After the sugar is well dissolved, cover over all six large tablespoons of wine or brandy, or three tablespoons of liquor, and when the flavor is all that is desired, a little powdered cinnamon should be added. In keeping to this salad, the fruit should be lightly stirred, so that wine and sugar should be equally distributed. Any of these fruits can be made into a palatable dish separately or together, as taste dictates.—Boston Globe.

Baked Indian Pudding.

Scald three cupfuls of milk, pour it over three tablespoonfuls of Indian meal, add one-third of a cupful of molasses, one-half cupful of sugar, one beaten egg, one-half teaspoonful each of ginger and cinnamon, a little salt and butter the size of an English walnut. Mix thoroughly, put in a buttered dish, set in the oven. In half an hour pour in a cupful of cold milk. Bake two hours and a half. Serve with maple sugar sauce, which is made like maple sauce, using one-half cupful of grated maple sugar, or brown sugar, without flavoring.—Good Housekeeping.

AH CHOW'S MISTAKE.

Took the Trolley for the Steam Railway Train.

Ah Chow, a Chinaman with a limited knowledge of this country, its ways and its language, started from Berkley, Cal., to ride the few miles into San Francisco, recently. He had been instructed where to take the train; but he made a mistake, and instead of boarding the regular steam railroad train he took an electric car that passed the same corner. It happened to be a car of the loop line that runs between Berkeley and Oakland, going one route and returning another. He made the complete circuit once, but made no effort to get off the car. The conductor thought the scenery charmed the celestial, so said nothing, but collected his fare a third time as the car went on its second trip to Oakland. Eight times Ah Chow made the circuit of the line, paying his nickel with cheerfulness every time the conductor asked for fare. Then at the end of the eighth trip the conductor called a policeman and Ah Chow was taken before a police judge for examination as to his sanity. The interpreter in the court soon discovered the reason of Ah Chow's peculiar doings, and with the court's permission accompanied him to San Francisco.

NO TASTE FOR FLESH.

How the Study of Animal Life Affected One Naturalist.

A man who has made a careful study of the habits of animals and birds, and who firmly believes that birds think and are controlled by brain action in a great measure—about, if not quite as much as human beings, and not by the "overrated instinct"—told a few nights ago of the odd effect natural history had on him.

"Do you know," said he, "that since I learned that birds and mammals think, I have had a sort of spleen against flesh? When I eat a partridge I think of the bird's wiles used in its endeavors to escape the hunter's merciless shot. It is the same with the ducks, turkeys, deer and beeves, and all other flesh, but not fish. I have the dread, or feeling, that I am eating a rational being. I think that if vegetarianism ever becomes universal, it will be when we understand the thoughts of birds and mammals and are able to converse with them. We are just now entering on a wonderful field of research. We have found the door to real natural history knowledge, and we are now groping for the keyhole."

Cruel Examiners.

A reporter for the Cincinnati Tribune lately overheard a dialogue between two suburban gentlemen.

"How did your daughter pass her examination for a position as teacher?" asked the first man.

"Pass!" was the answer. "She didn't pass at all. Maybe you won't believe it, but they asked that poor girl about things that happened before she was born."

All Getting Into the Band Wagon.

An official letter from President Dobbin of the Union Veterans' League, announces the selection of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad as the official route of that society to the Republican convention at St. Louis.

Word has just been received that the entire North Dakota delegation has arranged to go on the same line. Already delegates and clubs from Minnesota are securing their accommodations for the trip. As this is the shortest and quickest line, and only road to St. Louis with dining car service, there is practically no other in the field. Cheap excursion tickets will be sold. W. L. Hathaway or E. A SHINING EXAMPLE of what may be accomplished by never varying devotion to a single purpose is seen in the history of the McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., Chicago. For 65 years they have simply been building grain and grass-cutting machinery, and while there are probably forty manufacturers in this line, it is safe to say that the McCormick Company builds one-third of all the binders, reapers and mowers used throughout the entire world.

DELANO DIARY

—Around the World in 80 minutes at the City Hall, Saturday evening, May 9.

—Able bodied men who used a barn belonging to a poor, lone widow woman should remove the manure from the premises and not leave it for her to do.

—The I. O. G. T. Lodge of Delano will hold a "toe sociable" at the City Hall, Friday night. Ice Cream and Cake will be served. Everybody invited.

—The school board hired Prof. C. S Hawker and Miss Quinn for next year, at the Saturday evening meeting. The other places have not yet been filled: We understand that several of the old teachers will not apply.

—Many Delanoites were surprised to learn from the city dailies that Duane Chapel had been sent to the Insane Asylum at St. Peter, from the jail at Minneapolis. No one expected this, though Duane was considered queer.

—Street Commissioner Belt can manipulate the new road scraper like an old hand, and did some fine work on our highways this week. Good level, smooth streets beat side,walks with nails and other obstructions, all to pieces, for bicycles.

—Lower River Street which we have had occasion to visit, several times lately, reminds us of our trip among the southern cities last fall. The windows and yards are filled with fine flowers, but the nice green grass is away a head of anything we seen in the south, and the balmy air is equal to any southern breezes.

—Farmers wishing to haul manuer should get at it at once as the village authorities have ordered the alleys cleaned on the 14th inst. There is at present a number of fine loads that would be of use to some one near town and the roads are dry enough now to haul it with little trouble.

—We believe the employment of another man or two on the corps of teachers, in the schools, would have the effect of making some of the boys more manly. If the education of boys is to be entirely turned over to the tender mercies of the gentler sex, and the scholars copy after the teachers how are we to keep the coming men from being womanish men?

—Send for Press Bulletine No. 7, to the University Experiment Station, St. Anthony Park, Minn. and you will get an interesting article on "Azoturia" the disease that carried off several fine horses in this part of the country in the past few years. To prevent Azoturia don't grain your horses too high while they are idle, and don't work too hard until they have been used awhile.

—Two men,. Messers Ritter and Green, of St. Paul, started out to sell patent medicine from house to house, in this village, one day last week when the City Marshall took them before Recorder Johns and they were told that they must pay a fine or take out a license. It was finally arranged that they should have a license, for half a day, for $2. The $2 was paid to the recorder, and the license, signed by him, given to them. They proceeded to the Mayors office with the license for the signature of His Honor, I. Gutzwiller Jr. this they could not get, so returned to the Recorder for their money; but he would not return it to them. This is no way to carry on Village business. If the men had broken the ordinance they should have been fined in the first place. Boy's play is apt to get officials into trouble, and these men talk of seeing what they can do about it.

County Cullings.

It is not true that the free coinage sentiment in this country is dying out, politicians and conventions to the contrary notwithstanding.—Buffalo Journal.

The greatest contest now on in this country is between the politicians and the people. Unless the people maintain their honesty and integrity there is no escape from national ruin.—Buffalo Journal.

Democracy does not seem to have life enough left in Wright county to put out a convention call. Outside exchanges are publishing the calls, giving the representations the counties are entitled to at and State convention and local announcements but here the few that are left appear to be very indifferent on the matter.—Howard Lake Herald.

From the X Rays in the Buffalo Journal we presume that Hon. A. Y. Eaton is growing wonderfully liberal, all to once. He thought Bob Dunn never would do for State Auditor, during the last campaign, but now he says "State Auditor Dunn has thus far made the best record of any State Auditor this state ever had." A short time ago, Congressman Towne, simply stood no show at all, at all, with A. Y. Now he says: "Town will be re-elected by a greatly increased majority." It must be that the Hon. A. Y. has concluded that while on his evolution route to the halls of Congress he will have to pass through a term of the District Judgeship of the 4th Judicial District. It looks a "letle" like it.

—Fair Day, to-morrow, May 9.

Ice cream To-night, at City Hall.

The county commissioners are beginning to find out that the new court house is an elephant in cost of maintenance. The taxpayers of the county may in time come to reget that the cost of the structure was not confined within the original appropriation of $1,500,000 for both the county and city sides.—Minneapolis Tribune.

From Jail to an Insane Asylum.

Duane Chapple, a Wright county prisoner confined in the Hennepen county jail on a criminal charge, was examened for insanity before Judge Russell in the criminal branch of the dishrict court yesterday and committed to the asylum at St. Peter.—Minneapoli's Tribune.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

BY THE WRIGHT COUNTY W. C. T. U.

Encouragement From the South.

Lou J. Beauchamp the famous temperance and Prohibition orator of Hamilton Ohio has the following to say to the prohibition workers. "No section of our country offers such hope of great returns from an investment of speeches and literature as the South. It has been neglected too long. There are conditions prevailing there that prevail in no other part of our country, and these conditions are altogather favorable to our cause. The effect on public morals and on taxation, as on legitimate business, of the large area in the South set free from drink by Local Option, is making men believe that limited gains for good need only unlinited territory set free from drink to bring unlimited gains; that a state or a nation, free from the curse, would result in benefits to the body social and politic, in almost cubic proportion over simply here and there a county free.

The better element rules in the South. There is no power in the slums. The whisky-seller is not a political boss. The gambler and the wonton do not flaunt their rottenness in the gaze of the public. They are proscribed by public opinion, as by law, and if they ply their trade at all, it is in constant fear and trembling, and in the most secret way. Such public sentiment as this is easy to build up to even higher things, and can be so built if the work be wisely done.

"The recent tour of Frances E. Willard was a revelation to the people of the South, as it even was to some of those who believe as does this queenliest of uncrowned woman. In no city of the South were the churches or halls large enough to hold her audiences, made up as they were of the leading people, who found out from the wonderful addresses of this wonderful woman that the temperance reform had forever passed out of the control of 'long-haired men and short-haired woman,' and was now represented by reformers who could stand with the giants of the ages.

"I can testify to one thing sure, and that is the South, like the North, is tired of the rule of the demagog and the demijohn.

"Without attempting to take sides as between the 'one idea' or the broad platform, I would unhesitatingly say that our work in the South must be against the saloon only. 'The Solid South' is against the grog-shop. Georgia, with nearly one hundred counties free; Tennessee just beginning a movement that will cover and capture the whole state; Mississippi with only 15 counties wet; Arkansas with 43 counties without a saloon, are simply samples of what the sentiment of the South is tending toward—the absolute overthrow of the traffic. The weak points of Local Option are thoroughly understood, and the people do not accept it as a finality, but as a means toward an end. They are looking higher, and can be won to the only sure plan, but not by a fight for or against free trade or free silver, a protective tariff or the gold standard. The South can be won for 'Home Protection,' pure and simple, and the speakers who go there must understand this.

THE New York World

Thrice-a-week Edition

18 PAGES A WEEK. 156 PAPERS A YEAR.

Is larger than any weekly or semi-weekly paper published and is the only important Democratic "weekly" published in New York City. Three times as large as the leading Republican weekly of New York City. It will be of especial advantage to you during the Presidential Campaign, as it is published every other day, except Sunday, and has all the freshness and timeliness of a daily. It combines all the news with a long list of interesting departments, unique features, cartoons and graphic illustrations, the latter being a specialty.

All these improvements have been made without any increase in the cost, which remain at one dollar per year.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and the BUFFALO GAZETTE together one year for $1.75

DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION.

To Select Delegates to National Convention.

In conformity with a resolution adopted by the Democratic State Central Committee at a meeting of said committee held on the fifth day of March, 1896, the Democrats of the State are called to meet in delegate convention in the Market Hall, in the city of St. Paul, on THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 1896, at 11 A. M., to elect eighteen delegates to represent the Democracy of Minnesota in the National Democratic Convention to be held in Chicago, Illinois, July 7, 1896; also to nominate nine presidential electors.

The representation will consist of two delegates from each county and one additional from each one hundred and fifty votes or major fraction thereof cast for the Democratic candidate for president in 1892.

Upon this computation the several counties of the state will be entitled to representation in said convention to the number of delegates indicated as follows:

The Bee's Poor Sting.

Last week we alluded to the claim of Editor Rosewater, of the Omaha Bee, to the $100. offered by "Coin" to the person exhibiting a newspaper giving an account of the demonetization of silver at the time the bill was on its passage. It turned out about as we expected. We clip from the Penny Press a letter received in reply to an inquiry made by them of Mr. Harvey, as follows:

"The Patriots of America, National Executive Department, 202 Washington Boulevard, Chicago, May 4, 1896.

Editor Penny Press, Minneapolis:

My Dear Sir: I am in receipt of your letter of April 30, in reply will say:

When I spoke in Omaha, I said just what I said in your city, when speaking there, that there was nothing in the newspapers of February, 1873, that disclosed to the people, that silver had been demonetized. In your city, I read from the Tribune the four lines that did appear in the dispatches in February, 1873. In Omaha I simply referred to the fact that there was nothing that disclosed such news, either that silver was demonetized or its legal character taken from it. The Bee printed the four lines that I refer to above, which state that the amended mint bill has passed congress, and on the strength of that, played its cheek for the balance, and claimed the reward.

You will understand the matter better when I tell you that the Bee is the Associated Press Agent at Omaha.

Sincerely, W. H. HARVEY."

List of Patents.

G. Flood, Cokato, Price-scale. G. Hicks, Warsaw, Combined currycomb and singeing device. S. O. Jones, Stillwater, Bicycle-pedal. E. H. Probstfield, Moorhead. Mechanism for distributing power. E. H. Turner, Minneapolis, Truck platform for handling heavy articles.

Southern California.

To any person desiring information regarding Southern California, a beautifully illustrated booklet descriptive of the fairest portion of this semitropic region will be mailed free. Address: Observer, Ontario, Calif.

AMONG the most interesting and instructive periodicals received by us is the Observer, published at Portland, Conn. by E. F. Biglow. Many Copies should be taken in this State.

THE decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the California Fig Syrup Co. against Fredrich Stearns rendered April 14, 1896, in favor of defendant ends an important case that has been pending for about six years. Stearns claims that "just a suspicion of fig juice has been put into the preparation". He also claims that "The decision of the courts in the Syrup of figs case virtually outlaws the patent or propriety medicine business. If Syrup of Figs is a fraud upon the public so is any other patent medicine seeking to create a demand by lying advertisements.

TARIFF IS A TAX, and the Republicans appear to be foolish enough to again try to make the people believe they should shoulder a bigger share, by accepting McKinley and his protection theories. Of course this argument may go in the east, and keep Wall Street, and its friends, in line, if the money question can be kept quiet. But out west the money question is bound to loom up, and in free silver districts, like the Sixth, Congressman Towne and his colleagues, will be allowed to run, if they will talk on the silver question alone, and hold their followers in line for the G. O. P. Where gold standard has a chance, a thorough going gold standard man will talk for his theory and try to get himself and the G. O. P. into power. But the people are waking up. They can see daylight through some of these tricks, and they are going to send a mixed mess of Congressmen so far as party names go, and the party that adopts free silver has a chance to elect a president.

Your Uncle's Speeches.

Freeman P. Lane and others have, according to the Penny Press, been looking up the Congressional record of Congressman Fletcher and find during one session two lone speeches, exactly alike, to his credit. Whether or not "Your Uncle" read the speeches or delivered them off hand don't appear. We give the two in one, as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, I move we do now adjourn."

The Political Outlook.

The political atmosphere is still quite foggy. In National affairs no man can tell what a day may bring forth. No party seems to be thoroughly settled as to what platform they will have, or as to who their candidate for President will be. One party appears to be as badly off as another. There are protective tariff Republicans and protective tariff Democrats. There are goldbugs, silver bugs and straddle bugs in all parties; and there is an uncommonly large number of voters without a party. Men have begun to read, and to think for themselves. They are finding out that their ownbrains are as reliable, and as honest, to say the least, as those of most of their would-be teachers. Voters have learned a valuable lesson. They have become acquainted with the fact that their individual conscience is not to rest easy after they have blindly voted against their country's and their own best interests; and that individual consciences must rest easy, or the whole country be in a turmoil. They are now investigating for themselves, reading both sides, studying the questions of the day, and voting for their convictions. They are not apt this year to be inveigled into voting for what someone tells them, unless they can clearly see that it will be right.

Speakers are sent from "down east" or from "Wall Street" or some other foreign land, to "educate" us; to tell us how to vote. They know, and care very little about our interests. It's our votes they want.

It seems to us, from what we can gather that the inteligent public of Minnesota, with few exceptions, outside of the old party daily newspapers are for free silver, regardless of international monetary conferences. The people want gold and silver enough to pay for what they buy. And they want the tariff cut down to where they will not be obliged to make a lot of millionairs "Down East" or over in "Hold Hingland." The people know what they want, and the gold bugs know what they want; and it remains to be seen who will win.

The people are aroused to the fact that the money question is at issue. Be at the primary election and do your part toward selecting delegates to work for your views.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 8, 1896.

The firm of Platt and Quay, President-makers, has dissolved partnership. Mark Hanna fried so much fat out of the expect-to-be protected manufacturers that he drove them out of business and captured the prize for his man, McKinley—the St. Louis convention will only be a sort of ratification meeting. Probably just to show his versatility Mr. Platt is trying the same tactics by which he made such a miserable failure four years ago. Then he tried to use Blaine to prevent the nomination of Harrison; now he is trying to use Harrison to prevent the nomination of McKinley. But Quay isn't helping him. If Quay was compelled to choose between the devil and Harrison he would vote for his satanic majesty any time, and Reed is of the same mind in that respect. But there is every reason to believe that Quay has had an understanding with McKinley all the time, and that he is doing any worrying over the situation. It is said that Platt accuses Quay of treachery toward both himself and Reed, and that Reed is inclined to take the same view.

Senator Hill has during the present session proven himself to be one of the most dangerous men in the Senate to tackle in a running debate. The last man to discover this was Senator Wolcott, of Colo., who tried to rescue Senator Pettigrew, of S. Dak., from the ridicule which Senator Hill was heaping on him by reading newspaper extracts of the humiliating experience he had at the republican convention of his State. After sarcastically referring to Wolcott as "this sensitive Senator" and "this defender of decency", and asking where he was when Pettigrew was abusing Senators and the President, Mr. Hill exclaimed: "And where was my friend —my English friend from Colo., who has tributes for English statesmen, English soldiers, English policies and everything English, but not one word for an American policy or a United States citizen?"

Republican stump speakers during the coming campaign should not be allowed to overlook a few remarks made this week in the House by chairman of the House Finance Committee, Representative Cannon, of Ill. Mr. Cannon said that by its enormous appropriations this Congress was mortgaging the future receipts of the government to the extent of $100,000,000, which meant that the next administration would have to borrow money just as this one has had to do, no matter what sort of tariff law may be enacted. Mr. Cannon spoke a truth that cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of the voters who must choose between republican extravagance and democratic economy.

Sergeant-at-Arms Bright, of the Senate, is regarded as good authority on things Congressional. When he was asked what time thought Congress would adjourn he replied: "If not by the first of June then not until the first of October." The general impression around the Capitol is that adjournment will take place on or near the first named date, although the House has adopted a resolution naming May 18.

Representative Kleburg, of Texas, who was this week sworn in as the successor of the late Representative Crain, takes no stock in the gold standard democrats to secede from the party in that State. He says on the subject. "The movement on the part of a number of gold standard democrats to secede from the party in Texas is to be deplored, and I regard their course as very unwise. I am pronounced in my views on the money question, and have combatted the free silver doctrines to the best of my ability My district is almost solid for sound money, and yet none of my free silver friends abstained from voting for me because of my views on finance. I recognize the right of the majority to govern, and that is the general sentiment of the voters of Texas. We have issues of higher importance than the money question. That issue ought not and will not divide the democracy. There is no other party to which our people can turn. We are not ready to embrace the wild schemes of the populists, and after all these years of contending with the republicans we do not now propose to surrender to them. But there is no cause for alarm about Texas. The democracy is safe and will give the Chicago nominees the biggest vote of any state in the Union."

One of the amusing incidents of the republican campaign for that nomination is the trotting out at this late day, when McKinley looks a sure winner, of Speaker Reed's war record, which, by the way, was not very sanguinary. He was acting assistant paymaster in the navy from April 1864 to November 1865, and was attached to the Mississippi squadron. The amusing part of the record is the attempt to credit Reed with the achievements of that squadron, which he had about as much to do with directing as one of the "powder monkeys."

An order extending the Civil Service rules to all branches of government service has been issued.

CHALLENGE TO CARLISLE.

Ex-Congressman Bryan Wants Him to Answer His Own Financial Arguments of 1878.

OMAHA, May 7.—The following communication has been sent to Secretary Carlisle at Washington:

OMAHA, Neb., May 7, 1896.

Hon. John G. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury.

Dear Sir: You have changed your position upon the paramount public issue and are now defending a financial policy which you once denounced.

The advocates of free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1 admit your right to change your opinion, but contend that you owe it to the public to answer the arguments which you yourself made in 1878 before attempting to answer the arguments of others.

In 1878 you denounced the conspiracy to distroy silver as a "gigantic" crime. Did you ever withdraw that language before entering the Cabinet?

You then said that the consummation of the scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilence and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world. Do you now think the free coinage of silver could do any more damage than that?

Your record challenges you to joint debate. Will you accept? Are you willing to take up your speech of 1878 and answer it, one proposition at a time? If you are, you will silence those who doubt your motives. If you are not willing to face your own arguments and overcome them, you cannot complain if your opponents adopt the philosophy of Shakespeare and attribute your cowardice to a guilty conscience. Your truly, W. J. BRYAN.

Demonetization.

"Words are inadequate to describe the profoundity and criminality of this scheme. It was carried into effect by the act of February 18, 1873. It was done by a turn of Shylock's wrist, so adroit, and one might say devilish, as to be indescribable in the phraseology of this world. It was an act on which no king of the seventeenth century would have ventured without incurring the risk of revolution. It was an act which, instead of being misrepresented by those who have found it out and nailed it to the gibbet of public contempt, has never been adequately denounced. It was an act which has positively blackened the honor of the American republic. It was an act which, though subsequently defended, even to the present day, by all the purchased ability of the world, is nevertheless condemned by the conscience and common sense of mankind as the most cold-blooded, unjust, uncalledfor, unmitigated and damnable outrage ever done in this century to the rights and interests of a great people!"—John Clark Ridpath, Febuary Arena.

Azoturia.

Dr. M. H. Reynolds says, in his bulletin on the subject of Azoturia, that the well fed and little exercised horse is subject to it. As several valuable animals have died from it in this vicinity within a few years, every horse-owner should have a bulletin. Dr. R. gives the following:

Symptoms.—The symptoms appear suddenly with little or no warning and are very uniform. The horse frequently comes out of the stable feeling unusually well, then after going a short distance there is a sudden lameness or stiffness in his hind legs. Sometimes both are affected alike but usually one first and more frequently the left. The horse staggers, is very weak on his hind legs and may fall before he can be unhitched. These patients perspire very freely before and after going down; the muscles over the loins and hips are rigid to the touch, and frequently tender on pressure and may tremble or twitch. The urine is highly colored, varying from red to almost black and is usually increased in specific gravity; i. e. heavier than natural. This abnormal color is due to the presence of the red coloring matter of the blood and voluntary muscles (lean meat), and may be absent in mild cases. The pulse may run up to 60 or 80 per minute (normrl 42 to 48); the temperature may be increased to 102 or 104 (normal 101.5), but in many cases the pulse and temperature vary but little from the normal. The bowels may be normal and the appetite fairly good in mild cases. The skin sensation may be diminished as shown by pricking with a pin. The natural peristaltic action of the intestines may be suppressed, but the bowels will usually vacuate under the influence of an injection or other local irritation. A chronic paralysis affecting one or both hind limbs may be a very troublesome factor in the case."

Send to the University Experiment Station, St. Anthony Park, for Press Bulletin No. 7, Azoturia, and you may save your horses.

McGary Still at It.

MR. EDITOR, I have been looking for good times through my political spectacles so long that my eyes have got sore and now I shall have to anoint my eyes with eye salve in order to gain my former sight.

The farmers are all through seeding, and now comes making garden, planting corn and potatoes. The crops that are in, have a fine healthy growth, for which we farmers are very thankful. But now days it seems that the plain, poor, simple farmer does not cut much of a figure only as a hewer of wood and drawer of water; to pay taxes and play second fiddle in torch light processions, and political campaigns. Would now say that I am divorced from party affiliation, so far as this iniquitous Cleveland, Carlisle and John Sherman administration is concerned.

We are now in the morning of spring. The earrh has put on her coat of green, and the blooming flowers fill the air with sweet fragrance. The refreshing showers are as a sensative touch to old nature, and everything seems full of life and animation. The sweet songsters of the forests have tuned their voices and are singing psalms of praise to the god of nature. Thousands of poor are looking for and expecting work whereby they may earn a few dollars to buy food and raiment for their families while our president at a salary of $50,000. a year is dressed in royal robes and strutting about like a fine feathered peacock. Many of those fellows down at Washington have played on one fiddle string so long they have become experts at the business and to a loyal and a God fearing people they appear like imbeciles; are idiotic and unfit to legislate for a free republic. My indignation, of late, has become so great against many of the leaders and officials of our government —had I the power I would brand them as traitors and hang them to the gibbet. Now days when a man goes to Congress or gets an office he seems to think he owns the country, and they must be submissive to his will. Does not consider he is only a servant of the people (but that's what he is.)

The Lord made the earth and the fullness thereof. Says he made it for man. But many of the highpriests in politics seem to think the Lord only made the earth for their especial benefit. A few days ago the members of the House of Representatives, at Washington, voted to have themselves a private Secretary during vacation of Congress at $100. per month. Seems to me this is a little bit extravagant with the people's money.

There will be a meeting to clean off Lewis' cemetery on Saturday, 23d of this month in the afternoon.

There will be a picnic dinner and speaking in Drake's Grove, on Memorial Day, Stephen B. Howard, of Minneapolis, will be the orator of the day.

There will be a special meeting of Gorden Granger Post, G. A. R. and also, of the W. R. C., on Saturday the 23d, in the afternoon.

BRAVEST BATTLE EVER FOUGHT.

The bravest battle that ever was fought!
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not;
'Twas fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon, or battle shot,
With sword or nobler pen;
Nay, not with eloquent word or thought,
From mouths of wonderful men;

But deep in a walled-up woman's heart—
Of woman that would not yield,
But bravely, silently bore her part—
Lo! there is the battle-field.

No marshaling troops, no bivouac song,
No banner to gleam and wave;
But, oh! the battles they last so long—
From babyhood to the grave.

Yet faithful still as a bridge of stars,
She fights in her walled-up town—
Fights on and on in the endless wars
Then silent, unseen—goes down.

O ye with banners and battle shot,
And soldiers to shout and praise,
I tell you the kingliest victories fought
Were fought in these silent ways.

O, spotless woman in a world of shame,
With splendid and silent scorn,
Go back to God as white as you came,
The kingliest warrior born!

—Joaquin Miller.

Sound money Democrats and free silver Republicans should form a party. What a happy family they'd make.—Duluth News Tribune.

The gold reserve is gradually shrinking again. It now stands at about a hundred and twenty millions. Our gold reserve law is a beauty.—Litchfield Independent.

Rev. Wm. Copp, the grand old Methodist minister, gave up his charge here and left for Northfield Tuesday. The aged Elder is a man of whom two states take great pride in—Indinia and Minnesota. The former for his military work in the war, and the latter for his religious work during the 30 years of peace.—Eden Valley Journal.

Had the honest-money Democrats of Chicago and Illinois made the fight last year that they are now making they would not find the Altgeld-Hinrichsen faction installed in command of the entire state and local organizations. But there is no use in crying for milk that is spilt, and the only thing to do is to make the stoutest fight possible now.—St. Paul Globe.

Congressman Fletcher is beginning to hear from the silver men of his constituency. He was turned down in the Seventh ward last evening in a most effectual style. What troubles those outside of the G. O. P. is the fear lest "Your Uncle" may be defeated for the nomination. Nobody wants that, but wants a chance to knock him out in the election. A straight and courageous free coinage champion will represent this district next time.—Penny Press.

THE latest Chicago method of committing suicide—lying down and turning open the faucet of a full molasses barrel in one's mouth—isn't always available, but it certainly has the merit of distinct originality. Suicides haven't had any original ideas for a good many years.

THE New York World has a sketch of the house of Delmonico, from which it appears that its founder landed in this country half a century ago with only two dollars in his pocket. If the old man were alive and in similar circumstances to-day, he could scarcely buy a toothpick at Delmonico's. This shows how we have progressed.

WORRIED emperors and kings in Europe and Asia, who are surrounded with body guards and find no time for recreation, must envy the president of the greatest nation on the globe, who gets up at four a. m., dons his rough suit, gathers up his fishing tackle and gun and bait, and slips out through the kitchen door and has fun.

AS THE good ship left her pier in New York sobs and wails shook lovely forms and rent the air. Paderewski stood by the rail and was waving his left hand in farewell. His left hand, mind you. What was he doing with his right hand? Gentle reader, Paderewski's right hand was in his inside pocket fondling 280,000 nice, round, honest American dollars.

THE new battle ship Massachusetts reached a speed of 16.15 knots an hour, or .54 of a knot more than the record of her sister ship, the Indiana. The builders secured a big bonus, and the navy received a great addition to its fighting equipment. The Massachusetts is additional proof that American naval architects thoroughly understand their business. What is needed now is men enough to man the new ships.

A WOMAN has a right to share in her husband's title, and this self-evident proposition may have led to the announcement by an amateur contributor to the press that Mrs. Gen. Gun recently gave a luncheon in honor of Mrs. Maj. Sword, who is the guest of Mrs. Rev. Good. The guests were Mrs. Col. Gatling, Mrs. Judge Blackstone, Mrs. Commodore Monitor and Mrs. Prof. Music.

THE elevated railroad people in New York have already suggested building a double-decked eight-tracked system from Harlem to the Battery, and now they propose a bicycle track on top of the second story of the structure and a charge of five cents for a round trip use of the track. This is good as far as it goes, but there should be another roadway on top of the bicycle track for carriages and a topmost path for pedestrians.

HOLMES, the multi-murderer, said before his execution in Philadelphia he could himself see that the osseous part of his head and face were gradually assuming that elongated shape so pronounced in what is called the degenerate head. When a man constantly holds the thought of evil and crime, sooner or later the thought helps to mold his body. The man who continually fears a certain disease is likely some day to show forth the disease. "Think no evil" is coming to be recognized as scientific as well as ethical.

PATRIOTIC people who love and cherish American institutions can well afford to lend a hand and furnish aid to the home-mission workers in every part of the country. The very safety of the republic depends upon Americanizing, educating and Christianizing the millions from Europe and Asia reaching our borders. The value of the quiet work of home missionaries and the labors of American churches to the state and nation has never yet been fully appreciated, even by the thoughtful people. We speak of it in no sectarian sense, but in its effects upon the nation at large.

THE Central American states, Salvador, Nicaragua and Honduras, have at last united under one flag, and will be known as the "Republica Major de Centro America." The consolidated republic will have an area of 103,845 square miles (Honduras 47,090, Nicaragua 49,200 and Salvador 7,255) and a total population of about 1,577,000, in round numbers, as follows: Honduras, 450,000; Nicaragua, 350,000, and Salvador, 777,000. The new republic would have been still stronger had it included Guatemala on the north and Costa Rica on the south. Guatemala, however, has always been hostile to consolidation.

YANKEE ingenuity has even found a way out of that Spanish bastile, Moro Castle. Walter S. Whitcombe, of Springfield, Mass., succeeded in concealing $160 when he was locked up in it. With $80 of it he bought enough rope from his guard to get him into the Gulf of Mexico. There he found a cat boat belonging to the government, which he sold for $60 after being picked up by a vessel and landed in Florida. All the story needs to make it perfect is an amount received for the stolen boat large enough to have made the journey a profitable one. But perhaps $20 is not too much to pay for freedom.

Washington, May 8.—By a vote of 51 to 6 the senate yesterday inaugurated an investigation, to be conducted by the senate committee on finance, into the facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the secretary of the treasury during the last three years. In the house no business of importance was transacted.

Washington, May 9.—In the senate yesterday a bill to prohibit the issue of United States bonds without authority of congress was introduced by Senator Bacon (Ga.). The river and harbor bill was completed with the exception of the item for a deep sea harbor on the Pacific coast. In the house a bill was passed to appropriate $5,000 for the deportation of the Canadian refugee Cree Indians from the state of Montana, and another to provide clerks for the chairmen of regular committees the year round. At the evening session 28 pension bills were passed.

Washington, May 11.—The last paragraph of the river and harbor bill for a deep water harbor at Santa Monica bay, California, was not completed by the senate on Saturday, the entire session being taken up in discussing the item. The house was not in session.

Washington, May 12.—Further discussion of the river and harbor bill occupied the time of the senate yesterday. In the house District of Columbia business was considered.

HOLMES IS HANGED.

Pays the Penalty for the Murder of Pitzel.

An Account of the Arch-Fiend's Last Hours on Earth—His Scaffold Speech—Died Protesting His Innocence.

Philadelphia, May 8.—H. H. Holmes was hanged Thursday morning. The drop fell at 10:12. It was not until 15 minutes later that he was pronounced dead. His neck was not broken by the fall. The marvelous nerve of the man never deserted him to the very end. Even on the scaffold he was probably the coolest person in the solemn assemblage.

Holmes spent the greater part of his last night on earth writing letters. At midnight he went to bed and slept soundly until six o'clock Thursday morning. It took two calls to awaken him. Promptly arising, he received a visit from his spiritual advisers, Fathers Daly and Macpeak, of the Church of the Annunciation. They administered the last sacrament and did not leave him until nearly nine o'clock.

At 10:02 o'clock the sheriff called together the official jury, and after each man had answered to his name and subscribed to the certificate the solemn march to the gallows was begun.

As the gathering stood in silence before the scaffold a murmur came from behind the partition erected immediately back of it. It was the dolorous chant of the two priests, accompanying the doomed man to the scaffold. They were uttering the psalm "Miserere." They mounted the platform. A moment of prayer followed, and then Holmes stepped to the front of the scaffold and, resting his hands on the rail before him, made his statement of innocence. It was received in absolute silence.

Pallid naturally after his incarceration, there was no other evidence of fear or disquiet. He spoke slowly and with measured attention to every word; a trifle low at first, but louder as he proceeded, until every word was distinctly audible.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have very few words to say, in fact I would make no statement at this time except that by not speaking I would appear to acquiesce in life in my execution. I only want to say that the extent of my wrong-doings in taking human life consisted in the deaths of two women, they having died at my hands as the result of criminal operations. I wish also to state, however, so that there will be no misunderstanding hereafter, I am not guilty of taking the lives of any of the Pitzel family, the three children or father, Benjamin F. Pitzel, of whose death I am now convicted and for which I am to-day to be hanged.

"That is all."

As he ceased speaking, he stepped back and kneeling between Fathers Daly and Macpeak, joined with them in silent prayer for a brief minute or two. Again standing he shook the hand of all those about him, and then signified his readiness for the end.

Herman W. Mudgett, better known as H. H. Holmes, was one of the most conspicuous criminals of modern times, and if the "murderer's confessions" which he has written can only partially be believed, he was without a peer as a bloodthirsty demon. His recent ingenious "confession," wherein he claimed to have killed 27 persons, was disproved, partly, at least, by the appearance of several of the so-called victims; but Holmes' object in making the confession was realized—the obtaining of a sum said to be $7,500, and which amount is said to have been settled upon the criminal's 18-year-old son. While the "confessions" have served to increase the sensationalism of the case, the only capital crime for which Holmes had to answer was the killing in this city, on September 2, 1894, of Benjamin Pitzel, his fellow-conspirator. The murder was committed in the dwelling, No. 1316 Callowhill street.

Holmes was captured in Boston, Mass., in the latter part of 1894, by Owen Hanscom, the deputy superintendent of police, upon the strength of a telegram from Fort Worth, Tex., where he was wanted for horse-stealing and for other charges of larceny. At that time officials of the Fidelity Mutual Life association, of Philadelphia, were hot on Holmes' trail for defrauding the concern out of $10,000 in connection with Pitzel's death, the latter being insured for this amount, and as the accused believed horse-stealing to be a high crime in Texas, he voluntarily confessed to Deputy Superintendent Hanscom to the insurance fraud. He did not, for a moment, dream that he was then suspected of the murder of Pitzel, and he came to Philadelphia without requisition papers. He expressed a willingness to be tried here on the conspiracy charge in preference to that of horse stealing at Fort Worth.

Between this time and his trial for conspiracy to defraud the insurance company to which he pleaded guilty, Holmes made many "confessions." Each time he pretended to tell the truth, but he sedulously avoided doing so. Nobody believed what Holmes said about Pitzel, and he would not say anything about the children except that they were all right.

In his many interviews with District Attorney Graham, Holmes persisted that the three missing Pitzel children were with Minnie Williams in London. He even persuaded Mr. Graham to have an advertisement in the shape of a cipher puzzle inserted in a New York paper, for the purpose of bringing Minnie Williams and the little Pitzels back from Europe. The district attorney placed little faith in what Holmes told him, but the "ad" was published as a sort of last and hopeless effort. When the bodies of Nellie and Alice Pitzel were unearthed in Toronto, Holmes denied having killed them. When Howard's charred bones were located in a superannuated stove in Irvington, Ind., Holmes calmly denied any knowledge of the lad's death. When the murders of Minnie Williams and her sister were discovered, Holmes said that Minnie killed Nannie in a jealous frenzy, and he buried the body in Lake Michigan. He vigorously denied having put Minnie to death so as to secure her property. The disappearance of Emily Cigrand was traced to Holmes, but the criminal said he knew nothing of the girl's fate. The partially consumed bones that were found in the Chicago "castle" are known to be those of some of Holmes' victims. About the last time that Holmes was taken to the district attorney's office to "confess," Mr. Graham lost patience with him. Holmes gave a repetition of his picturesque falsehoods. He actually gave the district attorney a veritable "jolly" about the Pitzel family and Minnie Williams being still alive. The scene that ensued was extremely dramatic.

Drowned in a Pond.

Chicago, May 11.—Four persons were thrown into the water by the capsizing of a boat on an ice pond in South Chicago, two of them, Mary Berry and Michael Welsh, were drowned. The others were rescued. The overturning of the boat was due, it is said, to the hilarity of Welsh, who persisted in rocking the craft in fun. He finally gave it too vigorous a lurch and the entire party was tipped into the water.

Fail with Big Assets.

Ottawa, Ill., May 11.—The Schumacher interests at Marseilles, consisting of the Marseilles Land and Water-Power company and the Illinois River Paper company, assigned at noon Saturday. The assets foot up about $750,000, more than double the liabilities.

Provided for His Cremation.

Quincy, Ill., May 11.—Rev. Dr. Charles F. Bradley, the distinguished Unitarian minister and magazine writer, left a will providing for the cremation of his body. The remains will be taken to St. Louis and incinerated with appropriate ceremonies.

Victim of Electricity.

Stillwater, Minn., May 12.—John Peterson, electrician at the Stillwater street railway power house, was killed Monday afternoon while repairing a car. He was changing brushes and had turned on the motor board and touched the pole piece with his hand. The trolley pole was pulled off in an instant, but Peterson had expired.

Two Drowned.

Mountain Lake, Minn., May 12.—While fishing in Bingham lake H. Dickman and Jacob Epp were drowned. Their boat sprung a leak and sunk in 15 feet of water.

A CHALLENGE TO CARLISLE.

Bryan Wants Him to Answer His Own 1878 Arguments.

Omaha, Neb., May 8.—Hon. W. J. Bryan has written a letter to Secretary Carlisle, in which he calls attention to the fact that the secretary has changed his position on the question of finance since 1878, and is now defending a policy which he then denounced. Mr. Bryan challenges Mr. Carlisle to a joint debate, and asks him to take up his speech in 1878 and answer it one proposition at a time. He tells the secretary that if he is not willing to face his own arguments and overcome them, he cannot complain if his opponents adopt the philosophy of Shakespeare and attribute his cowardice to a guilty consclence.

Trenton N. J., May 8.—The democratic state convention held on Thursday adopted a platform favoring the gold standard, opposing free silver, deprecating any attempt to alter the present tariff, favoring strengthening of the navy and coast defenses, commending the administration of President Cleveland, pledging allegiance to the Monroe doctrine and expressing sympathy with Cuban insurgents. The delegates at large to the national convention are United States Senator Smith, Allen McDermott, United States Senator Rufus Blodgett and Albert L. Tallman.

Nashville, Tenn., May 8.—The democratic state convention held here Thursday nominated ex-Gov. Robert L. Taylor for governor by acclamation. A. B. Woodward, Fayetteville, and Columbus Marchbanks, of Chattanooga, were chosen electors for the state at large. The platform contains a strong free-silver plank. The administration of President Cleveland was not mentioned in the platform and only referred to by inference. Some of the speeches were very bitter and abusive of President Cleveland.

Montpelier, Vt., May 8.—The prohibition state convention nominated Rodney C. Whittemore for governor and selected a full state ticket, also electors at large and delegates to the national convention. The platform enunciated prohibition principles, two resolutions regarding national affairs and free coinage being vote down.

WILL RAISE PRICES.

A Big Flour Pool Organized by the Pillsburys.

Minneapolis, Minn., May 8.—R. D. Hubbard, the executive front of the linseed oil trust, has succeeded, with the aid of the Pillsburys, in perfecting the organization of the greatest millers' combine ever put together in this country. The purpose is to advance the price of flour from the present low quotations to secure satisfactory rail and water transportation rates and to compel every spring wheat grinder in the country to become a part of the pool. There are 500 spring wheat millers in the United States. More than 100 have joined the new pool, which had its inception last fall, reached a head last February and is now a bona fide organization.

The pool has been incorporated. Its name is the North American Milling company. It is commonly known here in St. Paul, at Duluth and in southern Minnesota as the American Milling company. It is the successor of the Southern Minnesota Millers' association, of which Hubbard was the leading spirit. Representatives of the trust here claim to represent 110 mills having a daily capacity of 105,000 barrels. The whole aim of the organization is to protect the gigantic flouring interests of Minneapolis, now threatened by competition.

IN FAVOR OF WOMEN.

Methodist Conference Adopts Committee Report.

Cleveland, O., May 8.—The Methodist general conference Thursday by a vote of 425 to 98 adopted the report of the committee on eligibility and referred the woman question back to the churches to be voted on again. The women lay delegates, meanwhile, retain their seats in the conference. The committee is agreed that the eligibility of women to vote in this convention is a constitutional one, and that the general conference has the power to interpret the constitution. The committee recommends the modification of the constitution, changing the qualifications of a delegate to the general conference by using the words "lay delegate" instead of "layman," thereby making the admission of women legal.

Cleveland, O., May 9.—A memorial was introduced Friday in the M. E. church general conference that the American flag fly from the steeple of every Methodist church in the country.

HOHENLOHE RESIGNS.

The German Chancellor Quits His Job—To Serve Till Fall.

Berlin, May 9.—Chancellor von Hohenlohe's resignation has been accepted by the emperor. There is no ill-feeling, and the chancellor's wife and daughter will be decorated with the Order of Louise. The chancellor will vacate his office in September.

Prince von Hohenlohe has been in office since October, 1894, having succeeded Caprivi. He is a Bavarian and was born 77 years ago. He never had any serious disagreement with the emperor, and the reason for his retirement is his age and ill health. For some time he has been unable to attend to his duties in the reichstag and bundesrath. That the prince has resigned is a great surprise. It is supposed one cause of the resignation is the proposed reform of the military tribunals. It is known that Chancellor Hohenlohe is not in accord with advanced opinion upon this subject.

Editor of "Puck" Dead.

New York, May 12.—Henry Cuyler Bunner, editor of Puck, died at his home in Nutley, N. J., Monday afternoon of consumption. After Mr. Bunner's return from California, where he went in search of health, he failed steadily. Mr. Bunner has been editor of Puck since 1877, having succeeded the first editor of that paper within a few months of the time the publication was begun. He was born in Oswego in 1855.

Found Guilty a Second Time.

Omaha, Neb., May 11.—Henry Bolln, ex-city treasurer, after a second trial, has been convicted of embezzling the sum of $105,500 of public funds of the city and school board of Omaha. Punishment may be from one to 25 years and the fine the amount or double the amount of embezzlement.

Fifteen Horses and Two Mules Burned.

Newark, N. J., May 11.—C. B. Smith's feed and hay storage establishment on Fourteenth street was burned at one o'clock Saturday morning. Fifteen horses and two mules were burned to death. Loss, $10,000; insurance, $5,000.

Anti-Tramp Convention.

Madison, Wis., May 11.—Mayor Dye has received a letter from W. D. Cornell, of Fon du Lac, president of the State Anti-Tramp league, saying the league desired to hold an anti-tramp convention in this city at Assembly chamber and proposing Friday, May 22, as the date. The mayor laid the matter before the council and it was decided to call a convention for that date.

Cholera in Egypt.

Cairo, May 11.—There were 23 cases of cholera and 16 deaths from the disease reported in Alexandria Sunday. Three cases were reported in Cairo.

CALLED DOWN.

President Cleveland Said to Have Sent Warning to Spain.

Madrid, May 11.—A dispatch from Havana says that the five prisoners captured on the schooner Competitor have been sentenced to death. The men sentenced to death are: Alfredo Laborde, born in New Orleans; Owen Milton, of Kansas; William Kinla, an Englishman, and Elias Bedia and Theodore de la Maza, both Cubans.

Washington, May 11.—President Cleveland and Secretary Olney were in consultation on the Competitor case. After the conference the secretary of state cabled Consul-General Williams at Havana and Minister Taylor at Madrid instructing them to notify the Spanish government that summary action in the cases of the men captured on board the Competitor would be resented by the United States. The tenor of the notes is that the United States will step in and terminate the bloody war in Cuba if these prisoners are not protected. Execution of them under the present sentence of the military tribunal would be a violation of the Cushing treaty of 1877.

Washington, May 12.—The state department gave out the following Monday morning:

"In the Competitor case it can be authoritatively stated that at the request of the United States the Spanish government will postpone execution of the death sentences upon American citizens, until the views of the United States respecting the application to their cases of the treaty of 1795 and the protocol of 1877 can be presented and considered."

The announcement of the postponement of the executions means a delay of some weeks, at least, and that the matter will be taken up by the diplomatic representatives of the United States in Spain, and be made the subject of the exchange of correspondence on the interpretation to be given the treaty provisions between the two nations. Meanwhile, the effect will be to allay popular excitement both here and in Spain.

DENOTES CONFIDENCE.

Heavy Exports of Gold Cause No Financial Disturbance.

New York, May 9.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"The exports of $5,850,000 gold this week have produced no monetary disturbance, and this is at once proof of the soundness of financial conditions and of prevailing confidence in better things to come. It does not matter whether gold is required for Russia or anywhere else; it would not go from this, rather from other countries, if there were not balances to meet. Much of the hesitation at present is due to temporarily reduced demand in some industries, and in iron and steel, the power of the new combinations is being generally tested by refusal of orders, so that production exceeds consumption, but the low consumption exceeds new buying. The general irregularity of prices and slackness of demand for finished products does not prevent the marking-up of prices by combinations, but are largely due to doubt whether such prices as are fixed can be maintained. Pig iron is weaker at the the east and also at Pittsburgh, tin steady and lead slightly lower, and American tin plate 30 cents below foreign.

"Failures for the week have been 238 in the United States, against 227 last year, and 24 in Canada, against 34 last year."

GERMANY CELEBRATES.

Anniversary of Signing of Peace Treaty with France Fitly Observed.

Berlin, May 12. — The 25th anniversary of the signing of the treaty of peace between Germany and France, which was signed at Frankfort-on-the-Main in 1871, was celebrated in that city Sunday. Emperor William and Empress Victoria arrived at Frankfort in the morning and were given a most enthusiastic reception by the officials and other residents of the city. The town was handsomely decorated in honor of the occasion. Delegates were present from every university in southern and central Germany. In the afternoon the emperor unveiled a monument to his grandfather. His majesty sent a telegram to Prince Bismarck recalling his never-to-be-forgotten services to the empire. Among other things the dispatch said: "Side by side with the name of the great emperor, that of the great chancellor will ever be emblazoned in history. The feeling of gratitude to you will never die in my heart."

A Big Failure.

Akron, O., May 11.—Ferdinand Schumacher, president of the American Cereal company, and known as the "oatmeal king," turned over his property to his nephew, Hugo Schumacher, and Attorney J. A. Arbogast, of this city, Saturday afternoon for the benefit of creditors. The assets, which consist of $1,100,000 in American Cereal company stock, other similar securities and real estate, would reach $2,000,000 if there was a market for them. The liabilities will reach $1,500,000. The assignment was caused by heavy losses in the Marseilles Land and Water Power company and the Illinois River Paper company of Marseilles, Ill., which went to the wall Saturday in consequence of the failure of the chief stockholder.

No Color Line.

Cleveland, O., May 12.—The Methodist general conference put itself on record again on the race question on Monday morning by adopting a resolution introduced by Rev. Dr. H. A. Monroe, of Delaware, indorsing the treatment that Cleveland hotels have accorded to all the delegates regardless of color, and demanding wherever it was decided to hold the conference in the future a guarantee be obtained of equal treatment.

A resolution was referred announcing that the Methodist church recognized no color or caste, and stating that if the conference elected a negro bishop it was not to be considered class legislation.

Was Heavily Insured.

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 9.—Hamilton Disston, of Philadelphia, a few weeks before his sudden death, had increased the amount of his life insurance $600,000. A representative of the company that loses by the transaction was in the city and confirms this statement. The company's agent here is positive no litigation will follow the death of Mr. Disston and believes that an error is due to the present difficulty. The Disston family, consisting of wife, brother and son, are all heavily insured and with that of the deceased the total will reach nearly $2,500,000.

Lives Lost by an Earthquake.

Panama, May 9.—Puerto Viejo, the capital of the province of Manabi, in Ecuador, with a population of 10,000, the correspondent in Guayaquil telegraphs, was destroyed by two earthquake shocks Thursday night. The shocks were succeeded by floods inundating the city. Many lives are supposed to have been lost.

Natives Burned Alive.

London, May 9.—News from Freetown, Sierra Leone, is to the effect that the American missionaries at Timpany report that 11 natives were burned alive there on the score of witchcraft.

More Good News.

General Manager P. S. Macgowan, of the Walter A. Wood Harvester Co., St. Paul, Minn., informs us that business is excellent and that his company will be able this fall to liquidate its entire indebtedness, and pass out of the receiver's hands in a most prosperous condition. He is our authority, also, for announcing the good news that some of the most influential stockholders of the St. Paul and Hoosick Falls companies are now at work trying to effect a reorganization, to the end of placing both companies in a position to go along with the immense business in such manner as to maintain past reputation for solidity and progressiveness. If the reorganization is effected, which, from present progress would seem assured, the business will again be on a solid foundation and under a management that will push its well known machines in every market on the globe.—Farm Machinery, April 21, 1896.

WRECK OF THE HYACINTH.

It was a wild night. The lightning flashed, and in response the artillery of heaven boomed and rolled, then crashed, as if the very skies were rent in twain to deliver one mighty blow. Streets were transformed into leaping, rushing rivers by the terrible downpour of rain, while the breakers on that lone, dreary New England coast seemed to defy the challenge of the roaring storm.

The fleet of small fishermen had scurried to a safe anchorage early in the afternoon.

"May God help any ship and crew that gets on a lee shore to-night, lads," soberly remarked Capt. "Josh" Harding, of the lifeboat, to a few of his men, as he stepped to the door and peered out into the opaque darkness.

The government at that time had not erected the neat, cozy life-saving station with all its modern appliances to rescue a crew from a stranded ship which now adorns the long, barren stretch of sand, but the crew were members of the fishing fleet, and always volunteered their services without promise of reward. A whaleboat served their purpose then, and many a despairing sailor had good cause to praise her stanchness and the bravery of her iron-hearted crew.

A flash of lightning in the early evening had revealed a large bark trying to weather the wreck-bestrewn, fatal Handkershoal, which caused the bluff, rugged mariner to utter the foregoing remarks.

"Where is John Lawrence to-night, lads? He is generally here a night like this," he continued, in an anxious tone.

"John's wife ain't very well, cap'n; so I heered as I cum daown," answered Reuben Davis, one of the crew.

"Well, go up, a couple of ye'n see. I should hate to mann the boat without John. He's never missed a trip yet," said Capt. Harding, pacing the small room which served them as a shelter from the storm and was located on the beach, with the boat drawn up outside just above the reach of the hissing, seething waters, which seemed to recede with dispairing moans at failing to drag it into their depths.

By the bedside of his wife, holding her thin, wasted hand between the large, horny palms of his own, sat John Lawrence, one of the bravest of the volunteers.

"Oh, if I could but see Tom once more I could go easy, John," she hoarsely whispered.

"The lad's gone, Mary, 'n' we don't know where. It's bin nigh onter tew year sence I heered he'd shipped in the fo-cas'tle fer the West Indies, 'n' he hasn't writ a word hum sence."

"I know he was a bad boy, John. But don't you think that you was a little hard on him?" she continued. "He was all we had, you know."

The large eyes filled with tears and the frail form shook and trembled with emotion as the mother pleaded for her wayward boy.

"I don't know what's the matter with your wife, John. It's either a case of broken heart or some new disease. Medicine don't seem to reach it," the doctor had said, upon leaving, a few hours before.

"You'll forgive him when I'm gone, John, won't you? He didn't mean to be bad!" she said, between her sobs.

At this moment the door softly opened and the captain's messenger stepped in.

"John, there's a bark that can't weather the Han'kerchi'f, 'n' ther captain sent us arter ye," said Davis.

"It's no use, boys. I can't leave her ter-night. She wouldn't be here when I got back," said Lawrence, softly, rubbing his eyes and motioning toward the white cot.

HOLDING HER THIN, WASTED HAND.

The sick woman partly raised herself and in gasping tones bade her husband to go. "They are some mother's boys, John. Perhaps some one will do it for our boy some day. Don't mind me, John. I'll sleep while you are gone," she pleaded.

"I'll go, Mary, 'n' ef Tom ever gits hum he's furgiven," said Lawrence, huskily, as he kissed her, and, putting on his storm suit, went out into the night with his heart lying like a stone in his bosom.

"She'll be better, John, maybe, when we gits back," said Abner Barker, trying to cheer him, as they wended their way to the beach.

"I've seen her for the last time, Abner; she's failed fast sence noon," gloomily answered Lawrence, and said no more.

After a mighty struggle with the surf the boat was launched just as the storm began to abate, and the moon gradually forced her light through the heavy clouds and showed them the doomed vessel pounding to pieces on the shoals.

One by one the stars peeped forth in their accustomed places and turned Egyptian darkness into day.

As the boat drew near the bark was seen to raise her stern high in the air, and as cries and groans resounded loud above the breakers from the fated crew her masts went by the board. A second later, with her back broken from the awful blow, her houses washed away, with everything gone, she silently disappeared into the ocean's depths.

"My God! this is terrible!" said Capt. Harding, in a voice of anguish.

No cries were heard after the bark went down, and after searching about for some time the order was given to head for the beach.

As the boat swung about in response to the helm, John Lawrence jumped quickly to his feet, and shouting: "There's one!" grabbed a floating body by its hair, and with a mighty effort lifted it into the boat just as his foot slipped and he pitched forward, striking his head on the gunwale, and as the blood gushed from the wound just above his temple he knew no more.

One afternoon, nearly a month later, a number of the lifeboat crew were seen hurrying to the little house which John Lawrence had left on that stormy night to save the seamen aboard the stranded bark.

"Yes, it's so. Dr. Hyde sed as how he wuz comin' tew," said one, as they hurried along.

"It'll be a m rrikil ef John rounds tew arter all this ere time," ejaculated another.

Dr. Hyde stood by the bedside of the unconscious sailor, who for nearly a month had lain in a comatose condition.

At times his breathing was barely perceptible and all hopes of his recovery would vanish; then by degrees he would grow stronger and the drooping spirits of those about him would revive.

As the doctor stood by, carefully noting his patient's condition, the door swung open and a number of Lawrence's former messmates filed softly in, hats in hand, and ranged themselves about the room.

"We heerd John was 'siderably better, doctor, 'n' 'lowed we'd like tew know ef sech good news wuz true," said Davis.

"Sh!" replied Dr. Hyde, raising his hand.

The eyelids fluttered, partly opened, quivered and closed. The fingers of his right hand, lying on the coverlet, twitched convulsively, closed tightly and relaxed.

A spasmodic tremor shook the form of their comrade and a ray of sunshine seemed to settle on the countenances of the anxious watchers.

Suddenly Lawrence partly raised himself, and, with his head resting on his hand, his eyes opened and he looked calmly into their faces—himself again—the John Lawrence of a month ago.

"YES JOHN, THIS IS OUR TOM."

No one ventured a word. Stillness reigned supreme but for the faint ticktick of the little clock on the mantel.

"You might as well read the log, doctor," he finally said, in weak tones.

"Wait till you are stronger, John. It's been a long time since you have known anything," replied Dr. Hyde.

"I am strong enuff fer that. You can't keep et frum me. She died that awful night when I left her alone, didn't she, mates?" he appealed.

No one answered, but great tears rolled down their leathern cheeks.

"I can bear 't, doctor. When was she kerried over yonder—you know!" continued the invalid, with trembling lip and moistened eye.

"Be a man, John. You will need your old-time iron nerve now, my man," said the doctor, as he stepped from the room, motioning the others to follow, just as Mary Lawrence, alive and well, accompanied by a tall, manly-looking young fellow, entered by another door.

After this sacred meeting between husband and wife, rescued from the very brink of the grave, Mary told her story.

"Yes, John, this is our Tom, now the best man in the boat, whom you saved from the sea the night you were hurt. He was on the British bark Hyacinth, bound for Boston, and but for you we would now have been alone in the world."

"It was her boy she wanted, not medicine," said Dr. Hyde upon being questioned regarding Mary Lawrence's miraculous return to health.—Yarmouth Register.

Difficulties of English.

A countryman of Goethe gives an instance of the difficulty a foreigner has with the English language. He was invited out to dinner soon after his arrival in England, and was desirous of saying something in a very pleasant way, and made use of the following expression: "Will you have the blooming kindness," etc. He used it in the sense that the word "blooming" is used in German, as being something very charming and beautiful, little knowing what havoc slang has played with the word in English. He was absolutely at a loss to understand why everybody was so utterly horrified at what he thought was an extremely nice expression.—Albany Argus.

Some Novelties in Silver.

Spoons showing open work silver bowls are preferred to dishes for serving bon-bons. They have ample capacity and are made with long, heavy handles, elaborately carved. Bread forks make the latest addition to the table department. They are of antique shape, with pierced tines and heavy chased handles. Wreaths of tiny silver flowers form the handles of embroidery scissors especially designed for gifts. The sheaths, showing similar decoration, contribute to the effect as well as to the safety. Open work shades over silk linings are seen in conjunction with candlesticks of heavy carved silver.—Chicago Tribune.

His Criticism.

A criticism which might well be digested by other writers than Southey, for whom it was designed, was once made by a Methodist minister. When Southey published his "Life of Wesley" there were many people, and not Methodists alone, who felt that he had greatly misconceived many things relating to the celebrated Methodist leader, and his belief and teachings. Strong opinions were expressed about the book, but best of all was that of a Methodist clergyman: "Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep."—Youth's Companion.

—"Grace Greenwood" was no other than Mrs. Sarah Jane Lippincott. Her social writings were long the admiration of the readers of light literature.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

The Railroads.

The state railroad and warehouse commission has reported to the governor for the year ending June 30, 1895. According to the report there were operated in the state last year 5,990 miles of road or an increase of 78 miles over the preceding year, but the number of passengers carried over this mileage was 1,049,789 less than in 1894. However, the Chicago Great Western did not report its passenger list, and therefore these statistics are incomplete. The total gross earnings of all the lines was nearly $31,000,000, a gain of about one-tenth that amount over the record for 1894. Of this amount the freight earnings were over $23,000,000 and the passenger earnings over $5,000,000. The tons of freight by aggregating 18,530,130, made an increase over the record of the preceding 12 months of 1,600,000 tons.

The amount of interest accrued on funded debt of all the railroads reporting in Minnesota, for the entire line, for the year ending June 30, 1895, was $29,382,321. The amount of interest accrued on current liabilities for the same time was $443,397, or a total of $29,825,718, as against a total of $29,176,410 for 1894, showing an increase of $649,308 for 1895.

The amount of rentals paid for the use of the track and terminals of other companies by the roads reporting was, for the entire lines, for the year ending June 30, 1895, $7,352,602, a decrease for 1895 of $319,048.

The total amount of dividends paid during the year ending June 30, 1895, by the railroads, operating in Minnesota, for entire lines, was $9,928,094, a decrease for 1895 of $2,609,901.

The number of officers and employes of the railroads during 1895 was 19,676, an increase of 1,126 for 1895.

Jacob Fjelde Dead.

Jacob H. G. Fjelde, the famous Norwegian sculptor, died at Minneapolis, May 5.

The last work of Jacob Fjelde, one of the greatest Norwegian sculptors of the present generation, was to pay the tribute of his genius to the memory of Norway's greatest musician, and he had scarcely finished the model for the Ole Bull statue before he succumbed to the disease which claimed him as its victim.

The illness which resulted in the death of the sculptor, still a comparatively young man, being but 36 years of age, began with a peculiar form of ear trouble, which had bothered Mr. Fjelde for years.

Has a Hard Time.

A farmer named John Fisher, of Redwood county, aged 56 years, has commenced an action for divorce from his wife, Bertha Fisher, aged 35 years, on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment, he alleging in his complaint that she has on several occasions beat and bruised him and made life not worth living. According to the complaint they had only been married three weeks when Mrs. Fisher commenced her career of cruel and inhuman treatment against Fisher. He was so afraid of her that he would not live in the same house with her.

Penny Press Bonds.

Six of the bonds of the new Co-Operative Penny Press Publishing Company have been seized as the property of A. J. Blethen, Jr., and R. A. Blethen, under an execution on a judgment in favor of the Rock Island National bank, as against the two defendants named and others interested in the Star Printing Company. These bonds will be sold by the sheriff, May 15, at the sheriff's office.

There May Be Trouble.

The St. Cloud land office is advised of a decision of the commissioner of the general land office, in which he again holds that the lands selected by the Great Northern, under lists 7 and 10, in Traverse county, for losses on the land grant on other lines, is invalid. Settlers will now have to contest the claim of Archbishop Ireland if this decision is affirmed.

News in Brief.

Complete figures on the St. Paul city election give the following pluralities: Doran, mayor, 3,703; McCardy, comptroller, 4,468; Horst, treasurer, 655.

Frank Klein, agent of the Northwestern Elevator company at Hancock, was arrested recently on complaint of a surety company, his bondsmen, charged with embezzlement.

Margaret Camp, 4 years old, fell from the second story window of the home of her parents, in Minneapolis, and received a fracture of the skull from which she died three hours afterwards.

While making an excavation in Minneapolis August Nelson and a fellow laborer were imprisoned in the ditch, and before Nelson could be rescued he was suffocated by the earth which completely covered him.

The Northern Pacific depot at Crookston was entered by burglars. The safe was blown open and the iron box taken outside and broken open on a rail, but the robbers did not secure a cent.

Eloff Holmberg, an ex-convict from St. Cloud, was arrested at Cokato for cutting H. O. Meth, a young boy, in the face.

The annual reunion of the First Minnesota Volunteer Infantry Association will be held June 2, at Winona. It is expected that a steamer will be placed at the disposal of the Twin City contingent.

The poor department of Minneapolis received 1,052 applications for aid during the month of April, and granted relief in various ways to 2,627 individuals. There were granted 445 grocery orders, at an expense of $928, and 11 burials were turned over to the poor department, which cost $70.50. The number of inmates at the poor farm at the expense of the city was 79, and their care cost $719.71 during the month.

A trip of inspection of many of the local land offices in Minnesota, Montana, Idaho, California and Colorado will be made during June by Commissioner Lamoreaux, of the general land office.

Elmer Rockwell is about to sue Register A. J. Taylor and C. B. King, a clerk in the land office, for $200 damages, alleged to have resulted from their negligence in conducting the affairs of the Duluth land office. Rockwell, depending on information supplied by the land office, gave up $200 for a claim, but lost it because of a prior claimant.

The senate has passed the bill donating a cannon and four pyramids of cannon balls to the St. Paul cemetery.

Willie Michaud, aged 3 years, was killed by the street cars in St. Paul, in sight of his mother.

BOILER EXPLOSION.

As a Result Eleven Persons Perish Near Vicksburg, Miss.

Vicksburg, Miss., May 12.—Eleven lives were lost and more than a dozen persons seriously injured by the explosion of the boilers of the steamer Harry Brown at a point about 25 miles south of here at midnight Sunday night. So terrific was the force of the explosion that the boat was torn asunder and in less than five minutes afterwards lay at the bottom of Mississippi river. It is known that the following were killed outright, or by drowning:

Pilot Norman; Driver George W. Bardsley; Steersman William Dougherty, and the chief engineer, name unknown; Miss Annie Herd, chambermaid; Tom Judge and William Watson, the fireman, and first and second mates, William Fitzsimmons and George Kiem, and William Kelley, lamp trimmer.

Capt. Keim, of the Harvey Brown, although seriously injured, remained on the after part of the cabin roof of the Brown, where he had been blown by the explosion, after it had floated off the hull and which had sunk, and was perfectly cool and collected, and directed the efforts of the men who were at work saving the boat's crew.

Capt. Keim and Pilot Dan Kane were in the Brown pilot house when the explosion occurred.

Capt. Keim is unable to account for the explosion. The steamer had a battery of seven boilers, which were under the care of competent and careful men.

AGAINST ARBITRATION.

Argument Advanced by Archbishop Ireland at St. Louis.

St. Louis, May 12.—Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, in the course of an address delivered Saturday night at a banquet at the Planters' house, given by Missouri Commandery, Order of the Loyal Legion, disparaged the movement now being agitated in this country and England toward universal arbitration. He advanced the theory that war is the great instigation of patriotism, and if we came to a stage where everything in dispute is to be peaceably settled, we will lose the interest in the affairs of our country in its relation with other governments.

The words he spoke were greeted with a perfect storm of applause.

The importance of the question settled by the civil war was dwelt upon at length. It settles the destinies of humanity, the speaker said, not only in America, but in the world. It was the great object lesson to the nations of the earth of the stability of a democratic form of government, and the victory of the union forces was a stunning blow to monarchy and despotism all over the universe. None of these results could have been achieved by arbitration.

KEPT HER WORD.

Chicago Redeems Her Pledges to Democratic Committee.

Chicago, May 9.—The democratic national convention will be held in Chicago and at the Coliseum in accordance with the original programme. This was the decision announced by National Chairman Harrity Friday evening at the close of the second session of the special meeting of the subcommittee on convention of the national democratic committee.

The evening session was given up to a conference with Treasurer Donnersberger, Judge Goodrich, Jacob W. Richards, R. W. Spangler and other members of the local finance committee. The conference was held behind closed doors, and at its conclusion Chairman Harrity stated that all the obligations under which the convention had been voted to Chicago had been complied with. The obligations in question provided that $30,000 should be placed to the credit of the national committee by this date, and that $10,000 additional should be forthcoming by the 4th day of July.

GREATER NEW YORK ASSURED.

Bill to Effect Consolidation Is Signed by Gov. Morton.

Albany, N. Y., May 12.—Gov. Morton signed the Greater New York bill Monday.

Under the terms of the bill all the municipal corporations, and parts of municipal corporations other than county, within the county of Kings, the county of Richmond, the city of Long Island City, the towns of New Town, Flushing and Jamaica, and part of the town of Hempstead, Queen county, are consolidated with the municipal corporations known as mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New York.

This consolidation, however, does not go into effect until January 1, 1898. In the meantime, however, the bill provides for a commission to frame suitable laws for the government of the municipal corporation, so that they may be submitted to the legislature by February 18, 1897.

Money for Ford's Theater Victims.

Washington, May 12.—The report of the joint commission to adjust damages due those injured in the Ford's theater disaster, made a report to congress Monday allowing $5,000 each in the cases of three who have died within the last year, and appropriating $144,800 in amounts ranging from $50 to $5,000 for those who were injured. This makes a grand total of $264,000 that has been or will be appropriated as a result of that awful accident in which 24 persons were either killed outright or died subsequently from injuries and 105 were injured or sustained serious nervous shock.

Veteran Demented in Nicaragua.

Washington, May 11.—Mr. Baker, the United States minister to Nicaragua, telegraphed to the state department Saturday from Managua that Daniel Norton, a United States pensioner, was at Matagalpa in a serious demented condition. He came to Nicaragua from California three years ago. Mr. Baker says that no relatives of the man are known and that there is no public institution in the country in which he can be cared for, adding that Norton has some money. The state department is anxious to hear from anybody who knows Norton.

Salvationists Secede at Columbus.

Columbus, O., May 12. — Forty-three members of the local Salvation Army seceded Sunday to form the American Christian Workers' union. It is stated by the seceders that they expect to join Ballington Booth's American Salvation Army when it is organized.

Eminent Jurist Dead.

Ottawa, Ont., May 12.—Judge Telespore Fournier, the eminent jurist, is dead. He was minister of justice in the Macenzie government and introduced the bill establishing the supreme court of Canada. He was born in Quebec in 1823.

FOR COUNTRY'S SAKE.

An Indian Fighter Suffers Agonies from Disease.

He Was in the Battle with the Apaches When Geronimo Was Captured.

From the Press, New York City.

Worn with the exposure of army life on the frontier, and poisoned by the continual drinking of alkali water, Joseph Flegauf returned to Philadelphia eight years ago, broken down in health and unable to do any work.

He had served five years with the Ninth United States Infantry in many a desperate fight with the Indians in Arizona and other frontier States and had won an enviable record. In the fierce conflict when Geronimo, the famous chief of the Apaches, was captured, Mr. Flegauf was among the brave soldiers who, forgetful of everything but duty, charged upon the hostile Indians.

Life on the plains sent to an untimely death many soldiers who were never touched by a redskin's bullet or arrow, and Mr. Flegauf came near such a fate as that. A long time before his time was out he was taken seriously ill, but he stuck to his post until an honorable discharge was finally given to him.

When he reached Philadelphia, the Indian fighter was scarcely more than skin and bones, and for three weeks he lay desperately ill in a hospital. He felt dizzy, and his stomach felt as if it had dried up. These symptoms were accompanied by bloody dysentery, which no medicine seemed to relieve.

After two years of suffering, Mr. Flegauf came to New York and was treated by several physicians. These did not agree, some calling his disease catarrh of the stomach, and others chronic diarrhœa.

In speaking to a reporter about his illness Mr. Flegauf said the doctors helped him, but, with all the money he spent for advice and medicine, he was able to work only a small part of the time. Since moving to his present home, No. 517 West Forty-second Street, in New York, about a year ago, Mr. Flegauf has been so ill that his voice and hearing almost left him.

Then all medicines failed, and the sick man had little hope of recovery. At this critical time Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People were recommended to Mr. Flegauf, and, almost as a last hope, he began taking them.

"The beneficial effect of the medicine was felt at once," Mr. Flegauf told the reporter, "and before I had taken a box I began to eat with relish. Three boxes made me so much better that I began work and have been able to keep at it since, for five months."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are not a patent medicine in the sense that name implies. They were first compounded as a prescription and used as such in general practice by an eminent physician. So great was their efficacy that it was deemed wise to place them within the reach of all. They are now manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred, and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company.

BOOK LOVER.

Witty Retort of a Priest to a Vulgar and Ostentatious Parishioner.

Concerning the celebrated Father Darcy, probably the greatest wit of that witty nation, Ireland, it is related, says the Milwaukee Journal, that he once visited the palatial mansion of a perfect specimen of the nouveaux riches who lived in the neighborhood of Dublin at the invitation of its pompous owner. He was shown all over the house, his host taking great pains, as is habitual in such cases, to keep the witty and observant priest well informed as to the cost of all the beautiful things he was shown. Finally, after making the complete tour of the chateau, the library was reached, its tremendous shelves groaning under the weight of thousands upon thousands of volumes, resplendent in the most magnificent bindings. Here they seated themselves, and the host said, with a sigh of snobbish exultation:

"Well, father, I have brought you here last because this is my favorite room. The other rooms maybe give pleasure to my wife and my daughters, but this is my place—right here among these books, who are my friends. And these here on the desk (pointing to a score of ultra-looking volumes), are what I may call my intimate friends."

Father Darcy got up and examined one of them, when a broad grin spread over his good-natured face, as he said:

"Well, it's glad I am to see that you never cut your intimate friends."

CAMEL'S EXPERIENCE.

Sat Down So Much That His Hind Legs Became Useless.

A large camel which was landed at Hoboken a few days ago from the Bremen line steamer Dresden had an experience which probably never before fell to the lot of "a ship of the desert."

He made the voyage in a large box, and as there wasn't room enough in it for any self-respecting animal the camel sat down in sheer disgust. He sat that way for days and days while the ship rolled and made all sorts of heavy weather.

When the dejected animal was finally landed and tried to stand up, he couldn't use his rear props at all. They had become paralyzed from their long stay in a cramped position. The camel wasn't any good, it seemed, and as a big price had been paid for him there was general lamentation. The camel was "in" on the lamentation. Such a picture of woe was never seen in Hoboken.

At last a genius suggested a radical cure. The camel, by his advice, was placed in a sling and hoisted up until only his toes touched the ground. He paddled the air for a spell with his forelegs, and finally the rear props came to life and joined in the exercise. They lowered him to the floor, and after he had tested his rear legs somewhat gingerly, he was as good as new. But he doesn't sit down any more. Once was enough for him.

Rash Promise.

A story is told of a London magistrate who had a London lady up before him the day after Christmas whom the policeman said he had found helplessly tipsy. He told her he would let her go, considering the festive season, if she would promise never to enter a public house again. "But, your honor," said the lady, "I was not drunk; I was drugged." "Well," said the magistrate, who saw that she was fencing, "I'll let you go if you will promise never to enter a drug store again." To save the fine she promised and departed. All her soda water is gone.

Eye Changes Position.

It is not generally known that the young flat fish have an eye on each side of the body, and that it is only in the adult stage that the eyes are both on one side. There has been much discussion among scientific men as to the mode in which the change takes place, but in the flounder the eye has been observed to travel over the ridge of the head, while in some other fish it passes directly through the soft tissue of the young fish to the other side.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Choice Farming Lands in South Dakota

Along the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway can now be had upon reasonable terms. The crop prospects were never better and a glorious harvest for this year is already assured. Thousands of acres of unoccupied lands in over twenty counties are now open for settlement. For further information address E. F. Free Government Land.

The only large body of free government land suitable for raising wheat or diversified farming, open to settlement under the homestead law, lies in the Turtle mountain country of North Dakota. Close to timber markets, schools and churches. Improved farms also to be had on the crop payment plan. Intending settlers are invited to correspond with F. L. Thompson, Cando, N. D.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A SHINING EXAMPLE of what may be accomplished by never varying devotion to a single purpose is seen in the history of the McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., Chicago. For 65 years they have simply been building grain and grass-cutting machinery, and while there are probably forty manufacturers in this line, it is safe to say that the McCormick Company builds one-third of all the binders, reapers and mowers used throughout the entire world.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, MAY 15, 1896.

DELANO DIARY

—A notice of ten men wanted by J. A. Mayer, wore a business air on our corner this week.

—Amateur photography is getting to be nearly as great a craze in this section as is bicycling.

—Mrs. Mapes driving team for which $225. was refused two years ago was sold last Fair Day to a man near Hanover for $110.

—Gardens have most all been made this week. The season seems much more favorable than for a long time for the growth of vegetables.

—Last Saturday's Fair was well attended. Cows brought good prices. Pigs were plenty and went cheap, while horses didn't seem to go at all.

—F. H. Lindsley now has City water to his garden and pasture and feels quite independent, so far as moisture is concerned for animal or vegitable life.

—It is reported that Creamery Kaemer was out the price of 800 lbs of butter for which he went good, that was manufactured while he was on his trip to Albert Lea.

—The Eagle Printing Company shipped a car load of paper back to Minneapolis this week. We understand the company will stop doing a wholesale stationery business.

—Messers. Schaffer, Plattner and Mealey are among those who have graded their lots up in shape this spring. This is a fine season for sowing seed, or setting out sod.

—Nature has outdone herself this spring in this part of the country. From winter we jumped almost right into summer, and now grass, trees, and other vegetation is far in advance of what is customary in this latitude and season of the year.

—Bev Yancy has decorated the floor of his barbershop with a new coat of paint. It is a color that will allow his customers to miss the spittoon occasionally without being so terribly noticeable as is sometimes the case, in otherwise well regulated tonsorial parlors.

—If our Village council wish to impress upon the minds of villagers that they have power to do so they must do so all along the line. It want do to push law abiding citizens too hard while those that are open violaters are allowed to do as they please.

—The graduating class of the High school celebrated Arbor Day by planting out a birch tree on the school grounds. That white streak that appears on the south side of the building, in the pictures recently taken by Mr. Wright, is one of the marks it has already made.

—It would pay the business men of the village to make arrangements to have the Delano street grader or something that would do similar work driven over the roads for several miles in every direction from town. People could then drive with some degree of comfort and much less loss of time and money.

—Milk cows are bringing good prices now. But already the creamery business begins to show signs of deterioration. Last month our local creamery paid only 13 cents, quite a come down. Farmers who save all the calves and take care of them are apt to come out better than those who sell them young, and depend on the creamery for a living.

—It is a question whether all those now engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors in Delano will be granted license for another year. If the Council acts from its own knowledge of the facts that the law is broken by most every saloon keeper in town, nearly every day in the year, it is difficult to see how they can grant all of them license and keep their own oaths of office.

—Saloon keepers who allow young men not of age in their places of business; or entice boys to come, and to remain in their saloons, and to smoke, drink and even gamble, must bear in mind that the law forbids such things; and that the Village Council are not bound to grant license to any such: Some of our dealers are doing busines altogether too loosely for their own good, and not in accordance with their written contracts.

—Fourth of July, our National Holiday is hastening on and if anything is to be done towards celebrating, it is time to talk it up. This is a day when patriotism should be taught to its full extent. It is not an occasion for money making, neither should people be encouraged to call on the city treasury for funds with which to observe the day. Several times, already, have our authorities donated sums of money to help on the celebration; this is wrong, and if it keeps on, the village will be obliged to supply the small boy with his 4th of July firecrakers.

—The graduating class of the Delano High School contains six members this year. School will close in a couple of weeks and the graduating exercises are being looked forward to with a great deal of interest by the graduates, their fellow students, teachers, parents, and a host of friends. This is an important event in the lives of those who are closing their school days, some to enter the University, some to go to work in the battle of life for their own existance. They are to take their places among the men and women of the community in which they live; and their examples should ever be shining lamps to the feet of those who are following them, and who will strive to surpass them if possible.

—G. F. Herman has moved into the John F. Powers residence on South Third Street.

—Superintendant John A. Mayer has re-shingled and otherwise beautified his west side residence.

—The High School seniors are busily engaged in preparing for a class play which is soon to take place.

—Plums blossomed out finely; but more than the usual number seem to be falling off from the trees.

—Wednesday nights rain was a hard one; and it was followed by quite a lowering of the thermometer.

—We understand that Mr. Wright, of Howard Lake, intends opening up a photograph gallery here soon.

—Electrc lights and one of the brass bands drew a crowd around the band stand Wednesday evening.

—F. H. Lindsley has added to his law library recently a number of volumes and is ready to look up cases on short notice.

—Creamery Roosen now rides in a good sensible Democrat wagon, and if the old mare shies at windmills. Why, just let here shy.

—Plasterers seem in great demand at present; and it appears well nigh impossible for those in need of a little patching to help out on spring house cleaning to get it done for love or money.

—Cut worms are reported quite bad in places. The Weekly Crop Bulletin reports that in Olmstead County some wheat and oats had been sown over to flax on account their ravages. Look out for the pests in garden and field.

—The great attraction yesterday at the depot, so great that agent Bolton thought that if he could charge a nickel a sight he would become quite well off, was George P. Shaffer's new, handsome carriage. We know of no one who can better appreciate or more deserves a good comfortable family turnout than does George P.

—R. M. Walter, Esq., is moving into the Tom Shaw property in South town. New and commodious quarters have been fitted up for his numerous canine boarders, and Rolly is proprietor of a Wright County Kennel that he is proud of. If you are afraid of dogs you can see some "snap shots" at Witman's drug store. They won't bite.

EDITOR GAZETTE: As you have been kind enough to provide the motive power, Mrs. M. Conzet does not object to the bicycle, but she does not want to be dated back, or appear younger than she is; she has now passed the 75th mile stone and does not wish to live the other five years over again. M. CONZET.

—W. Johns and Charles Weise returned last night from their trip to Tennisee. They were much pleased with the country. Johns likes his land purchesed sometime since west of Nashville. They yisited Gust Hackebeil at his farm near Morney, and brought home some samples of his strawberries. They say Mr. H. has 7 acres like them, and will clear $1000, in a few days on them, at Nashville. They report six buildings for the coming centennial celebration at Nashville already built and painted white as snow. They seem to have enjoyed the trip very much.

—Five lives were sacrificed a short time ago in one of the Trinity Church tenement houses, New York. The coroner's verdict was that death was "owing to the neglect of Trinity Church corporation, owners of said premises, in failing to provide fire escapes according to law.—Methodist Herald.

The Delano High School building and the City Hall should have some fire escapes. Don't the cold chills creep up your back and the perspiration stand in beads on your brow when you think of the awful scene of flames and smoke bursting from the only door of the school building, with your little ones inside? Or of what a crushing to death there would be should a fire occur in the stairway, when the hall was full of people.

Buffalo Journal X Rays.

It is reported that Editor French has been appointed one of the door keepers at the St. Louis convention, in consideration of which he has guaranteed to bring solid "$300 scheme" delegations to the county convention from the north side of the county.

Our local political managers seem to think the only and proper course to pursue is to reward bolters, blood suckers and boodlers.

State politicians are active but Dave Clough will be the next republican nominee for Governor.

It is talked that Congress, last week voted themselves a $100 a month, for clerk hire during the congressional recess. The people ought to vote to let every Congressman who voted for that steal, stay at home.

The democrat party is not dead it is only sleeping.

Now that Editor French has got to be doorkeeper, Editor Wharton has got to have something or there will be trouble in camp. The coporation will have to be provided for.

W. C. Hawk, John Walker, John Davis, Adolph Hohl, and Will Guptil and wife, were among Rockfordites attending the fair last Saturday.

William Ziebarth visited Rockford, Tuesday. We have not yet heard what "Bill" is running for. Perhaps he is waiting to see what the party platform will be.

Mrs. Thompson, of Melrose, who has been visiting with her daughter, Mrs. J. B. Dugan, for a few weeks left on Monday for a visit to another daughter in Iowa.

J. W. Mounts, Rockford's old war horse has had his patriarchial beard shaved off and is now ready to make time with any of 'em on a straight Democratic ticket.

Col. Howard, of Litchfield, on his return from California, and W. W. Holcomb, of St. Paul, were among G. N. passengers to smile on Delanoites Tuesday morning.

J. Edward George, proprietor of the "Georgia University Graduates" that exhibited here last fall, was a passenger with his family on his way to Chicago, Wednesday. He expects to be here next fall.

Miss Irene Cheeley, who has been primary teacher in the Public School at this place so long that most of the pupils now in the school and some of the graduates, took their first lessons of her, has accepted a position in the Elk River school.

County Cullings.

In another column we publish the call for the Democratic State Convention to select delegates to the National Convention. Be on your guard and know when the primaries are to be held in Wright County. According to law they must be held at the same time all over the county.

The new Primary Election law says: SEC. 2 When any political party desires to hold a primary election in any county or city it shall be the duty of the duly authorized committee of such political party for such county or city to publish a notice once a week for at least two consecutive weeks, the first publication of which shall be at least twenty days previous to the day appointed that such primary election will be held.

Another strong point in favor of a county jail in Wright county has been made, and if report be true not another prisoner should be allowed to go to Hennipen county. It is said that about twenty prisoners of different degrees were allowed to play upon the feelings of Duane Chappel lately sent from Delano, to such an extent as to eventually land him at St. Peter, in the Insane Asylum. It is said that he was told to write a letter to judge Smith asking pardon; this he did; his fellows got the letter and wrote an answer signing Judge Smith's name, offering to pardon him day after tomorrow: Duane was induced to write another letter thanking the Judge for his clemency. Soon he received an answer telling him that he had investigated his case and learned that people considered him a robber, horse thief and most all that is bad, and that he ought to be hung. Duane then broke down and was sent to the Asylum. From some of the tactics used in the Hayward case it may be others than prisoners were interested in the affair. At all events if the report is near the truth the Hennepin County jail needs an investigation. And Wright County needs a jail of its own.

S. DAKOTA, Democrats have declared themselves in favor of a gold standard.

CONGRESSMAN FLETCHER appears to be well Nye defeated for a re-election, or even a renomination.

IOWA Democrats have in convention declared themselves in favor of free silver, and for President ex-Governor Horace Boies.

THE M. E. General Conference on Tuesday elected two new Bishops Charles C. McCabe, of New York and Dr. Earl Cranston, of Cincinnati.

DIPHTHERIA is epidemic at St. Martin, near St. Cloud, and quite a number of children have died. Too much care in quarantining and disinfecting can not be had.

How eagerly the Merriam men all along the line are pulling for Clough all at once, for Governor. How suddenly they have been converted—only since the candidacy of "Bill" Merriam for the U. S. Senate took on a pronounced form.

IT is laughable to see the antics of some of our republicans newspaper neighbors as they try to force the "brilliant" "esteemed" "learned" Mr. Towne, back into the fold by telling him to change his views on the principal question at issue.

GOLD bugs, silver bugs, straddle bugs, high protective tariff; now you see it, now you don't, seems to be the plan on which the G. O. P. will conduct it's coming campaign. Just the thing to rid the party of the lovers of Abraham Lincoln and other honest men, who think more of their country and humanity than they do of paltry pelf.

ST. PAUL appears to have lit upon a new way of preventing her best citizens being out late o' nights, which is likely to be a success if persisted in as vigorously as it has been lately. It is to give two short men and a tall one, full sway to capture all the purses, watches and other personal effects possible, wherever and whenever found upon the aforesaid best citizen, at night. Three successful holdups in one night for the "trio" is likely to furnish them with spending money. And even "Angels" whether good or bad, not stated, appear among the victims.

WILLIAM LOCHRAN, of Minneapolis, late Commissioner of Pensions, has been appointed to the vacancy on the United States District court bench, recently made vacant by the resignation of Judge R. R. Nelson. Judge Nelson was appointed by President Buchanan, and is now 70 years old. Judge Lochran has many Minnesota friends who will be pleased to see him in his new position; which it is generally understood is much more to his likeing than was the Pension business. Mr. Murphy, of Pennsylvania, late First Assistant has succeeded to the office of Pension Commissioner.

DULUTH is already in the field with a couple of candidates for Congress on the Democratic ticket, besides Mr. Towne on the Republican ticket. Of course they are all good men, coming from Duluth ensures this. Ex-Mayor Charles D'Autremont, and E. C. Gridley have been mentioned as being in the field. D'Autremont has the advantage of being a genuine free traid Democrat, we are informed. But where either of them stands on the financial question don't appear. Duluth is capabale, as has been shown, of furnishing the Sixth district with a good Congressman; but it would seem no more than fair to encourage this end of the District with a nominee on some ticket. They might be offered a little bit of a chance, at least.

SEVERAL times lately have our voters been thoroughly disgusted with the present mode of selecting U. S. Senators, and now they seem destined to be treated to another affair equally as intolerable. Legislatures have been chosen for the express purpose of sending this or that man to the U. S. Senate. The interests of the State were shoved into the background so far as law making was concerned. Is it any wonder that our statutes are loaded down with laws never enforced? Is there any better way to teach anarchy? Now it looks as if Goy. Clough, who has been denounced time and again is to be re-elected for the purpose of appointing W. R. Merriman U. S. Senator.

Peculiar Money Ideas.

Since we were boys together we remember that gold and silver has been the money of the land, and so far as we could learn, of most lands; unless for a brief period, when for some cause, as the war in our own land, paper took the place of both metals for most business purposes. The money of different nations was figured out in the old arithmetics with mathematical precision; so that every school boy could tell what a dollar was worth in most foreign money. We didn't hear about silver being such a base metal, as to be unfit for money. Now, some people in this country have become so wise beyond their day and generation as to entertain the very peculiar idea that the only money is gold; that it is the standard money for the world. That it's value does not fluctuate! When, as a matter of fact, by reducing, by law, the values of other monies, by making them legal tender in limited amounts, or for limited purposes, the gold money of our land and the other monies that are simply suffered to pass current, are much more valuable than they have been for years. Measure our money of today by what standard you will and see for yourself that the gold standard has nearly doubled the value of money. Try to sell what you have gathered about you and pay your debts, and see how you will come out. Try exchanging some of the "gold standard" money for the money of the countries that have not changed and see whose money value has changed.

The gold standard people have peculiar ideas when they, in the face of all evidence to the contrary keep on insisting that the gold standard alone is unchanging.

Such is Politics.

Politics often act strangely. They are said to make strange bedfellows. This year is no exception to the rule. And the G. O. P. is strictly in fashion. But a short time ago Gov. Clough was denounced as wholy unfit for the office to which he had succeeded; and unworthy the honor of the exalted position of Governor of Minnesota. Now the same men are lauding him to the skies; telling people that he is the very best, by all odds, of all the chief executives we have had. What a sorry lot of fellows his predecessors must have been!

Then there is Bob Dunn who would never do for State Auditor; who was said by men of his own party to be a drunkard. Now he is held up by the same parties as the very best Auditor our state ever had! Have we then had such a poor set of Auditors; or has Mr. Dunn reformed? Or, is Auditor Dunn any better than was Bob Dunn?

"Bill" Merriam too, Republicans claimed had bought his way as far as Governor and had aspirations to go to the U. S. Senate. Now he and his friends are said to be using all their powers to secure the appointment of C. K. Davis to a Cabinet position so Mr. Merriam may succeed him in his present position.

Congressman Towne who with his shining silver theories, has been made fun of, and scolded, and abused; but, some how or another kept growing more solid with the people; until the "bosses" seem to have concluded not to go to the trouble and expense of knocking him out of a nomination; but to let him use his eloquence for the G. O. P.; while possibly they may allow a good silver Populist to divide the vote with him, while a gold bug Democrat, with the aid of gold bug Republicans, picks the plum.

Then Hon. A. Y. Eaton, will probably, from recent indications, be a candidate on this motley ticket for Judge of the district court, for the 4th Judicial district.

The thing don't look right at all. The gold standard men are bound to do their best to win but are obliged to make some concessions, in order to pull the balance through. The consequence is an awful compound, a horrid dose; but so arranged that in case it is swallowed it will not be likely to effect a change in the condition of the patient; one ingredient directly antagonizing the effect of another. Just think of it! With the leading gold standard advocate of the state expecting an appointment from Gov. Clough makes the Governor a great runner. And when Mr. Merriam and his gold standard gets to Congress, he will find, in case he isn't swapped off the Hon. Charles A. Towne, of Duluth, with his silver tongue, in the Lower House, to watch his every move.

With gold standard Merriam, free silver Towne, and McKinley with a foot on either side of the teeter, and the rest of the little straddlebugs all along the line yelling for "protection" it, looks as if, while trying to shoot all the game at once, the shot would be so scattering as to serve only as an irritant to provoke voters to escape the toils of the great political machine.

We don't know that this schem will be carried to a successful finish; but it looks very much as if it would be given a good trial.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 14, 1896.

President Cleveland has never signed a River and Harbor bill, there isn't one chance in a thousand that he will sign the one passed by the Senate this week, which provides for spending the unheard of sum, in this connection, of $70,000,000. It is confidently expected that President Cleveland will veto this bill in a ringing message showing the reckless extravagance of the republicans.

There are democratic members of the A. P. A., but if those who attended the meetings of the Supreme council of that organization, in Washington this week, are not convinced that they are out of their element it is difficult to imagine what would convince them. Not being a member of the organization I cannot vouch for its truth, but those who are members assert that Mc Kinley has bought off the opposition. Anyway the A. P. A. isn't going to oppose McKinley.

Secretary Olney has been using some plain language to Spain in connection with those Americans it proposed to execute as the result of a court martial in Cuba, and he is prepared to talk still plainer if necessary to prevent punishment out of proportion to their offense being given them at the civil trial which Spain has promised them.

Not a single democratic member of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce voted for the Mahon Nicaragua canal bill, which was this weeek ordered to be favorably reported to the House by that committee. That is creditable to the democrats on that committee. It is a republican bill, founded upon the republican idea of public subsidies for private enterprise. It might as well appropiate $100,000,000 outright as to provide for government guarantee of bonds to that amount, as it does, so far as the final result is concerned. With the example of the Pacific railroads before them the people of the country should never endorse another scheme to loan the public credit to private corprations. If Congress regards the building of the Nicaragua canal as a public necessity let it provide for buying the interest of the private company and for having the canal built by the government. We have already had enough of the results of government partnership with private individuals. Czar Reed has not yet indicated whether he will allow this bill to pass at this session.

Senator Smith of N. J., returned to Washington more convinced than ever that the democrats can win this year if they exercise care and discretion. Speaking of the State convention in New Jersey he said: "The democrats gathered at Trenton with as much vim and spirit as they ever did. There were plenty of candidates for delegates to the National Convention, and among the rank and file there was a very general opinion that if the National Convention would only do the right thing on the money question there was hope of carrying New York, and that Connecticut and New Jersey would certainly be in the democratic fold."

Railroad men as a rule regard political conventions merely for the money they put into their coffers by the increase in travel. Hence, these words of a prominent railroader, now in Washington, contain not a little encouragement for democrats: "The premature capture of the republican nomination by McKinley is killing interest in the St Louis convention, but the railroads will do much better business on account of the Chicago convention. The contest over the financial question will be sure to attract intrest and spectators, and although Chicago didn't know it at the time, she got much the best convention so far as attendance is concerned."

The democratic Senators Harris, Vest and Walthall who form the majority of the subcommittee of the Senate Finance committee which has been designated by Senateor Morrill, that foxy old republican, to investigate the issues of bonds by this administration, under the resolution adopted by the Senate, are too smart to fall into the trap which has been set for them by the republicans. They were selected because of their being silver democrats, with the hope that they would use the investigation to widen the financial breach in the democratic party. The other members of the subcommittee are Jones, of Nevada, and Platt of Conn. Secretary Carlisle notified the Committee as soon as it was named that he would render all possible assistance. He has been asked to submit a statement in writing covering all the bond issues, and from that the committee will decide whether it wishes to examine Mr. Carlisle personally.

Representative Livingston, of Ga., who has just returned from his home, says: "I do not pretend to speak for any other State, but the democrats of Georgia do not know to bolt the regular ticket, and we are not going to learn at the coming election. If we are outvoted in the convention we will return home and support the nominee, and we expect the other to do likewise."

At the close of our school a pleasant and carefully prepared programme was rendered, reflecting much credit on our teacher, Miss Hilda A. Dalquist. In the "contest" the successful ones to carry off the nice present from Miss Dalquist were Miss Lillian E. Spates, Junior class, and Miss Allie Grave, Senior Class. The gifts consisted of two beautiful books of poems. This is Miss Dalquists second term, and reflects much credit on her. We congratulate her on the successful closing of her school, and predict a successful future for her, wherever she may be called to officiate.

GOLD BUGS, when they wish to propound a poser to their "silver" neighbors invariably say "Supppse we did have free coinage of silver how would the money get into circulation?" The easiest thing in the world, some one would want something that you have, worse than you did and they, haying the silver, would offer you what it was worth, then you would have some money all your own and it would take but a very short time for most anyone hereabouts to spend quite a quantity of dollars. He would find the demand sufficiently large to keep trade lively for a long time, and there would be no hindrance to a circulation But when a man only has a five dollar gold piece and can't find a man with change enough to "break" it for him and don't just see where the next one is coming from, how he will hang on to t.

Mexico's Dollar.

The Mexican Herald replies in emphatic terms to Edward Atkinson's charge that the silver dollar is a "dishonest dollar." It says: It pays our gold interest abrod; it pays all our bills at home. Our bankers are glad to take it on deposit; our great lawyers will accept it for fees, and so will our learned and skillful doctors. Our importing merchants cannot get too many of the broad, shining pieces. * * Measured by appreciated gold, it is not worth as much as formerly. Measured by domestic commodities in Mexico, China, and Latin America generally, it is worth quite as much as ever. It is such good money that here in Mexico we are building up great manufactaries on it, and are achieving a measure of industrial independence."

Because Mexico's dollar has kept even pace with the price of the product of labor, and demands of the producer and debtor no more of their product today to satisfy the demand of the purchaser and creditor, than it did yesterday or last year, the creditor class call it "dishonest." Only the dollar which constantly apreciates in purchasing power is deemed by that class as "honest" and "sound." But measured by the value of labor products Mexico's dollar is one of the few dollar of modern times that is honest—that does not unjustly take from the debtor and producer a yearly incseasing portion of their earnings, and that does not multiply debt and cut down the income of the producer.—Penny Press.

The gold standard is a snare, a delusion, and never can be accomplished without ruin to all the industrial classes, and to a very large proportion of the commerce of the world. The gold men know this (that is, those who know anything about national economics) and hence it is that much of the silver discussion is to throw dust in the eyes of the people, while the gold men, the bondocracy, are perfecting their plans to secure a monoply of all the credit (paper) "money" of the country. As the Philadelphia American says: "The whole question at issue, is not a mere quarrel over the use of two metals, but it involves a much more momentous one, viz: Whether a certaiii clique of bankers shall continue to control the nation's industries by monopolizing credit"—by controlling the paper currency of all our people. People should use a little "gumption." —Waseca Hesald.

Among Our Exchanges.

The gold press is now writing a column editorial daily to prove to itself that McKinley is "sound" in spite of his silver record.—Penny Press.

The Supreme Court of Georgia has reversed the finding of the lower court, by which Seventh-day Adventists were fined for working on Sunday.—Louisville Courer Journal.

"Mc Kinley and prosperity" is the watchword, not only in the ranks of the republican party but among a large number of democrats and populists as well.—Sherburne County Times.

The free-silverites are multiplying words demanding that we be restored to the days when we had a so-called double standard—when we had free coinage of both gold and silver, before the silver dollar was "striken down" in 1873. But we defy them to point to any period of our history, during the time when our mints were legally open to the free coinage of both gold and silver, that we were really on a double standard and had a circulation of both gold and silver. We defy them to show that under the so-called double standard we did not always have an actual single standard of either gold or silver-never both, and never both metals in concurrent circulation. It is idle to talk about what a double standard would do when it has already been fully demonstrated what a double standard has done.—Louisville Courier Journal.

A FEW years ago the Fiji islands were inhabited by cannibals. In 1895 they gave in cash $25,000 to the foreign missionary work.

MEXICO is the latest country to shut its doors against defaulters. At this rate the light-fingered gentry will soon have to form a union for their own protection.

IS THE bicycle a trunk or baggage in the real sense is a question now worrying railroad magnates. One thing is sure, wheels don't pack well in a baggage car.

THE nations of the earth in need of good horses can now be supplied by Uncle Sam "low for cash." He has sold 10,000 head to Germany the past year, and substituted in their place 1,000,000 bicycles.

A WOMAN stole a kiss from Senator Tillman in Denver and was lauded for her boldness. A man has been fined $100 for stealing a kiss from a woman in Chicago. And yet women are bawling for equal rights.

THE Boston Journal wants to know why "the horseless carriages on exhibition in that city are all provided with whip sockets?" It perhaps can be accounted for by evolutionists on the theory of the survival of the fittest.

IT wouldn't be in the least surprising if England led the United States in giving the suffrage to women. Lord Salisbury in a speech recently declared that woman suffrage must soon be conceded, and Mr. Balfour is said to agree with him, although this is not the view of the majority of the present unionist cabinet. Cardinal Vaughan, a prominent churchman, has also committed himself on the woman suffrage side.

THERE is a town on the upper Snake river in Idaho—at least the Caldwell (Idaho) Tribune vouches for the story—called "New Sweden." Hans Hansen is mayor of the town. Peter Peterson is clerk and the common council is composed of Peter Hansen, Hans Petersen, Peter Hans Petersen, Hans Peter Hansen and Peter Hansen Hans Petersen. No relationship exists among these men.

THERE is only one $10,000 United States note in existence, and that has never been issued, but is kept in the treasury as a specimen. There are $5,000 greenbacks. Two of them are in the treasury; the third was paid out several years ago, and is probably in the vault of some bank, because it has never been heard from since. One-thousand dollar notes are numerous. There are 74,146 in circulation, and over 15,000 $500 notes, 237,000 $100 notes, 260,000 $50 notes, 409,245 $20 notes, 834,924 $10 notes and 1,152,786 $5 notes in circulation.

THE Railway Age looks for increased railroad building this year, the probable total coming somewhere between 2,000 and 3,000 miles. Last year the record was 1,800 miles. In 1894 it was 1,950 and in 1893 2,600. The big mileage of five to ten years ago is not to be expected, since there is no demand for new lines of great length. Construction will be confined mainly to connecting links and short branches. This will prove more satisfactory than the building of roads for which there is no traffic either ready or in prospect.

THE experiments at Washington made with Prof. Langley's flying machine are said to have been successful beyond expectation, the details having been given to the public by Prof. Alex. Graham Bell and Prof. Langley. Mr. Bell, who witnessed the experiments, thinks "the practicability of mechanical flight has been demonstrated." The principle seems to be to spread the machine over as wide a surface as possible and give it a spiral movement which enables it to ascend like a bird. Langley is the first man who has really shown that the difficulties of human aerial flight can be surmounted.

COL. J. V. BROWER, Minnesota's state geographer, has discovered that the source of the Missouri river is not Red Rock lake, Montana, as reported. He says the longest upper branch of the Missouri does not flow through the lower Red Rock lake, but comes from a hole in the mountains at the summit of the Rocky mountains west of Henry's lake, Idaho, and at a point bordering the boundary between that state and Montana. It assumes the proportions of a river 20 miles from its source and runs past Red Butte and Beaver Head rock and thence to the Gulf of Mexico, through and past 13 states, 4,221 miles.

LIEUT. PEARY is satisfied that he could accomplish the finding of the north pole if $200,000 were put up to cover the expense of the enterprise. The question at once arises: Would the discovery be worth that amount of money? And, for that matter, would the discovery be of any value whatever to humanity, collectively or individually? The world has got along for thousands of years without there being any precise popular knowledge on the subject of its poles, and it may be relied upon to continue to revolve upon its axis without mankind attaining any greater precision in such knowledge.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Proceedings of the First Session.

Washington, May 15.—The Dupont case, involving the right of Henry A. Dupont to a seat in the senate from the state of Delaware, occupied the time in the senate yesterday. In the house the whole day was devoted to private pension bills and 58 in all were favorably acted upon. A favorable report was made on a resolution authorizing preliminary proceedings looking to the adoption of international coins.

Washington, May 16.—The senate yesterday rejected by a vote of 31 to 30 the claim of Henry A. Dupont (rep.) from Delaware to a seat in the senate. Senator Bacon (Ga.) spoke in favor of the bill to prohibit the issuance of government bonds without the authority of congress and Senator Gallinger (N. H.) offered a resolution declaring that a revision of the tariff laws is imperatively demanded. The house occupied itself in passing private pension bills which were favorably acted upon and 100 were passed, leaving about 60 yet undisposed of.

Washington, May 18.—The Cuban question was revived in the senate Saturday when Senator Morgan, of Alabama, spoke in favor of further and more decisive action toward the recognition of the Cubans as belligerents. The senator declared it to be the duty of congress to adopt joint resolutions on belligerency, which, unlike the previous concurrent resolutions, would require the approval of the president, and thus fix the responsibility.

Washington, May 19.—The senate yesterday defeated a motion to investigate alleged election irregularities in Alabama. The fortifications bill ($10,763,888) was reported. In the house the greater part of the session was taken up in the passage of 35 pension bills. The committee on banking and currency reported that it had adjourned until December next.

A CYCLONE'S WORK.

Over a Hundred Persons Lose Their Lives in Texas.

The City of Sherman Feels the Brunt of the Storm—Northeastern Kansas and Southeastern Nebraska Suffer from a Tornado.

Sherman, Tex., May 16.—Bodies of dead children are hanging on the branches of the ash, oak and orange trees of Denton and Grayson counties to-day. A cyclone, the most terrible northeastern Texas has ever experieiced, dashed out lives and wrecked homes in the village of Justin and the cities of Denton and Sherman Friday. Almost a hundred persons are dead. As many more are missing. To-day was to have been observed by the ex-confederates of Sherman as Decoration day, but instead of this 75 new graves will be prepared in the city cemetery for victims of a terrible and appalling calamity.

The Victims.

Following is a list of the known dead in this city:

R. L. Burns, wife and two children; Mrs. Otto Paulding and two children; James Nicholson, wife and two children; T. H. Montgomery, wife and two children; John Ames, wife and two children; Rev. Mr. Shearer; eight members of Pearce and Richardson families at Wakefield farm; child of Mrs. Craighead, Mrs. Burns and two children, Mrs. James Davis, Mrs. John Fields, Lucinda Lake, colored; Charles Cox, colored; Eliza Cox, colored; Rosina Lake, colored; Sloan Ballinger, colored; Katie Ballinger, colored; William Neickerson's four children, colored; Wright Clark and three members of his family, colored; Mrs. Athens; eighteen unidentified dead at the city hall; Dr. Sadler, who has not been seen since storm, believed to have been killed.

At Justin W. J. Evans was killed. At Gribble Springs a list of 17 deaths is reported.

Many Buildings Demolished.

At least 50 houses are totally wrecked. Most of them are small cottages, except in Fairview and Washington avenues, where the handsome residences of L. F. Ely, Capt. J. C. Stalter, Mrs. Pat Mattingly and James Falls also succumbed. The loss will reach at least $150,000 and but little, if any, of it was covered by cyclone insurance.

The devastation in spots where the cyclone was the worst is complete. Trees were stripped of their foliage in some places, while in others they were uprooted. Houses, once the pride of the city, are in some instances entirely gone, and in others only a pile of rubbish marks the place where they stood.

Story of an Eye-Witness.

Mayor Tone, of Denison, who is here, gives the following account of the cyclone:

"I was on the courthouse square about five o'clock and heard a roaring wind coming from the south. The next thing I knew the air was thick with mud and small specks resembling ashes. The cyclone did not strike the courthouse or jail, but followed up Post Oak creek. The roaring did not continue over two or three minutes. During all this time it rained hard. In about five minutes rumors began to spread that many lives had been lost, and the reports grew worse and worse as time passed. By nine o'clock 50 dead bodies had been brought into the public buildings and searching parties are out for more. Dead children have been found in trees, under leveled houses and in Post Oak creek. An iron bridge over Post Oak creek was twisted into scrap iron."

Disasters at Other Points.

Another storm of a similar nature passed about six miles west of the city at about the same hour. Several houses were blown down and many persons injured. Their names cannot be obtained. At Carpenter's Bluff, on Red river, it is reported that six persons were hurt, five seriously. Buildings and other structures in the way were demolished.

Six persons were injured, one of them fatally, by a cyclone which passed near Mound Ridge. A stretch of country about eight miles in length and 100 yards in width was devastated. Samuel Bass, a farmer, was fatally injured and his house demolished. Five others, whose names are unknown, were more or less seriously injured.

The storm struck Sherman without warning on the southwest corner of the city and cleared a path 100 yards wide along the west end of the town. Houses, trees, fences and everything went before the terrible force of the cyclone. The negro part of the town suffered the most severely. There are probably 30 negroes killed. Ten bodies have been picked up in Post Oak creek. The flood of rain which attended the storm was severe. The town is a mass of mud and floating debris. There is much difficulty in finding the dead and injured.

Deaths Number 105.

Sherman, Tex., May 18.—Sherman was visited Sunday by more than 20,000 persons, some coming through curiosity, others to help take care of the wounded and bury the dead. Thousands inspected the track of the storm. Physicians have now organized a regular corps of nurses and the wounded are receiving the best possible treatment.

The death list now reaches 105. Contributions are coming in from all parts of the country. They are very much needed. All contributions should be sent to C. H. Smith, chairman of the relief committee. L. H. Montgomery, a furniture dealer, whose family, consisting of his wife and three children, perished, is now confined in the jail a raving maniac.

News has just been received in this city by Drs. Hastings and Morrer, of Howe, Tex., who went with the Carpenter's Bluffs searching and relief party, who state that at Carpenter's Bluffs, five are dead and eight more seriously injured.

Kansas City, Mo., May 19.—Lates: news of the deadly tornado which swept through northeastern Kansas and a portion of southeastern Nebraska Sunday afternoon and night places the death list at 18. Thirty-six persons were injured. The storm did many thousands of dollars' damage in various towns through which it passed, besides at present incalculable damage in the intervening country. Many who escaped instant death are maimed for life, and in numerous instances the injuries are expected to result fatally.

Many Towns Suffer.

The storm covered a large scope of country. Seneca, Sabetha, Oneida, Bern, Frankfort, Reserve, Baileyville, Barnes, Spring Valley and several other places were in the deadly path.

The wreckage was not confined to the towns. In the country districts the loss of life and destruction of property was equally great. Chaos prevails throughout the stricken district, and in the confusion it is impossible to obtain a complete list of the dead and injured at the various places. The property loss cannot be estimated with any degree of accuracy at this time. There is no doubt, however, that the storm is the most appalling disaster that has been inflicted upon northeastern Kansas for years.

At Bigelow the west part of the town was wrecked and several people hurt, but no one was killed so far as known.

At Frankfort, 60 buildings were destroyed and 200 people rendered homeless. No one was killed, but eight persons were badly hurt and property loss of $100,000.

At Baileyville half of the town was laid waste and a number of people injured, but none were killed so far as can be learned at present.

At Seneca, four persons were killed, all of them children, the opera house, courthouse and principal school destroyed, many other buildings wrecked or badly damaged, and at least 20 persons more or less injured.

At Oneida, three children were killed, many people injured more or less and several buildings destroyed.

At Sabetha, several stores and other business buildings and 20 residences were destroyed and 25 persons injured, one of whom has since died, while six were killed in the vicinity.

At Reserve, four people were killed and 15 injured, while nearly every building on the town site was wrecked or badly damaged.

The Victims.

The death list is as follows:

At Seneca—Son and daughter of M. R. Connett, son of M. E. Voorhees and a son of Peter Assenmachers. All are children ranging in age from seven to 12 years.

At Oneida—Three small children of James Sherrard, Mrs. Jacob Weisner, Miss Hattie Bushney and Mrs. Ellen Carey.

At Sabetha—Mrs. Dan Stylor, Mrs. Schug, Mrs. Buch and one unknown.

At Reserve—W. D. Terhune, Ralph Sweeney, Viola Phillips and Mrs. John Kynder.

Damage in Nebraska.

Falls City, Neb., May 19.—Southeast Nebraska got the fag end of Sunday night's terrific storm, the wind sweeping up from Kansas with almost hurricane force. Many buildings in this city were demolished and the following persons injured: William Hinton, bad cut on head; Mrs. William Hinton, bruised. The house of the Hintons was torn to pieces. The Burlington depot was unroofed and the building damaged and box cars overturned all over the yards. Gedelmyer's brewery was blown down and is almost a complete wreck. The canning factory was also demolished, as was Brackhan's brewery and icehouses. Several dwellings were partly wrecked. All the telegraph wires were prostrated and Falls City was cut off from the outside world until Monday morning. The Missouri Pacific company suffered considerable loss. Reports from Salem are to the effect that some damage was done there.

GALLOWS FOR JACKSON.

Jury Returns a Verdict of Guilty—History of the Crime.

Cincinnati, May 15.—At 9:55 a. m. Thursday Judge Helm announced to the jury in the trial of Scott Jackson for the murder of Pearl Bryan that the case was now in their hands. The jury at once withdrew. Two hours and ten minutes later they returned with the following verdict:

"We, the jury, find the defendant Scott Jackson guilty of the murder of Pearl Bryan and fix the punishment at death."

The crime for which Scott Jackson is to be hanged was peculiarly distinctive. On the morning of February 1 the headless body of a woman was discovered four miles from this city. After several days' searching it was proved that the body was that of Miss Pearl Bryan, of Greencastle, the daughter of a prosperous farmer. She was supposed to have been visiting friends in Indianapolis. The trial of Jackson began April 1, and has been the most sensational criminal proceeding in the history of Kentucky. The evidence introduced by the commonwealth was in a great measure circumstantial. It showed conclusively that Jackson was the last person seen with Pearl Bryan before her death, to say nothing of Coachman George Jackson's story. The state proved that Jackson was the only person who could have had a motive in killing her.

SCOTT JACKSON.

GIBBONS ON THE A. P. A.

Head of the Catholic Church in America Writes a Letter.

Washington, May 19.—Through Rev. Dr. Stafford, of St. Patrick's church, this city, a prominent republican who held a foreign mission under President Harrison addressed several questions to Cardinal Gibbons relative to the so-called recent denials of religious liberty and attacks of the A. P. A. on the Catholic citizens of the country. The cardinal sent the following reply:

"BALTIMORE, May 17, 1896.

"MY DEAR SIR: It is the duty of the leaders of political parties to express themselves without any equivocation on the principles of religious freedom which underlie our constitution. Catholics are devoted to both the great political parties of the country, and each individual is left entirely to his own conscience. We are proud to say that in the long history of the government of the United States the great Catholic church has never used or perverted its acknowledged power by seeking to make politics subserve its own advancement. Moreover, it is our proud boast that we have never interfered with the civil and political rights of any who differ from us in religion. We demand the same rights for ourselves, and nothing more, and will be content with nothing less.

"Not only is it the duty of all parties distinctly to set their faces against the false and un-American principles thrust forward of late, but much as I would regret the entire identification of any religious body as such with any political party I am convinced that the members of a religious body whose rights—civil and religious—are attacked will naturally and unanimously espouse the cause of the party which has the courage openly to avow the principles of the civil and religious liberty according to the constitution. Patience is a virtue. But it is not the only virtue. When pushed too far it may degenerate into pusillanimity. Yours faithfully,

"JAMES, CARDINAL GIBBONS."

A Blaze in Washington.

Washington, May 19.—Fire swept away a whole block of commercial buildings opposite the Smithsonian institution soon after eight o'clock Monday evening. Lives of at least two firemen were crushed out by falling walls. The loss will exceed $200,000. The buildings covering the block adjoining the Center market constitute practically the entire commission and wholesale produce business of Washington.

A tornado near Poseyville, Ind., wrecked many houses and barns and damaged crops.

CARLISLE WRITES A LETTER.

Speaks of His Famous 1878 Speech—His Present Position.

Louisville, Ky., May 18.—The Courier-Journal prints the following letter from Secretary of the Treasury John G. Carlisle to Hon. John H. Johns, of Prestonsburg, Ky. Mr. Johns had written the secretary, saying that in discussion of the currency question with his free silver friends he finds that their strongest arguments seemed to be that Mr. Carlisle had made a speech in favor of the free coinage of silver on one occasion. The secretary in his reply says:

"The report that I made a speech in favor of free-coinage of silver was made for the first time about three years ago, and has been kept constantly in circulation by the advocates of free coinage ever since, notwithstanding the well-known fact that the only speech I ever made upon the subject, and which is printed in the official records of the proceedings of the house of representatives, shows clearly that I was opposed to that policy. Perhaps it will not be improper, in answering your letter, to state briefly what my position upon the question of free coinage then was, as shown by the speech of February 21, 1878, which is the one from which garbled extracts are being made by the advocates of that policy; and, in doing this, I distinctly disclaim any purpose to vindicate myself against the charge of inconsistency, because, in my opinion, such a charge, whether true or false is of no consequence whatever in the discussion of this or any other question.

"The fact that a man is wrong at one time in life constitutes no reason why he should be wrong always, and even if it were true that I had advocated the free-coinage of silver 18 years ago I would have been a political coward if I had refused on that account to follow my honest convictions and oppose such a policy when satisfied that it would be injurious to the country. I am more anxious to be right than to be consistent, and if the gentlemen who quote garbled extracts from an old speech, made when the conditions were entirely different from what they are now, can convince me by fair argument that any of my present opinions upon that or any other subject are erroneous, I will not hesitate to abandon them.

"The speech made in the house of representatives on the 21st day of February, 1878, is the only one to which the advocates of free coinage ever refer, and that was made in opposition to free coinage and in favor of striking out a free coinage provision from a bill, and inserting in place of it a section requiring the secretary of the treasury to purchase not less than $2,000,000 worth nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion each month, and coin it into standard silver dollars on account of the United States government and giving the government the benefit of the gain or seigniorage, instead of giving it to the owners of bullion, as would be the case under a system of free coinage. At that time the silver dollar had been dropped entirely from the coinage, by the act of February 12, 1873, and such as has been coined previous to that date were legal tender only to the extent of five dollars, by the act of 1874, the difference between the value of a silver dollar and the value of a gold dollar, at the ratio of sixteen to one, was only about seven or eight cents, and I, together with many other gentlemen who were opposed to free coinage, then believed that this small difference between the value of the two dollars would be removed if the United States should resume the coinage and use of silver as full legal tender.

"On the 5th day of November, 1877, a motion was made in the house of representatives to suspend the rules and it passed a bill which, among other provisions contained the following clauses:

"'And any owner of silver bulion may deposit the same at any United States coinage mint, or assay office, to be coined into such dollars, for his benefit, upon the same terms and conditions as gold bullion is deposited for coinage under existing laws.'

"Finally, after a long discussion in the senate, the bill was amended by striking out the free coinage provision and inserting in its place the following:

"'And the secretary of the treasury is authorized and directed to purchase from time to time silver bullion at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth per month, nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly as fast as so purchased; and a sum sufficient to carry out the foregoing provision of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. And any gain or seignorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the treasury as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage.'

"The bill with this amendment was sent back to the house for the concurrence of that body, and on the 21st day of February, 1878, while it was under consideration, I made the speech which has been so often referred to during the last three years by the advocates of free coinage, and a few sentences from which they have frequently published. In this speech I said among other things, that the overloaded taxpayers of this country, already staggering and sinking under the burdens imposed upon them by unwise legislation, would have been subjected by that provision to a new exaction of several millions of dollars annually to pay for coining the bullion of capitalists at home and abroad. I cannot become the advocate of such a system, either as to gold or silver, and although my vote was given for the bill as it passed the house under a suspension of the rules, with this feature in it, I did not approve of it, and then hoped that it would be amended in the senate

"My position upon this subject is briefly this: I am opposed to the free coinage of either gold or silver, but in favor of unlimited coinage of both metals upon terms of exact equality. No discrimination should be made in favor of one metal and against the other; nor should any discrimination be made in favor of the holders of either gold or silver bullion and against the great body of the people who own other kinds of property. A great government should treat all its citizens alike, and whenever it attempts to do otherwise it will engender a spirit of discontent which sooner or later must disturb the harmony if not the peace of society. It is scarcely necessary to say that a gross discrimination would be made between the two metals if the owners of silver bullion were permitted to have 51 or 52 cents' worth of silver coined and stamped as a dollar, when the owners of gold bullion were required to present 100 cents' worth of gold in order to have their metal coined and stamped as a dollar. The two metals are coined upon terms of exact equality only when a dollars' worth of silver is contained in the silver dollar and a dollars' worth of gold is contained in the gold dollar, and when no more is charged for the coinage of one than for the coinage of the other. In the speech referred to I showed that the ratio established by the coinage act of 1792 overvalued silver and drove gold out of circulation."

WEYLER'S LATEST.

He Orders Cuban Farmers to Deliver Up All Grain Stored.

Havana, May 16.—Capt. Gen. Weyler has issued a proclamation ordering the farmers and peasantry during the next 20 days to transport to the towns in their vicinity all of the corn and other grain stored upon their farms. This order applies to the provinces of Pinar del Rio, Havana and Matanzas. The military quartermasters are authorized by this order to purchase the grain sent to the towns by the farmers at the current price, and if the grain is not required by the government it will be stored for the account of its owners. After the period of 20 days has elapsed, the proclamation declares, any grain found upon farms in the provinces mentioned will be regarded as contraband of war and will be seized and the owners thereof subjected to criminal proceedings.

A Duelist Sentenced.

Berlin, May 18.—Baron von Kotze, formerly court chamberlain, has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment in a fortress for the killing of Baron Schrader, master of ceremonies of the Prussian court. The duel, which grew out of the anonymous letter scandal which some years ago convulsed Berlin's highest society, took place near Potsdam on the morning of April 10. Baron Schrader was fatally shot in the abdomen.

Boils

It is often difficult to convince people their blood is impure, until dreadful carbuncles, abscesses, boils, scrofula or salt rheum, are painful proof of the fact. It is wisdom now, or whenever there is any indication of blood, to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and prevent such eruptions and suffering.

Impure

"I had a dreadful carbuncle abscess, red, fiery, fierce and sore. The doctor attended me over seven weeks. When the abscess broke, the pains were terrible, and I thought I should not live through it. I heard and read so much about Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I decided to take it, and my husband, who was suffering with boils, took it also. It soon purified our built me up and restored my health so that, although the doctor said I would not be able to work hard, I have since done the work for 20 people. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured my husband of the boils, and we regard it a wonderful medicine." MRS. ANNA PETERSON, Latimer, Kansas.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, of ROXBURY, MASS., Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor.) He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

THAT'S WHY WE SING.

In spite o' wind an' weather
We are goin' on together,
An' we're doin' o' the right an' o' the wrong;
But the blue sky bends above us,
An'—thank God!—there's one'll love us,
An' that's why we're a-singin' of a song!

In spite o' all our sighin'
For the livin' an' the dyin',
The roses keep a-bloomin' right along;
If we live, there's one'll kiss us—
If we die, there's one'll miss us,
An' that's why we're a-singin' of a song!

There's lots o' cares an' crosses,
An' there's lots o' gains an' losses,
But we're goin' on together with the throng;
But love is so beguilin',
An' the lights o' home are smilin',
An' that's why we are singin' of a song!

O it's love to-day—to-morrow,
An' it's love in joy an' sorrow,
An' the weak are fightin' bravely with the strong;
Though darkest storms surround us,
Still the arms o' love are round us,
An' that's why we are singin' of a song!

AMANDA TODD.

BY MARY E. WILKINS.

Amanda Todd's orbit of existence is restricted, of a necessity, since she was born, brought up and will die in this village, but there is no doubt that it is eccentric. She moves apart on her own little course quite separate from the rest of us.

Had Amanda's lines of life been cast elsewhere, where circumstances had pushed her, instead of hemming her in, she might have become the feminine apostle of a new creed, have founded a sect or instituted a new system of female dress. As it is, she does not go to meeting, she never wears a bonnet and she keeps cats.

Amanda Todd is 60, and she never was married. Had she been, the close friction with another nature might have worn away some of the peculiarities of hers. She might have gone to meeting, she might have worn a bonnet, she might even have eschewed cats, but it is not probable. When peculiarities are in the grain of a person's nature, as they probably are in hers, such friction only brings them out more plainly, and it is the other person who suffers.

The village men are not, as a rule, very subtle, but they have seemed to feel this instinctively. Amanda was, they say, a very pretty girl in her youth, but no young man ever dared make love to her and marry her. She had always the reputation of being "an odd stick," even in the district school. She always kept by herself at recess, she never seemed to have anything in common with the other girls and she always went home alone from singing school. Probably never in her whole life has Amanda Todd known what it is to be protected by some devoted person of the other sex through the mighty perils of our village street.

There is a tradition in the village that once in her life, when she was about 25 years old, Amanda Todd had a beautiful bonnet and went to meeting.

Old Mrs. Nathan Morse vouches for the reliability of it, and, moreover, she hints at a reason. "When Mandy, she was 'bout 25 years old," she says, "George Henry French, he come to town, and taught the district school, and he see Mandy, an' told Almira Benton that he thought she was about the prettiest girl he ever laid eyes on, and Almiry, she told Mandy. That was all there ever was to it, he never waited on her, never spoke to her, fur's I know, but right after that, Mandy, she had a bunnit, and she went reg'lar to meetin'. 'Fore that her mother could scarcely get her to keep a thing on her head out of doors—allers carried her sunbunnit a-danglin' by the strings, wonder she wasn't sunstruck a million times—and as for goin' to meetin', her mother, she talked and talked, but it didn't do a mite of good. I s'pose her father kind of upheld her in it. He was most as odd as Mandy. He wouldn't go to meetin' unless he was driv, and he wa'n't a member. 'Nough sight ruther go out prowlin' round in the woods like a wild animal, Sabbath days, than go to meetin'. Once he ketched a wildcat, an' tried to tame it, but he couldn't. It bit and chewed so he had to let it go. I guess Mandy gets her liking for cats from him fast enough. Well, Mandy, she had that handsome bunnit, and she went to meetin' reg'lar 'most a year, and she looked as pretty as a picture sittin' in the pew. The bunnit was trimmed with green gauze ribbon and had a wreath of fine pink flowers inside. Her mother was real tickled, thought Mandy had met with a change. But land, it didn't last no time. George Henry French, he quit town the next year and went to Somerset to teach, and pretty soon we heard he hed married a girl over there. Then Mandy, she didn't come to meetin' any more. I dunno what she did with the bunnit—stamped on it, most likely, she always had consider'ble temper—anyway, I never see her wear it arterwards."

Thus old Mrs. Nathan Morse tells the story, and somehow to a reflective mind the picture of Amanda Todd in her youth decked in her pink-wreathed bonnet, selfishly but innocently attending in the sanctuary of divine love in order to lay hands on her own little share of earthly affection, is inseparable from her, as she goes now, old and bare-headed, defiantly past the meeting house, when the Sabbath bells are ringing.

However, if Amanda Todd had elected to go bareheaded through the village street from feminine vanity, rather than eccentricity, it would have been no wonder. Not a young girl in the village has such a head of hair as Amanda. It is of a beautiful chestnut color, and there is not a gray thread in it. It is full of wonderful natural ripples, too—not one of the village girls can equal them with her papers and crimping pins—and Amanda arranges it in two superb braids wound twice around her head. Seen from behind, Amanda's head is that of a young beauty; when it turns a little, and her harsh old profile becomes visible, there is a shock to the stranger.

Amanda's father had a great shock of chestnut hair, which was seldom cut, and she inherits this adornment from him. He lived to be an old man, but that ruddy crown of his never turned gray.

Amanda's mother died long ago; then her father. Ever since she has lived alone in her shingled cottage with her cats. There were not so many cats at first; they say she started with one fine tabby, who became the mother, grandmother and great-grandmother to armies of kittens.

Amanda must destroy some when she can find no homes for them, otherwise she herself would be driven afield, but still the impression is of a legion.

A cat is so covert, it slinks so secretly from one abiding place to another and seems to duplicate itself with its sudden appearances, that it may account in a measure for this impression. Still there are a great many. Nobody knows just the number—the estimate runs anywhere from 15 to 50. Counting, or trying to count, Amanda Todd's cats is a favorite amusement of the village children. "Here's another," they shout, when a pair of green eyes gleams at them from a post. But is it another, or only the same cat who has moved? Cats sit in Amanda's windows; they stare out wisely at the passers-by, from behind the panes, or they fold their paws on the ledge outside in the sunshine. Cats walk Amanda's ridgepole and her fence, they perch on her posts and fly to her cherry trees with bristling fur at the sight of a dog. Amanda has as deadly a hatred of dogs as have her cats. Everyone which comes within stone throw of her she sends off yelping, for she is a good shot. Kittens tumble about Amanda's yard and crawl out between her fence pickets under people's feet. Amanda will never give away a kitten except to a responsible person, and is as particular as if the kitten were a human orphan, and she the manager of an asylum.

She will never, for any consideration, bestow one of her kittens upon a family that keeps a dog, or where there are many small children. Once she made a condition that the dog should be killed, and she may be at times inwardly disposed to banish the children.

Amanda Todd is extremely persistent when she has selected a home which is perfectly satisfactory to her for a kitten. Once one was found tied into a little basket like a baby on the doorstep of a childless and humane couple who kept no dog, and there is a story that Deacon Nehemiah Stockwell found one in his overcoat pocket and never knew how it came there. It is probable that Amanda resorts to these extreme measures to save herself from either destroying her kittens or being driven out of house and home by them.

However, once, when the case was reversed, Amanda herself was found wanting. When she began to grow old, and the care of her pets told upon her, it occurred to her that she might adopt a little girl. Amanda has a comfortable little income, and would have been able to provide a good living for a child, as far as that goes

But the managers of the institution to whom Amanda applied made inquiries, and the result did not satisfy them. Amanda stated frankly her reason for wishing to take the child, and her intentions with regard to her. She wished the little girl to tend her cats and assist her in caring for them. She was willing that she should attend school four hours per day, going after the cats had their breakfast, and returning an hour earlier to give them their supper. She was willing that she should go to meeting in the afternoon only, and she could have no other children come to visit her for fear they would maltreat the kittens. She furthermore announced her intention to make her will, giving to the girl, whom she should adopt, her entire property in trust for her cats, to include her own maintenance on condition that she devote her life to them as she had done.

The trustees declared that they could not conscientiously commit a child to her keeping for such purposes, and the poor little girl orphan, who had the chance of devoting her life to the care of pussy cats and kittens, to the exclusion of all childish folowers, remained in her asylum.

So Amanda to this day lives alone, and manages as best she can. Nobody in the village can be induced to live with her; one forlorn old soul preferred the almshouse.

"I'd 'nough sight ruther go on the town than live with all them cats," she said.

It is rather unfortunate that Amanda's shingled cottage is next the meeting house, for that, somehow, seems to render her non-church-going more glaringly conspicuous, and then, too, there is a liability of indecorous proceedings on the part of the cats.

They evidently do not share their mistress' dislike of the sanctuary, and find its soft pew cushions very inviting. They watch their chances to slink in when the sexton opens the meeting house; he is an old man and dim-eyed, and they are often successful. It is wise for anybody before taking a seat in a pew to make sure that one of Amanda's cats has not forestalled him; and often a cat flees down one flight of the pulpit stairs as the minister ascends the other.

We all wonder what will become of Amanda's cats when she dies. There is a report that she has made her will and left her property in trust for the cats to somebody, but to whom? Nobody in this village is anxious for such a bequest, and whoever it may be will probably strive to repudiate it. Some day the cats will undoubtedly go by the board; young Henry Wilson, who has a gun, will shoot some, the rest will become aliens and wanderers, but we all hope Amanda Todd will never know it.

In the meantime she is undoubtedly carrying on among us an eccentric, but none the less genuine mission. A home missionary is Amanda Todd, and we should recognize her as such in spite of her non-church-going proclivities. Weak in faith though she may be, she is, perchance, as strong in love as the best of us. At least I do not doubt that her poor little four-footed dependents would so give evidence if they could speak.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Florida Indians.

"Our Indians," says Dr. Brecht, Indian commissioner in the state of Florida, "are not multiplying rapidly. This is due to physiological and social reasons. Still, there has been an increase. In 1859 there were but 112. Now there are something over 500. The chief social reason for their slow propogation is the custom of countenancing no marriages of persons who have a drop of the same blood in their veins. This is sometimes hard on the girls. One leader I know has two beautiful daughters, who cannot get married because the eligible young men are almost all akin to them."—Chicago Chronicle.

STATUE OF OLE BULL.

Unveiled at the Exposition Building in Minneapolis.

The Occasion One of Great Importance in the History of the Northwest—Two of the World's Great Artists Were Honored.

With patriotism for their adopted country, with ardent love for their native land, with intense adoration of the memory of two departed sons of Norway, fully 7,000 sons and daughters of the Norsemen, the Vikings, the Danes and the Swedes crowded into the Exposition auditorium at Minneapolis on Sunday afternoon, May 17, to celebrate with joy two events, and to blend with their happiness a full quota of sorrow. The first two events, in which happiness reigned, were the international singing contest, and the unveiling of the great statue to Ole Bull, that noble genius who made the world lay at his feet through the matchless melodies of his violin.

The other and sadder event was the paying of a tribute to the memory of Jakob Fjelde, who, almost under the eyes of that immense throng, had moulded from a shapeless shaft that very statue; and, when it had been finally completed, yielded up the spark of life.

The singing contest, for which there were entered nine societies, embracing three nationalities, German, Swedish and Norwegian, was conducted amidst the greatest enthusiasm and interest. Patriotism figured largely in the tumults of applause which followed each band of singers as it left the stage. There were enough friends of each in that big audience to swell the noise into miniature thunder. Aside from the spirit of rivalry which prompted many to applaud, there were thousands who clapped their hands in simple appreciation of good singing and excellent work. Each society showed the most careful training. Each leader worked hard, and when he trailed from the scene of action at the heels of his lusty throated kinsmen, he was confident that the prize would come to him.

The various societies entered were:

German — "Concordia," St. Paul; "Frohsinn," Minneapolis.

Swedish—"Svenska Sangarne," St. Paul; "Orpheus" and "Unge Svea," Minneapolis.

Norwegian—"Norges Ekko," St. Paul; "Normaendenes Sangforening," Minneapolis.

For two hours the singers held the boards, and for another hour they listened to addresses by Ignatius Donnelly, John W. Arctander and Frank M. Nye.

"Heartwounds."

Swelling and ever increasing, this beautiful composition from Greig penetrated every corner of the vast auditorium. Danz's Orchestra, made up of stringed instruments entirely, played this selection as it is rarely played, and bringing the theme so vividly into each heart that there was not one in the audience who, when the last strains died away, was not prepared for what was to follow. When the piece had been rendered and the orchestra had quietly withdrawn, John W. Arctander slowly advanced to the front of the stage and lifted his hand as an appeal for absolute quietness. There was scarcely need of the motion, for no one moved, no one whispered.

"The moment has come," commenced Mr. Arctander, "for the unveiling to public gaze of the last grand masterpiece of our dear departed countryman and artist, Jakob Fjelde. If there be such a thing in this world as a spirit land, you may all feel near you and around you the benign and artistic presence of the dead sculptor, whose hands fashioned yonder work. I seem to feel it now hovering about me. I ask you, dear friends, out of respect to the dead, and in love of his memory, not to lift a finger in applause when the veil shall have been lifted, but to rise to your feet as a testimonial of sorrow and regard. I would further ask you to remain standing until the last strains of the orchestra shall have ceased."

Then followed a scene such as is rarely witnessed. And who that saw it can say in the future, that in this busy, careless, laughing world of today there does not beat a heart bursting with universal love; a heart which does not weep at the outgoing of such men and such genius as that of Fjelde, as that of Ole Bull.

It was Ole Bull's composition which the orchestra rendered. The players were hidden from sight, and as the great audience arose, and came to a perfect stillness, there was wafted to each ear a song which was equally plaintive, equally sad as "Heartwounds." It was Ole Bull's "Chalet Girl's Sunday." The moment was impressive, thrilling. Not one of that vast concourse of people moved. More distinct came the notes of the orchestra, and then the president motioned to an unseen figure behind the curtains. A beautiful figure and a beautiful face appeared. Miss Caroline Boeckman, of St. Paul, upon whom the honor of unveiling the monument had been conferred, stepped forward, and drawing upon the cord, lifted high in the air the covering which had screened Fjelde's masterpiece.

A colossal figure of spotless white, fashioned by the now cold hands of the dead sculptor, burst into view, and held each eye spell-bound. There was intense silence. Not a murmur of applause was heard. The moment was too sacred, too reverent.

The oration of the day was delivered by Ignatius Donnelly. The selection of this speaker, himself a storehouse of literature and history, was not amiss. Mr. Donnelly spoke at length upon the Scandinavian races, paying their art, their science, their character the highest of tributes.

Fjelde, The Sculptor.

Jakob H. G. Fjelde was borne in Aalesund, Norway, April 10, 1859. At a very early age he showed talent in the direction that finally became his life work. At the age of 14 he came to Chicago with his parents and for some time tried his hand at carpenter work and from that drifted into wood carving. At the age of 17 he returned to Christiania, where he worked at this latter trade. Here he carved two heads, one laughing and one crying. These he took to Bergslien, Norway's foremost sculptor, who became amazed at at the evidences of genius of young Fjelde, and at once offered him a position in his studio. He remained with him a year and a half. From there he went to Copenhagen, where he had such success that at the age of 22 he could afford to go to Rome. He studied and worked and lived the ideal artist's life. His letters sent home to his mother and sweetheart breathed enthusiasm, and were full of plans for the future. Up to this time his work was of the Thorvaldson school, but from this time on, his work is a mixture of the Italian and French. While in Rome he became acquanted with Henrik Ibsen, of whom he made a bust, which he presented to the city's art gallery.

After spending two years in Rome he returned to Norway, where he did considerable portrait work. In 1887 he decided to again embark for America. After spending some time in Chicago, he came to Minneapolis, which was his home until death.

Jakob Fjelde's work was very numerous, he having made busts of prominent men wherever he has been. In Minneapolis he has some work that undoubtedly will live for generations, and perpetuate the name of him who formed them.

Of these his greatest is considered to be that of Ole Bull, which was unveiled at the celebration of Norway's independence day, Sunday, May 17. As before mentioned this work was just completed before he was taken sick. There have been some rumors to the effect that Mr. Fjelde did not complete the work—that is, repair the falling off of some of the face—but that rumor had no authentic origin. On the contrary those who had the statue in charge are most emphatic in declaring that the artist's work was completed. The casting, which is mechanical, had been done by Fjelde's assistant, Mr. Berger, and he would have done it even if Fjelde had lived.

In 1891 the legislature of the state of Minnesota appropriated $20,000 for the erection to the memory of the famous charge of the First Minnesota at the battle of Gettysburg on July 2, '63. Mr. Fjelde's design was accepted in preference to nearly a hundred others from all parts of the country. The figure, as shown, is of heroic size, and was completed in July, 1893. The committee who had charge of accepting a design were Judge Lochren, Major Heffelfinger and Mathew Marvin. The figure is mounted on granite and has a very conspicuous place on the famous battle field, but has never been formally dedicated. The committee who had charge of the monument have the greatest words of praise for the care and conscientiousness that Mr. Fjelde showed in his work on this statue.

The statue "Hiawatha and Minnehaha" is the result of the hoarded pennies of the school children of the state. The statue was placed in the vestibule of the Minnesota building and was one of its principal attractions. Artists from all over the world praised it highly. During the burning of some of the world's fair buildings it had a narrow escape; but through the precaution of Mrs. Hunt it had been placed in a fire proof box. It is now in the Minneapolis public library.

Ashantee Surnames.

There are seven surnames in Ashantee, corresponding to the days of the week, as follows: Kwasie indicates a man born on Sunday, Kudjoe on Monday, Kwabina on Tuesday, Kwaku on Wednesday, Yao on Thursday, Koffi on Friday, and Kwamina on Saturday. These are all accented on the first syllable.

DESTRUCTIVE LIGHTNING.

Strokes That Have Resulted in Enormous Loss of Life.

The most destructive strokes of lightning have been those which have caused explosions. There have been several notable instances of accidents of this kind. Thus, on August 18, 1869, says the Bangor Commercial, the tower of St. Nazaire, at Brescia, was struck by lightning. In a large vault beneath the tower lay an immense quantity of gunpowder. This immediately exploded; a sixth part of the whole city of Brescia was destroyed, while not a single building escaped damage. The stones of the tower were flung up into the air and carried by the force of the explosion to immense distances. The number of persons killed was 3,000. In another case, the fortress of Luxemburg, in which again there was stored a great quantity of gunpowder, was struck by lightning. The explosion that followed reduced the whole of the lower town to a heap of ruins. In this instance, some of the stones composing the fortress were hurled to a distance of close on three miles. Again, in November 1856, the church of St. John, in the Island of Rhodes, which was used as a powder magazine, which struck in the same way. The church and the houses in the neighborhod were destroyed, and more than 200 dead bodies were discovered among the debris.

FIVE MAMMALS.

Wild Animals That Inhabited England in Former Times.

The beaver is one of the five mammalian animals that have inhabited England in former times, and have become extinct within historic record, according to Notes and Queries.

They are the true brown bear, (Ursus arctos), the beaver, (Castor fiber), the reindeer, (Tarandus rangifer), the wild boar, (Sus scrofa), and the wolf, (Canis lupus). The bear was abundant in the north of England and in Scotland when this country was in the hands of the Romans, and many Caledonian bears were imported into Rome. They disappeared altogether in about 750.

The beaver was numerous in some localities in the north of Wales in 940 and again in 1188. There are records of them much later in Scotland.

Reindeer were abundant in Scotland, and were hunted in Caithness in the year 1159.

Wild boars were numerous when large tracts of wood gave them harbor. They were hunted by the Tudors. They certainly existed in the year 1617, and probably much later.

The wolf in England disappeared about 1490.

In Scotland wolves were numerous in 1577. According to Pennant, they became extinct in 1680.

LAVA CAVES.

Curious Formations Produced by the Cooling of Molten Masses.

The formation of caves in a lava stream is a curious process, and one which the explorer in the Azores will be interested to realize as his investigations proceed, and in these islands it has some remarkable and perfect illustrations. It will be understood, says Outing, that the stream from a volcano soon begins to cool externally as it travels, but with a great stream, say 30 or 40 feet thick, a long time passes before it becomes finally cooled and solid to its center. A large body of melted lava still remains liquid in its interior, forming, as it were, a huge conduit or tube full of the white hot matter. As this accumulates by the continued supply from above the vast pressure of the liquid on the lower end of the stream increases. The effect may be easily imagined. The solid crust at the front of the flow breaks out; the melted interior rushes on again and the great tube is emptied of its contents so far as they remain liquid, leaving behind a hollow cavern which may, and occasionally does, extend for an uninterrupted length of several miles. In the course of centuries subsequent eruptions may deposit new beds of cinder or ash streams of lava to any extent above it, but the cave so formed may remain intact.

TO THE ST. LOUIS CONVENTION

With the Celebrated Republican Flambeau Club.

A special vestibuled train of sleeping cars, dining and baggage cars, will be run from Minneapolis and St. Paul to St. Louis June 13th via the CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY (the popular "Hedrick Route") to accommodate the Republican Flambeau Club and their friends throughout the Northwest.

Leave the Twin Cities afternoon of June 13th and arrive St. Louis next day.

This train will be side-tracked at a point within two blocks of Auditorium Convention Hall and six minutes' walk to the principal hotels. Passengers desiring to do so can occupy the sleepers during the convention at low rates.

The service, in every particular, will be absolutely first-class, and all may depend upon thoroughly comfortable and pleasant accommodations, both going and returning, and while occupying the cars in St. Louis.

The Republican Flambeau Club is composed of leading business and professional men in Minnesota, and their trips to former National Conventions and Inaugurations have always done great credit to the Northwest.

The railroad rate is one fare for the round trip. For exact information as to sleeping car rates and accommodations, meals, etc., address Frank P. Nantz, Secretary Republican Flambeau Club, 604 Oneida Block, Minneapolis, or J. T. Conley, Assistant General Passenger Agent C., M. & St. P. Ry., St. Paul.

BIG AND GOOD.

BattleAx PLUG

Sometimes quality is sacrificed in the effort to give big quantity for little money.
No doubt about that.
But once in a while it isn't.
For instance, there's "BATTLE AX."
The piece is bigger than you ever saw before for 5 cents. And the quality is, as many a man has said, "mighty good."
There's no guess work in this statement.
It is just a plain fact.
You can prove it by investing 5 cents in "BATTLE AX."

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, MAY 22, 1896.

DELANO DIARY

--The village is being cleaned up nicely this season, earlier than common.

—A number of coal and ore cars and a lot of iron water pipes of large size passed through town bound for the west, this week.

—C. W. Kerrick got home early Tuesday morning from Howard Lake, where he had been bidding on the job of putting in water and electric lights. He didn't get the job. Some St. Paul firm went under him.

—One of our citizens has suggested to us that if the village council are determined to contribute funds for the 4th of July celebration every year, that they ought to add to the assessment for taxes a mill or two tax for the especial purpose. That would be the proper thing to do, if they must pay it out.

—A meeting of those interested in having Memorial day observed in Delano are requested to meet at 8 o'clock P. M. at the city hall, to help in arranging committees and making other needed preparations. The time is short and what is to be done must be done then. Be on hand at 8 o'clock, Saturday evening, May 23.

—Mrs. Wickland aged 77 years fell from a porch at Peter Nelson's in Independence, last Friday and breke her collor bone. She was brought home Sunday and did not learn what was the matter with her arm that she could not use it untill Monday when surgical services were secured. She is now stopping with the family of Mr. Bergren.

—At a meeting of the Ladies Aid of the M. E. Church, held at the residence of C. H. Green, on Friday, May 15, the following were elected officers for the ensuing term; President Mrs. H. V. Wilder; Vice-President, Miss Mary Catlin; Treasurer, Mrs. J. L. Farber; Secretary, Mrs. C. H. Green. The society meets this week at the Methodist Manse.

—Our Village Democratic Committee should now get a move on itself and stir up the faithful to attend the primary election to send delegates to Buffalo, on Wednesday, June 10 to elect delegates to the State Convention. These delegates will express the views of the state on money, tariff and other questions, send the men who will best represent you.

—The St. Anthony Benevolent Society, of Delano, has taken hold of the 4th of July celebration, and it is a guaranty that there wiill be a good one. Committees have been appointed and funds secured ensuring the success of the undertaking. Delano has long been noted for her first class 4th of July celebrations and those in charge for this year promise that this will not fall behind in interesting those in attendance.

—The High School graduating class have been unusually busy this week sending out invitations to the commencement exercises, in addition to their customary work. Rev. Geo. Innis, Prof. in Hamline University is to preach the Baccalaurate sermon on Sunday, May 31. This is an event in the lives of the six young graduates long to be remembered. Turn out and hear the sermon and help encourage those who have labored hard to make this event possible. This is the largest graduating class our school has ever had.

—The Village Council held a meeting on Monday evening, full board present. They voted an appropriation of $50, for the St. Anthony Benevolent Society to celebrate the 4th of July with. They requested the Board of Health to look over the village and suggest an extension of the "Swine limits." They voted to have the committee on poor make a bargan for two weeks care of Mrs. Wickland, by Mr, Bergren. And the President talked, and he talked, and he talked some more, and then everybody was tired, and an adjournment was taken till Tuesday night,

--If our Village council keep on hunting up old laws aed making new ones, regarding people to abide by them, we are in hopes they will come to the contracts they have with the saloon keepers in rime to save some of the young men of the village following in the foonsteps of the far to many old drunkards that abide in our midst; and who are kept so by violation of the coneract. and the fractureing of the oaths of office of the council who agree to enforce the laws. It is generaly understood that few if any saloons are run in Delano as the law directs, and if the council acts up to the duty the violators can not well be licensed.

—We have always insisted that the Village had no business legally, or morally, to appropiate funds from the Treasury to defray the expenses of a 4th of July celebration. We have always claimed that the celebration should be within the means furnished by the patriotism of its citizens, and not by taxes or other public monies in the Village Treasury, We have always held that the precident once established would lead on to greater evells and be hard to get rid of, and we now claim that the Council exceeded the limits of its just powers, and certainly overstepped the safty line a long way, when it consented to appropriate $50, to a Society to hold an entertainment on the 4th of July, for the purpose of making money. It matters not what society or individual it may be that wishes to speculate on the patriotism of the people it is wrong, and should not be upheld by anyone.

—C. W. Kerrick is now at home in his new Third Street residence.

—C. H. Green will occupy the Powers house; near the school house soon.

--Uncle Joe Bland drove in this week with some fine beef from his farm. Somehow he seems to have an inexhaustible supply of fine cattle.

—Since the Eagle has thrown up its contract for doing the Village printing, it is time for the Council to elect an official paper, according to law.

--The new "Doggery" has struck its first "Protective tariff" wave The village council have concluded to enforce the ordinance and collect $1, or $3, per head for all dogs in the village.

—There appears to be one consoling fact in connection with the elevated sidewalks to which our village is now treating itself. The "Burgomaster" can look down on his subjects as he passes by.

--We are prepared to furnish the nicest 4th of July bills that has ever been seen in these parts, at reasonable rates. Cash must accompany the orders, which must be sent in early, write for prices.

—Four new lights are to be placed on the street; one at Fourth St. and R. R. Ave.; one at Bridge and Watertown streets one at Bridge St. and the Waverly road; one at the R. R. crossing on the Watertown road.

—A memorial entertainment by the four lower rooms of the Public School will be given at the City Hall on Friday evening May 29. Be there and see see and hear some of the things the little folks have learned.

--Adam was the first man, for a long time, with the degree of firmness and determination to persist in talking, and voting, for what he knows, or thinks to be right notwithstanding it is not in accordance with the views so freely expressed by the Mayor.

—The swine limits have been extended to take in the entire village out to the farms. There is talk of making a provision in the ordinance to grant permits to keep hogs, to those who can keep them without diturbing their neighbors but if such a plan is adopted we predict the council will very soon tire of it.

—Mrs Wicklund who broke her right collar bone last week, in her helpless condition being 77 years old, fell and broke the end off from the largest bone of the elbow on her left arm. Both arms now have to be carried in slings and as her hips were injured before she is in a very helpless condition and should have constant attention.

—On Wednesday afternoon as Bev. Yancy was coming up River Street and just as he stepped into Bridge Street he was forcibly reminded, as a young lady hastily dismounted from her bicycle, as it ran against his portly form, that on the sidewalks is no place for wheels. Buffalo has lately passed an ordinance that sidewalks shall not be used for bicycling.

—At a meeting of the Sunday School board, officers, and teachers of the Delano M. E. Sunday School, held at the church, on Tuesday evening, Rev. J. L. Farber presided and John J. Catlin served as Secretary. Officers and Teachers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

OFFICERS.

Superintendent, Prof. Charles S. Hawker.
Assistant Superintendent, Dr. T. J. Catlin.
Secretary, John J. Catlin.
Treasurer, Mrs. Addie Green.
Librarian, Miss Mollie Maxfield.
Organist. Miss Viola B. Cunningham.

TEACHERS.

Class No. Name,
1. Bible Class, Dr. T. J. Catlin.
2. Young People's Mrs. Mary E. Hawker.
3. 1st Girl's Class. Mrs Addie Green.
4. 2nd Girl's Class. Miss. Hattie Gross.
5. 1st Boy's Class. Miss Annie R. Quinn.
6. 2nd Boy's " Mrs. A. Farber.
7. 3d Boy's " Mrs. E. B. Strickland.
7. Infant " Miss Viola B. Cunningham.

The school has a good attendance and is in a flourishing condition. But there is room for more; and everybody is invited to attend at 12 M. every Sunday.

School Play.

"Which is Which" will be presented by the Senior Class at their class play on next Wednesday evening, May 27. It will be preceded by a curtain raiser entitled "The Bicyclers" which is very laughable and entertaining. It gives the experiences of a person learning to ride a bicycle, and should not be missed by bicycle riders or anyone who contemplates being one. "Which is Which" is a fifty minute play and very interesting: It gives the bright and dark side of a debtors life and an easy method of becoming wealthy. The casts are as follows:

"THE BICYCLERS."

Robert Yardsley, an expert,	George Kurtz.
Jack Barlow, another,	Samuel Coffin
Thaddeus Perkins, a beginner,	John Steffes
Edward Bradley, a scoffer,	Roy Sutton.
Mrs. Perkins, a resistant	Stella Davis.
Mrs. Bradley, an enthusiast,	Erma Wilder
Jennie, a maid,	Viola Cunningham.

"WHICH IS WHICH"

Mr. Capper, an artist much in debt,	George Kurtz.
Mr. Paddles, oil and colorman,	Roy Sutton.
Mr. Gargle, Uncle to Caper	John Steffes.
Anna Pestle, an Heiress,	Erma Wilder.
Bertha Bingham, a poor relative,	Viola Cunningham.
Mrs. Mills, a servan	Stella Davis.

Between the plays will be a solo by Mr. John Steffes, and a recitation by Miss Cornelia Dekay.

A Delanoite Abroad

Independent, Enderlin: H. C. Parslow, who for the past two years has been the cashier at the depot, left this morning for Hankinson, where the company has appointed him as station agent. This is an important station and the company evidence the confidence they place in Mr. Parslow by this move. He is known and respected by everybody in Enderlin, and all, while rejoicing in his advancement, sincerely regret his departure.

Henry C. Parslow, until recently cashier for the Soo at Enderlin, has been appointed agent at this place. He is a pleasant gentleman to meet and do business with, and without doubt will keep the ever popular Soo at the head of the procession. —Hankinson News.

County Cullings.

The call for the Democratic County Convention has been issued. You will find it in another column of this paper, also the call for the State convention. Read them and watch out for your primary at home. On the kind of men you send to Buffalo depends the stand Wright county will take in the State convention for money, tariff and other issues. Turn out and vote at your primaaiy and let your strength be felt for what you believe is best for the country by sending men of the right kind to represent you at Buffalo. Let all delegates who are elected make it a point to attend the conventions. Don't send proxies, or leave it all to some schemer to do for you.

BRAVEST BATTLE EVER FOUGHT.

The bravest battle that ever was fought!
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not;
'Twas fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon, or battle shot,
With sword or nobler pen;
Nay, not with eloquent word or thought,
From mouths of wonderful men;

But deep in a walled-up woman's heart—
Of woman that would not yield,
But bravely, silently bore her part—
Lo! there is the battle-field.

No marshaling troops, no bivouac song,
No banner to gleam and wave;
But, oh! the battles they last so long—
From babyhood to the grave.

Yet faithful still as a bridge of stars,
She fights in her walled-up town—
Fights on and on in the endless wars
Then silent, unseen—goes down.

O ye with banners and battle shot,
And soldiers to shout and praise,
I tell you the kingliest victories fought
Were fought in these silent ways.

O, spotless woman in a world of shame,
With splendid and silent scorn,
Go back to God as white as you came,
The kingliest warrior born!

—Joaquin Miller.

CONSOLATION.

When Molly came home from the party to-night,—
The party was out at nine,—
There were traces of tears in her bright blue eyes
That looked mournfully up to mine.

For some one had said, she whispered to me,
With her face on my shoulder hid,
Some one had said (there were sobs in her voice)
That they didn't like something she did.

So I took my little girl up on my knee,—
I am old and exceedingly wise,—
And I said, "My dear, now listen to me;
Just listen, and dry your eyes.

"This world is a difficult world, indeed,
And people are hard to suit,
And the man who plays on the violin
Is a bore to the man with the flute.

"And I myself have often thought
How very much better 't would be,
If every one of the folks that I know
Would only agree with me.

"But since they will not, the very best way
To make this world look bright
Is never to mind what people say,
But to do what you think is right."

THE Democratic State convention will soon take place. Every Democrat should express himself by voting his sentiment at the primaries.

MINNEAPOLIS now has a genuine Democratic paper, once again. The Minneapolis Democrat. It starts out on the right line and deserves the patronage of Democrats.

TERRIBLE cyclones and wind storm are reported from Iowa, Illinois, Michigan and Kansas. Scores of dead and wounded, and great loss of property were results of the destructive twisters visits.

THE true Money System for the United States by J. B. Watkins, Lawrence, Kan. a 14 page pamphlet came to hand this week; it contains some food for thought on the important money question.

WE are in receipt of a premium list of the Minnesota State Agricultural Society's State Fair for 1896. It is neatly gotten up and offers a fine lot of premiums. Send your address to the Secretary, E. W. Randall, and get one for yourself.

ANNOUNCEMENTS for Gustavus Adolphus College, of St. Peter and Carlton College, Northfield, Minn. are on our table. These are among the leading educational institutions of the state and all interested in education should be posted on their work. Send for catalogues.

CHAIRMAN HARRITY, of the Democratic National Convention, has been interviewed, and is reported to have said; "there is no doubt now that the Democratic National Convention will name a sound money candidate and adopt a sound money platform." Going before the country with such a candidate and such a platform, we can, I believe carry New York, New Jersey Connecticut and Indiana, which means that the country will be carried by the Democracy."

Mr Harrity is reported as having said he believed it is certain that sound money will carry the convention at Chicago.

Of course "Sound money" "honest money" "constitutional money" will be demanded by the Democrats of this nation when they meet to rmulate a national platform and nominate a national ticket.

"Honest Money."

Some of the politicians throughout the country are having considerable to say about "Sound money" and "honest money" and in advocating a gold standard, they seem to us, to assume too much for their own side of the question, and not willing to allow others to entertain different views.

Everybody wants, "Sound money" and everybody wants, "honest money". It is not exactly the right thing to intimate that everybody who does not agree with us as to what the standard should be is for "unsound" or for "dishonest" money. A man may be perfectly honest, from the knowledge he has of the subject in advocating a gold standard or a silver standard; but the leaders of men, who flop suddenly from what they have always held are to be looked upon with suspicion; and not to be considered the safest to follow. The safest leader you can have is your own conscience. That is what you have a conscience for; to lead you, Follow then, its dictations. Read speeches on both sides; criticise them, when you think you have found a strong reason for voting for one side, tell it to your neighbor and see how quickly, sometimes, he sweeps it away, or how his lame efforts to answer it strengthen you in your beliefs. After due deliberation, vote as your conscience tells you to vote.

Don't allow the war cry of "Sound money" or "honest money" to steer you out of your course. Our government constitution providing for money; for what we have always consider "Sound money" "Honest money" and constitutional money has served us well and faithfully for a long time, and it seems as if given a chance it could do so again.

Let us then have "Sound money" "honest money" the money of the constitution.

THE Northwestern Printer is here. May we see more of it.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 14, 1896.

Senator Gorman this week made good the threat he made some time ago, when he called attention to the fact that there would not be money enough in the Treasury to meet the extravegant appropriations made at this session of Congress, by offering an amendment to the Fortification bill authorizing the issue of $100,000,000 in 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness. Of course the republicans threw up their hands in holy horror at the very idea of such a thing, but none of them offered to join Senator Gorman in trying to curtail the extravagant appropriations. Senator Quay is going to see McKinley to dicker for a place in the band wagon, and Speaker Reed is thinking unprintable thoughts. The republican opposition to McKinley has about reached the collapsing point.

Those two eminent republicans of the House, Walker, of Mass. and Dalzel, of Pa., exchanged this week the complimentary terms of "demagogue" and "impudent" in a little discussion brought on by the former making a kick against boss rule in the House, which allows speaker Reed to control all legislation in that body.

Gen. Fitz Lee, now on his way to Cuba, opened a May festival given by Southern ladies of Washington in aid of the proposed Battle Abbey, to be erected as a monument to the bravery of the Southern soldiers, with a spirited speech endorsing the Battle Abbey idea, highly eulogistic of American valor. Gen. Lee is endowed with that mysterious quality which we call personal magnetism to a marked extent. As one of his old soldiers and admirers puts it, "I believe Fitzl Lee would create enthusiasm at a Quaker meeting, if allowed to talk for five minutes."

Senator Vilas naturally resents the charge that he secured the adoption of the resolution by the Senate ordering that Secretary Carlisle's resent Chicago financial speech be printed as a public document by a trick. He states that his action was open and above board in the matter, and that before he asked unanimous consent for adoption of the resolutions he consulted with Senators Cockrell and Teller, as representative silver men of both parties, and they assured him that they had no objection to the speech being prinled as a public document so as to make it frankable.

Praise from your political enimies is often more dangerous and undesirable than censure, but the reference to the Immigration Bureau made by Representative Corliss, of Mich., doesn't belong to that class. He said of this bureau, in a speech made in the House this week: "It stands out as one department of the goverment seeking earnestly and faithfully to execute the laws with reference to immigration, and I want to congratulate my democratic friends that they have in this department worthy and efficient men." Ex-Congressman Stump, of Md., is at the head of the Immigration Bureau.

The debate on the immigration bill, which was passed, brought a new orator to the front in the person of Representative Buck, of New Orleans. As a naturalized American citizen He came to America in 1852, when only 9 years old he opposed any burdensome restriction on immigration. At the close of his speech he was warmly congratulated, by those who agreed with him as well as by those who did not, for having made one of the best speeches of the session, from the stand point of the admirer of finished and eloquent oratory.

A movement has been started which Mr. Mark Hanna will do well to watch carefully. Its avowed object is to throw the vote of every negro delegate to the St. Louis convention against McKinley, and to either Reed or Allison. This movement is headed by the notorious Perry Carson, who has for many years bossed the negros of the city of Washington and who has been a delegate to every republican national convention for years past. Carson is an illiterate negro, but when it comes to political trickery and the manipulation of negroes he can give the shrewdest of his white brethern pointers. Mark Hanna may have to buy some of those nigs again.

Mr. John Bell Bigger, who has been clerk of Virginia House of Delegates for years and who is always posted on democratic politics in that State, is in Washington. When asked if the Virginia deomcrats would bolt if the financial plank of the Chicago convention didn't suit them, he instantly replied: "No Sir! not on your life. Bolting isn't in our line. We will stick to the party, it matters not what platform is constructed at Chicago. If the financial plank should declare for tin or zinc as a money metal it would be all right with Virginia democrats. Party success with us is paramount to all considerations."

We can't hear the Court House chimes but we can feel them, along about tax time.

MARKVILLE.

There has been a "Love Feast" of the prohibition party, on a political back ground and it was quite an enjoyable event, good songs, political stories, and many a pathetic appeal to humanity generally, to take hold and assist in untolding the good angel that lies dormant in each and every one of us, surely a meritorius cause, and if so much of christianity can be merged into our every day politics it would be a blessing to the race.

Well the reaction in our premature season has come with a vengence, now hide your young cabage and tomato plants, tie a bed quilt over your plum trees, put winter clothing on your currant bushes, be sure and rub your radishes early in the morning just to start the circulation before the sun rises, keep your weather eye open and on the look out for squalls, in the house as well as in the elements.

Strawberry planting is in order, have just finished planting ½ an acre. Old beds are blossoming out finely for the frost.

Be careful of your cutworms. I never saw them in such vast quantities before; feed them well. They are fond of cabbage and will eat tomato plants, young tender melons are good for them. I always feed and look after my cut worms diligently. My first planting of strawberry vines was destroyed in a few days by these helpless worms. In a very christian frame of mind I replanted them again, thankful that I had such an early opportunity to play the good Samaritan act. I gave them the plants, hoping for nothing in return and if the cut worms have their way long, the poor, honest, horny handed farmer will surely get nothing. Between all the bugs that play on vegetation and that last bug that has destroyed our currency, that terrible bug, Gold Bug, that hovers over our people like a baleful influence, we will not have much to spare.

Famous Boys.

A Swedish boy fell out of a window and was severely hurt. with clenched lips he kept back the cry of pain. The King Gustavus Adolphus, who saw the fall, prophesied that that boy would make a man for an emergency; and so he did, for he became the famous General Bauer.

A woman fell off the dock in Italy. She was fat and frightened. No one of the crowd of men dared to jump in after her; but a boy struck the water almost as soon as she, and managed to keep her up until stronger arms got hold of her. Everybody said the boy was very quick, but also very reckless, for he might have drowned. The boy was Garibaldi, and if you will read his life you will find these were just his traits all through—that he was so alert that nobody could tell when he would make an attack with his red-shirted soldiers; so indiscreet sometimes as to make his fellow-patriots wish he was in Guinea, but also so brave and magnanimous that all the world, except tyrants, loyed to hear and talk about him.

A boy used to crush the flowers to get their color, and painted the white side of his father's cottage in Tyrol with all sorts of pictures, which the mountaineers gazed at as wonderful. He was the great artist, Titian.

An old painter watched a little fellow who amused himself making drawings of his pot and brushes, easel and stool, and said: "That boy will beat me some day." So he did for he was Michael Angelo.

A German boy was reading a blood-and thunder novel. Right in the midst of it he said to himself: "Now, this will never do. I get too much excited over it; I can't study so well after it. So here goes!" and he flung the book out into the river. He was Fichte, the great German philosopher.—Our Dumb Animals.

Fearful Cyclone.

On Wednesday afternoon St. Louis was visited by a cyclone, dealing death to about 500 people and wounding 700. The loss of property was great; millions of wealth wiped out.

Cleveland To Liberate Cuba.

A United States naval constructor confidentially informs the New York Dispatch that President Cleveland is only waiting the repairs and completions necessary of a powerful fleet to liberate Cuba. He states that all naval officers know this and are preparing for the event. He adds that Spain's fleet is more powerful than ours to-dao but will be matched in course of two month's and then, look out! This is good news, and, let us hope, is true. President Cleveland has plenty of courage and undoubtedly he will prove it when he has the means to back it.—New York Dispatch.

Liquor Dealers Fined by an Internal Revenue Agent.

Some 30 local saloonkeepers are kicking emphatically upon the action of a special internal revenue agent who during the past month has imposed fines of from $50 to $350 because the saloonkeepers were found to have mixed unusally high proof whiskies and reduced them to make them drinkable.

The United States law requires saloonkeepers to take out a rectifying license of $100 per year and also a license for liquors slightly reduced in proof, amounting to another $100 per year, and in case of failure to take out the license at the proper time a penalty of 50 per cent is added.—Minneapolis Times.

St. Peter is to have still another newspaper. It is not to be a local paper however and will not encroach upon the field of those already established here. The paper is to be religious and will in reality be the official organ of Dr. Stafford, presiding elder of the Mankato district of the Methodist church. Rev. Joscelyn of this city, will be editor-in-chief and the mechanical work will be under the direction of L. C. Butler, now night operator at the Omaha depot. The name is to be the Religous Intercharge and is to be published in the interest of the Mankato district. The board of editors will probably include the major part of the district clergy.—St. Peter Herald.

THE bicycle is the best temperance orator in the land. Bicyclists are not accustomed to stop at every saloon "to wood and water." A beer-fuddled head has no business on a wheel.

THE trial of a man who stole a fiddle has cost New York state $10,000. This is perhaps the most expensive case of rosining the bow since the occasion on which Nero fiddled at a fire in Rome.

THE annual rainfall in the basin drained by the Mississippi river is 78,000,000,000,000 cubic feet. The clouds propelled by the winds carry all this water inland, mostly from the gulf.

JACOB OPPENHEIMER, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has been sued by his wife for divorce, says that the trouble grew out of her joining a woman's lodge and staying out late at night. See? It's coming.

THE new illuminated life buoy is a humane invention. The unfortunates are directed to it by the brilliant lights it carries, and are saved. It has been adopted for use in the United States navy.

A NEW glass has been manufactured that, while it allows the free passage of light, is a decided check to heat. In an experiment it was proved that a glass plate four-tenths of an inch thick allowed but 4 6-10 per cent. of radiant heat to pass through it. Ordinary window glass lets 86 per cent. of heat through.

ABOUT 2,000 miles of railway are under construction in Japan, and the London Times says there are signs that American engineering and material will be preferred to English hereafter by the Japanese. Our Oriental neighbors will make no mistake when they order their railway iron, locomotives and war ships in this country.

DR. KNAPP, in the Century, shows that the American branch of the Anglo-Saxon race is not the nervous, lantern-jawed class that English critics have loved to picture. In fact, take us all around, Dr. Knapp would seem to conclude that the American stomach can whip its weight in strawberry shortcake and patent medicine and never turn a hair.

THE silly young woman who married an Indian named Chaska a few years ago and who dreamed of amalgamating the red and the white races and ushering in the era of universal brotherhood, has come to grief like the rest of her tribe. Chaska ran off with a squaw, who, no doubt, suited his coarse nature better, and the once enthusiastic wife is supporting herself and three children by washing.

A SAVANT with an unpronounceable name, residing across the water, has discovered a means of proving the existence or absence of true love by photography. He photographs the electric sparks which jump from the tips of the fingers to those who truly love each other. No spark, no true love. Pshaw, this spark theory is as old as the hills. Being universally admitted, what is the need of photographing it? Besides, records of youthful folly are extremely embarrassing when they turn up in later years.

AN Englishman in Washington at dinner declined to eat an ice in the shape and color of the American flag. This he did because he held it to be bad form to absorb the national emblem. The incident was significant as showing the difference between the British idea of patriotism and our own. Englishmen lift their hats when their flag is carried past and rise when the national anthem is played in theaters and music halls. No true Briton, in trade or out of it, would use the flag of his country for advertising purposes.

ANOTHER Central American revolution has been suppressed—namely: that in Nicaragua. The area fought over was 50 square miles. The losses on both sides were about 400. President Zelaya's army numbered 3,000 and the clerical insurgents had about 2,000. The duration of the war was about eight weeks. Now all is calm in Nicaragua until the next revolution occurs, which may be next week or next year, no one can tell. For a wonder there are no revolutions now in all Central America, but it may be confidently anticipated that business will be resumed before long at the old stand.

A MILITARY court at Berlin a few days ago sentenced Count von Kotze to two years' inprisonment in a fortress as a punishment for his duel with Baron von Schrader, which resulted in the death of the latter. Dueling appears to be altogether too fashionable in German military circles to accord with the enlightened standards of civilization, but such punishment as that inflicted on Count von Kotze ought to tend in a great measure to make it less so in the future. The only correct view to take, however, is that the penalty for killing a man in a duel should be as severe as that for ordinary murder.

THERE are living 11 ex-governors of Vermont. The venerable war governor of the state, Frederick Holbrook, Brattleboro. George W. Hendee, of Morrisville, filled out the unexpired term of Peter T. Washburne, who died in 1870, and John W. Stewart, of Middlebury, was governor from 1870 until 1878, when Redfield Proctor was elected. His successors, all of whom are living, were Roswell Farnham, of Bradford, John L. Barstow, of Shelburne, Samuel E. Pingree, of Hartford, Ebenezer J. Ormsbee, of Brandon, William P. Dillingham, of Waterbury, Carrol S. Page, of Hyde Park, and Levi K. Fuller, of Brattleboro.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Proceedings of the First Session.

Washington, May 22.—After agreeing to several conference reports in the senate yesterday Senator Butler's bill prohibiting the issue of government bonds without the consent of congress was brought up and caused a lively discussion, but no action was taken. In the house the bill granting a pension of $50 a month to Francis E. Hoover was passed over the president's veto by a vote of 196 to 47.

Washington, May 23.—The time in the senate yesterday was occupied in discussing Senator Butler's bill prohibiting the issue of United States bonds without the consent of congress. In the house the conference report on the river and harbor bill was agreed to and 15 pension bills were passed. A bill establishing a life-saving station at Charlevoix, Mich., was favorably reported.

Washington, May 25.—Saturday in the senate was consumed by the "filled cheese" bill and the second installment of the speech by Senator Allen (pop., Neb.) on the Butler bill to prohibit the issue of bonds without the authority of congress. On the ground that the filled cheese bill was a revenue measure several amendments to raise revenue were offered, but all failed. The calendar was cleared of all the private pension bills. In the house the conference reports on the river and harbor bill and the executive, legislative and judicial bill were also adopted. Mr. Howard (pop., Ala.) failed in an attempt to secure consideration of a resolution to impeach President Cleveland on eight counts.

Washington, May 26.—The general deficiency appropriation bill, the last of the supply bills, was before the senate yesterday and passed just before adjournment. The house spent the day in committee of the whole on the free alcohol repeal bill. There was general debate, but no action.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The exchanges at the leading clearing houses of the United States during the week ended on the 22d aggregated $991,339,029, against $1,019,009,278 the previous week. The decrease, compared with the corresponding week in 1896, was 1.08.

In the United States there were 227 business failures in the seven days ended on the 22d, against 224 the week previous and 207 in the corresponding period of 1895.

Official statistics of the production of salt in the United States during the year 1895 show the total production was 13,665,649 barrels, valued at $4,223,086, an increase of 600,000 barrels over the previous year, but a decline of $300,000 in value.

The supreme court has sustained the validity of the appropriations to carry out the sugar bounty act, reversing the action of Comptroller of the Treasury Bowler, who refused to permit the payment of the bounties.

FURIOUS ELEMENTS.

Cloudbursts and Cyclones Bring Death and Destruction.

Fifty or More Persons Known to Be Dead in Iowa—Michigan Suffers Heavily —Illinois and Other States Get a Taste.

Des Moines, Ia., May 26.—A terrific cyclone swept across Polk county and into the eastern edge of Jasper county between 10:30 and 11 o'clock p. m. Sunday, leaving death and destruction in its trail. There are about 50 known to be dead, and at least as many others seriously injured, a number of whom will almost certainly die. The storm was in many ways a remarkable one. It appears to have started in two sections. One of them came from the north and was a tremendous wind. Its first trace is found about a mile south of Ankeny, and 12 miles north of Des Moines. It seemed to be moving about due east when it began in serious force. The first place at which it did serious injury was at the home of J. L. Woods, a mile south of Ankeny. The other branch of the storm contributed the rain. It started nine miles north of the first, and moved from northwest to southeast, following the Des Moines river. The two divisions met two miles east of Ankeny, and here they developed first the cyclone form, with funnel and tremendous force and roaring and electrical disturbances. From this point west for nearly 20 miles the path of the storm is a path of destruction. At Polk City and Ankeny considerable damage was done; at Bondurant much damage was done, but the serious loss of life occurred from Bondurant to the northeast.

Traveled a Mile a Minute.

The storm after the cyclonic conditions were developed, swept across the country at terrific speed. It gave warning of its approach to all in its path until it got near to Valeria, Jasper county, where the most harm was done. Here it came with such awful force that people who saw it say that the great black funnel hanging down from a blacker heaven, tore across the prairie at a greater speed than the fastest train. It is believed it moved at this time about a mile a minute; the great funnel of wind and rain and lightning seething and roaring and scattering debris in its path. Nothing was left in its path. For several miles it passed through a dense forest. Oak and elm trees two feet in diameter were torn up by their roots or twisted off. Where a human habitation lay in its path the destruction was instant. As it approached the eastern part of its course it strengthened and wiped the country clean in its path; at Valeria, a little town of 600 people, it wiped out almost half of the town.

Used the Cyclone Cellars.

The people were nearly all in the caves and cellars of the town, but many of them did not even have a warning until it was too late. The loss of life was remarkably small, considering the number of buildings that were wrecked, and the wonderful escapes are almost without number. The path covered by the cyclone proper is in most places from 40 to 80 rods wide. It perpetrated all the remarkable freaks that cyclones are famous for. The first large building wrecked was the Monarch schoolhouse, west of Bondurant. Here it took up a large schoolhouse, shook it to pieces, scattered it so that very few of the boards are to be found, and even distributed the stone foundation over the fields; while a big wooden stile over the fence three rods from the building it left unharmed. The huge cylindrical cast iron stove was tossed into an oat field a quarter of a mile from the site of the building.

Destruction of the Bailey House.

A typical bit of destruction was at the Bailey home northwest of Bondurant. There were in the house nine people: four of them were killed and the rest injured so badly that it is doubtful if any of them recover. Their house was on a hill high above the surrounding country, and the funnel dipped down into it. House, barns, outbuildings and grove were destroyed. Ten minutes after the storm struck there was no trace of the house save the cellar, and in it were piled the chimney and stove and half the furniture. The house was torn to pieces; the boards into splinters. They were scattered so far that no trace can be found save here and there for a mile east. pieces of the broken lumber. The trees were stripped of their bark but left standing. This was a freak of the storm. At places, as this one, it would strip the trees of their leaves and bark but leave the trunks and branches; at others it would twist them off or uproot them.

At the Bailey place, the members of the family were blown considerable distances from the house, the bodies of the victims were found in the fields, where were also distributed the bodies of a dozen horses, two score of cattle and about 100 hogs that had occupied the barns and other buildings on the place, every animal dead.

None Live to Tell the Story.

This was the experience of the fated home of Peter Bolenbaugh, a mile farther west. What happened there will never be known exactly; nobody lives to tell of it. Mr. and Mrs. Bolenbaugh, both about 45 years of age, occupied the home, with a little boy, Theophilus Minburn, a nephew. The house was razed so completely that no sign of it can now be seen; the three inmates were killed. Mr. Bolenbaugh had both arms broken, his head crushed in, one leg and several ribs injured, and his neck and jaw broken. The boy and woman were as badly mangled. They were not found till two o'clock in the morning.

The Effect at Valeria.

At Valeria the Methodist and Catholic churches were totally wrecked. About a dozen business houses were blown to pieces or partially wrecked. A large part of the population of the town went into the cyclone cave in the middle of the place and got in its shelter a few seconds before the storm struck.

The storm spent itself about three miles northeast of this place, but not till it had killed one child at the home of Douglas Akin, and fatally hurt another, wrecked the home of Solomon Dickey and probably fatally hurt Mr. Dickey and his two sisters, Martha Dickey and Mrs. Frank Shell. The home of William Osborn, in the same neighborhood, was destroyed and four members of the family were fearfully hurt. It is expected at least two of them will die.

As nearly a complete list of the dead as could be had is as follows:

The Death List.

James Maxwell, struck by lightning north of Bondurant; Mrs. Robert Bailey, aged 60; Lizzie Bailey, aged 19; Joe Bailey, aged 22; John Bailey, aged 20; Mary Bailey, aged 18; Peter Bolenbaugh, aged 50; Mrs. Peter Bolenbaugh, aged 45; Theophilus Milburn, aged 8; Charles Phelan, aged 45; Susie Phelan, aged 18; Michael Phelan, aged 8; Charles Phelan, Jr., aged 5; Nellie Phelan, aged 5 months; Dannie Phelan, aged 12; Martha Akin, infant child of Douglas Akin.

The list of seriously injured is not complete, but it includes, as those expected to die, the following:

The Injured.

John Yates, Teeney Bailey, Johnnie Bailey, Solomon Dickey, Mrs. Solomon Dickey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dickey, Robert Bailey, Mrs. Charles Phelan, two daughters of Mrs. Phelan, two children of Douglas Akin, Miss Martha Dickey, Mrs. Shell, sister of Mrs. Dickey; William Osborne and wife and two children. Aside from these, which are likely to prove fatalities, there were many minor injuries.

Six Perish at Durango.

Durango, Ia., May 26.—Mrs. J. M. Clark, station agent for the Chicago & Great Western railroad here, was called up during the storm Sunday night to report the condition of the track by a delayed train. Accompanied by her six young children, between one and ten years of age, she had just reached the depot when a terrific rush of water came, carrying the depot away. Five of the children were drowned, and also Thomas Griffin, a brakeman employed on the road, who made a brave but ineffectual effort to save the little ones and lost his life in the attempt. Mrs. Clark and one child were rescued.

Woe at McGregor.

McGregor, Ia., May 26.—Words are inadequate to fitly describe the scene of desolation caused by Sunday night's terrible cloudburst in the historic Bloody Run region for ten miles west of this place. Everything is in ruins. All the afternoon threatening clouds were gathering and about one o'clock the storm burst in its fury, soon deluging the valley. It swept all before it. Six dead bodies have been found. They are John and Michael Maloney, Mrs. Patrick Burke and son, Mrs. Meyer and son. Nine others are missing. Some of the unfortunate victims are supposed to have been carried out into the Mississippi river, into which the Bloody Run empties at North McGregor.

Ten miles of track of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway has been washed away. A large number of freight cars were standing on the tracks in the west yards. They were piled in shapeless masses along the valley. Some of them being carried down into the river. The loss to the railroad company must reach $100,000. The sight was the most appalling as the wail of water rushed down the creek. The cries of the victims for help, the neighing of horses and the bellowing of cattle could be heard above the storm. Happy homes with their precious human lives were torn away and hurled into the black and rushing waters. The station at Beulah, about nine miles west, was washed away and the agent and family barely escaped with their lives. Wingen & Son's lumber mill was badly damaged and had over 100,000 feet of lumber swept away. The valley for 12 miles is one vast wreck, and the damage to mills, houses and farms cannot be estimated.

THE STORM IN MICHIGAN.

Loss of Life in Oakland County—A Village Wiped Out.

Detroit, Mich., May 26.—The most terrible cyclone which ever struck Michigan came from the west shortly before nine o'clock Monday night. While the wind in Detroit assumed a fearful velocity, yet it seemed that the city caught but the tail end of the storm. The first reports of the disaster were received from Ortonville, in the northern central portion of Oakland county. The villages directly in the line of the storm are Thayer, Groveland, Austin, Brandon, Seymour, Ortonville, Oakwood and Davisburg.

Large Loss of Life.

A message from Clarkston said that there had been a large loss of life there, and that Davisburg, Clarkston and Springfield had also a large list of killed and injured. It is feared that the greatest damage and loss of life occurred at Metamora, in Lapeer county. This is a populous town on the Michigan Central, but up to midnight all attempts to get communication with it by the railroad wire, the Western Union service of the telephone had proved futile. The path cut by the cyclone from Oakland and Metamora on the northwest through Thomas, Orion, Goodison, Washington, Disco and the country located between is filled with populous towns, and it is feared that many of them have been wiped off the map.

At one o'clock from the latest returns received it seems that the list of dead and injured would pass 100, and no estimate can be given as to the property damaged.

The Victims.

The names of some of the killed are as follows:

Daniel Thompson and son; Mr. and Mrs. William Mitchell and two children; Abram Quick and three children; Mrs. Henry Quick, John Porritt, Mrs. Joseph Porritt, John Milkey, Mrs. T. J. Heaton, two children of a Mr. Howe.

Oakwood Entirely Destroyed.

Oxford, Mich., May 26.—A terrible cyclone struck the village of Oakwood Monday evening and entirely wiped it off the earth, destroying all the buildings and leaving death and destruction in its trail. Just west of the village, the fields are strewn with dead and wounded. The storm also struck the village of Thomas and destroyed about a dozen buildings, including the Hotel Johnson, the McDermott and the large apple dryer, and a great many dwelling heuses. Many farm buildings are destroyed, but no news can be obtained from the country on account of the roads being blocked with fallen trees, etc. It is believed that the number of dead and wounded will reach nearly 100. Physicians have gone from Oakland, Oxford and Metamora.

News from Thomas.

Pontiac, Mich., May 26.—The country in the vicinity of this city was given its first taste of a cyclone Monday evening, and the little village of Thomas has been wiped from the face of the earth. Metamora and Oakwood were also touched up and their inhabitants badly frightened, some being injured, and a track of devastation left to within three-fourths of a mile of Ortonville. The telephone and telegraph wires between here and those places are all down and the only data of the work of the cyclone is furnished by survivors who have come here for shelter. But from comparison of their stories it seems certain that from 14 to 18 lives have been lost.

Actual details of the devastation caused by the cyclone are, of course, meager, but all of the witnesses agree that the storm was a regular western twister. Its first appearance at Thomas station was from the southwest in the form of a densely black funnel-shaped cloud, moving with almost incredible swiftness and seeming to take long leaps. It seemed to have the elasticity of a gigantic rubber ball, and would strike the ground, then, leaving a footprint of devastation, bound into the air and travel a mile or more before again touching the earth.

Thirty Houses Blown Down.

Mount Clemens, Mich., May 26.—A terrific cyclone accompanied by a heavy rain struck this city Monday evening. Some 30 houses in Front, Butler and Inches streets were blown down and many of them literally torn to pieces. As yet no deaths are reported, but many persons were injured. The list of injured so far as known is as follows: Mrs. Anna Pohl, back broken, cannot live; Adolph Pohl, William Pohl, Mrs. Russell Carter, badly injured; Mrs. Ormsby, arm broken.

The cyclone struck the city near Gratiot street bridge and passed in a northeasterly direction over the city, leveling nearly everything in its path for about 150 yards wide, the principal damage being in Front street, between Butler and Robertson streets. At Robertson street it left Front street, crossing the river and striking the eastern part of the city at Dulac's mill, where many houses were destroyed, the mill badly damaged and the lumber in the yard picked up like chaff and carried over the fields across the river. In the southern part of the city considerable damage was done to the magnificent shade trees along South Gratiot street, many of them being torn up by the roots and thrown across the street.

Blown Into the River.

In Rathborn street east of Dulac's mill nearly all the houses are down. Four large ice houses belonging to Charboneau Bros. at the warehouses of Dulac's mill are in the river and will obstruct navigation. A large bilge pump weighing 1,500 pounds was carried about 50 feet and thrown into the river. Reports from the country are to the effect that the damage is widespread. The farmhouses and barns of John Irwin were leveled and trees in his orchard were torn up by the roots. It is impossible to estimate the damage, but it will be many thousands of dollars.

WIND FELT IN NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

Chicago Has a Cloudburst—Other Parts of the State Suffer.

Chicago, May 26.—A storm of wind, rain, thunder and lightning struck Chicago at two o'clock Monday morning. The wind at times attained the velocity of a hurricane and the lightning was incessant. Over an inch of water fell in less than ten minutes, which amounted to a cloudburst. The sewers were unable to carry off the water, and as a result basements all over the city were flooded. The pressrooms of three morning papers were flooded by water backing up from the sewers, and fire engines had to be called to pump out the water before the second editions could be sent to press.

Rockford, Ill., May 26.—This section was on Sunday night visited by the severest wind, hail and rainstorm experienced for many years, doing great damage to property of all kinds, ruining crops, killing several people and fatally injuring a number of others. The storm broke about 11:30 o'clock and raged for over an hour with terrific fury. The air was filled with balls of fire, flashes of lightning following each other with great rapidity. Many houses in this city and throughout the country were struck by lightning. In the northern part of the county there was a furious downpour of hail, ruining growing crops and making country roads almost impassable. The railroads leading into this city are completely prostrated and all trains are badly delayed by washouts, while the wires along the lines are down.

At the home of Godfrey Hildebrand, seven miles northeast of here, the cyclone demolished the house and killed Mrs. Hildebrand and her daughter, Elsie, 14 years of age. The mother was beheaded by a flying beam, and it was some time before her head was found. Mr. Hildebrand was probably fatally injured. Three miles north of Leaf river Mrs. Isora Bird, a widow, was instantly killed and her five children badly injured, one fatally. Dozens of barns through a wide stretch of country were blown down, stock killed, crops destroyed and orchards utterly ruined.

Great damage to buildings was done at Egan City, Davis Junction, Byron, Leaf River, Mount Morris, Steward, Beloit Rockton, Forreston and other places in this section. The rain which accompanied the wind was the heaviest in years, and all creeks are far out of their banks. Hail as large as hickory nuts also fell in great quantity, stripping trees of foliage and leveling crops. Every building in the path of the cyclone was demolished, and much live stock was killed. The loss will be very large in Winnebago, Ogle, Lee and Boone counties, which seemed to suffer most severely.

One Death at Freeport.

Freeport, Ill., May 26.—A severe rain and windstorm raged over this city Sunday night. A great amount of damage was done. Buildings were unroofed and trees were blown down. A flood swept away many bridges. Mr. Foss was drowned while crossing Yellow creek.

Damage Estimated at $100,000.

Mount Carroll, Ill., May 26.—The hardest storm ever experienced in this section broke at 11:30 Sunday night and lasted until three o'clock Monday morning. Carroll creek rose 20 feet in half an hour, passing the high-water mark by five feet. The J. M. Shirk company's mill dam broke, flooding the electric light plant. Lobkicker's carriage manufactory, the Mount Carroll tannery and all the buildings along Galena avenue and Mill street. The fire alarm was rung at one o'clock and people were rescued on improvised rafts. Plum river is six feet higher than ever known, and iron bridges and fences all went down in the flood. Cattle and horses were drowned. The damage in Carroll county is estimated at $100,000.

Destruction at Elgin.

Elgin, May 26.—This city was visited by a tornado at an early hour Monday morning and death and destruction were left in its path. The immense brick smokestack at the pumping station at the insane asylum was completely wrecked, and Fireman Jack Kehoe was killed and buried beneath a pile of debris. The smokestack stood 125 feet high. The station is a complete wreck. At the asylum proper the building was considerably damaged, but no one was seriously injured. The roof of the Elgin bicycle and sewing machine works was torn off and the building practically ruined.

High Water at Galena.

Galena, Ill., May 26.—The most violent storm of rain and lightning that has ever occurred here raged Sunday night for two hours up to midnight. An hour after the storm ceased a great flood came down the Galena river with such suddenness that a rise of four feet occurred in five minutes. The factory and lumber districts were submerged before anyone was aware of the danger threatening. Many dwelling houses were also inundated and some were swept away, the inmates escaping in their night clothes. Mrs. R. D. Strickland was drowned in her home in Gear street. Her husband escaped with a small child, and returning to rescue her found her drowned.

HEAVY DAMAGE IN INDIANA.

Wind and Lightning Cause Destruction at Many Places.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 26.—For the first time since last August there is a plus sign before the recorded rainfall. The rain was accompanied by a windstorm that almost approached the velocity of a cyclone. Three or four houses and many shade trees were blown down, but so far as reported there was no loss of life. Dispatches from Kokomo, La Porte, Wabash, Fowler, Valparaiso, Winamac and many other points tell of an enormous amount of damage to crops and all sorts of property. Many buildings were blown down and others were burned by lightning.

DROWNED IN THE STREET.

Two Girls Lose Their Lives While Boating at Lacygne, Kan.

Fort Scott, Kan., May 26.—Miss Georgie Rickett and Birdie Cassaday, well-known young society ladies of Lacygne, Kan., while boat riding in the streets of that place Monday evening were drowned by the overturning of their boat. The town was flooded by the recent rains and water stood from four to six feet deep in the streets leading to the Memphis depot. Several parties were out boat riding. A strong current carried a boat containing the Mandolin club against the one in which the Rickett and Cassaday girls with four others were boating, causing it to tip. A Mr. Watkey saved his boy by throwing him into a tree and a Miss Dyer saved herself by clinging to the boy's feet. The bodies of Miss Rickett and Miss Cassaday have been recovered.

River Seven Miles Wide.

La Cygne, Kan., May 26.—The Marias Des Cygnes river made an additional rise of nine inches Monday and is still rising. Fatalities are reported from all directions, but as yet only meager details can be obtained. Sunday afternoon a young boy was drowned at Trading Post, this county, and it is said a whole family perished in the lowlands southwest of Bolcourt, five miles south of this place. One man living at Farlinville, 15 miles southwest, lost 65 head of hogs on account of the rise, and reports of cattle and horses drowning are common. The river is the highest ever known and south of town is seven miles wide. Thousands of acres of corn, flax, oats and wheat have been entirely destroyed.

In Oklahoma.

Dallas, Tex., May 26.—A special to the News from Guthrie, O. T., says: A cyclone was reported Monday in the Seminole reservation, where several persons were killed and many thousands of dollars' damage was done by the wind and accompanying flood.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

A Favorable Reaction Looked For in the Near Future.

New York, May 23.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"There is nothing like reaction in business, though the volume is small. The stock market refuses to obey orders for a panic. Manufacturers are not gaining, on the whole, but very few are losing. Railroad stocks average a shade higher than a week ago, and there is abundant evidence that men of money are watching for the right moment to buy at the bottom, certain that good crops and definite political prospects will bring improvement in the fall. Men of all parties have faith that the American people will find the right way to maintain the soundness of their currency. There is no longer that threatened danger that both houses of congress will go wrong, and the success of the sound money men of both parties as far west as South Dakota is most significant. The business world has the best of reasons for refusing to go into a panic, and it looks hopefully forward to definite improvement as soon as political uncertainties are out of the way.

"The waiting condition which seems to some people nothing better than stagnation still continues. But there is a difference. Thousands of orders and contracts are merely deferred because they can be more safely given a little later. There is nothing exciting in the speculative market for exportable products, and the stories about damage to wheat have been numerous, but the general belief regarding the future supply is fairly reflected in the decline of 1.62 cent per bushel. Cotton speculation lifted the price a fraction for a day or two, but it declined again, and such movements are always easy at this season, when stocks can be easily controlled. The European and American mill supplies, with commercial stocks, still exceed maximum consumption for the crop year, and the promise for the coming crop is decidedly good.

"Failures for the week have been 227 in the United States, against 207 last year, and 26 in Canada, against 23 last year."

Coin for Europe.

New York, May 26.—Another large demand for gold for export was made upon the subtreasury Monday. The firms withdrawing the gold were L. von Hoffman & Co., $1,150,000, and Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co., $400,000. At the opening of business Monday the net gold reserve in the treasury was $112,266,635. This withdrawal reduces it approximately to $110,700,000. Monday's withdrawals were made in part of a special contract which several foreign banking houses have made to deliver a large amount of gold in Germany which, it is said, is ultimately intended for Russia.

Too Much Beer.

Philadelphia, May 25.—A row boat containing six men capsized in the Delaware river Saturday evening and three of the men were drowned. The men drowned were laborers and their names are John Fox, John Goldman and Theodore Clinkett. The party had been on an outing on an island in the river, and two kegs of beer furnished the foundation for the day's sport, and to too much beer and too little experience in boating the accident can be attributed.

Yellowstone Park

Is more and more impressing itself upon the public, as the years go by, as being the great park of the land. The strong feature of it is the fact that it is not a man made park. True enough man has built roads and bridges and hotels in order that he may see the park, but he has not yet tried his hand at constructing new fangled geysers or re-adorning or re-sculpturing the Grand canyon of the Yellowstone. These are as God left them. There, too, the elk, bear, deer and other animals are not enclosed in wire fences. They wander free and unfretted whithersoever they will. Man's handiwork is but little seen and the park is the grander for it. Send Chas. S. Fee, General Passenger Agent, Northern Pacific Railroad, six cents for Wonderland '96, and read about the park.

GENUINE love, however rated as the chief passion of the human heart, is but a poor dependent, a retainer upon other passions—admiration, gratitude, respect, esteem, pride in the object.—Mrs. Inchbald.

Choice Farming Lands in South Dakota.

Along the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway can now be had upon reasonable terms. The crop prospects were never better and a glorious harvest for this year is already assured. Thousands of acres of unoccupied lands in over twenty counties are now open for settlement. For further information address H. F. HUNTER, Immigration Agent for South Dakota, No. 205 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.

THE COMPOSITION OF MAN.—Dollie—"Do you believe that man is made of dust?" Chollie—"He has to

THE fair day passed, the sun was low;
I stood enwrapped in its fading light,
And the west was touched with its warmth and glow,
As it welcomed the balmy night.

As I stood by the road in my dream of joy,
I was touched by the muffled tone
Of the funeral drum, while the soldier boy
Was borne to his rest alone.

I followed the bier to the lonely grave,
With a heart that swelled with pride
For the deeds of the noble hero brave
Who for his country died.

And I gathered the lilies for his winding-sheet,
Made wreaths of the flowers that grew by the way,
And laid them down at the hero's feet,
This sad Memorial day.

And every year as the time goes by,
And the evening sun lights the western sky,
I gather the flowers that grow by the way,
And weave into garlands fragrant with life,
And go to the grave Memorial day,
To give him his laurels he won in the strife.

MEANEST MAN IN PLUNKETT.

"MORNING," said Mr. Blodgett, with an upward jerk of the chin. "So you're the new schoolma'am, hey? Come to tell me 'bout some bad conduct of Sammy's. Well, if you've got any fault to find with my grandson, out with it. I'll back ye every time." Mr. Blodgett, who was plowing, while Sammy helped him by guiding the horse, turned round to his grandson as he spoke.

"Oh, I assure you, Mr. Blodgett, Sammy behaves beautifully. I called on an entirely different errand. Probably Sammy has told you about the flag we want to buy."

"No, he hain't."

"Well," said little Miss Stanton quickly, "we want to provide a flag for our schoolhouse. Nearly every schoolhouse in the country has one. And we want you to help us."

"A flag! What for?" demanded Mr. Blodgett.

"Why, don't you think," she spoke with surprise, "that the daily sight of their country's flag will make the pupils better children now, and better men and women by and by?"

"I do' know about that," responded Mr. Blodgett. "There's lots of foolish notions running round loose nowadays, and this strikes me as one of 'em. Hoisting a flag and making a Fourth o' July out of all the three hundred and sixty odd days in the year! Stick to writing, reading and 'rithmetic, and let the flummeries be!"

Miss Stanton, too shrewd either to show dismay or to wrangle with the farmer, simply looked as if she were amazed at and pitied his sentiments.

"How much do you calculate to put out for the flag?" he asked, forced by her demeanor to doubt whether he had not put himself in the wrong.

"Oh, something like $40."

"Whew-ew!" Mr. Blodgett whistled his astonishment. "And how much do you lay out for me to give?"

Miss Stanton had an instinctive knowledge that it is often judicious to ask for more than one expects. "Well, I should like it if you and Mr. Simpson would give me ten dollars each to start the ball rolling. The minister tells me you are one of the richest men in Plunkett, and Mr. David Simpson is the other. So I came out this Saturday to ask you two to help us get the flag."

Mr. Blodgett gave a little jump toward his plow. "I guess you don't know much about Plunkett!" he gasped. "Dave Simpson, did you say? Dave Simpson! The meanest man in Plunkett! Skin a flea for its hide! Ten dollars! Him!"

He considered a moment. "Look a-here!" he said. "You go and see Dave Simpson. Tell him Bill Blodgett sent you. Don't leave that out. He will know what I mean—he and I were in the war together. Tell him you want a $40-dollar flag for Plunkett schoolhouse. And I'll match you, cent for cent, dollar for dollar, whatever you get out of Dave Simpson. Come! there's an offer for you."

"Why, that's a splendid offer, sir!" said Miss Stanton, rather sarcastically. "Thank you, Mr. Blodgett. Good-by—thank you so much! Good-by, Sammy!"

"Well!" muttered Blodgett, chuckling, "I got out of that neat. Get up, Sammy." And yet, he felt, uneasily, that he might have given a dollar to the flag.

Miss Stanton, somewhat discouraged, walked over to Mr. Simpson's place. The first glance at him reassured her. Holding his little grandchild, Polly, by the hand, he cordially inquired how she liked Plunkett, and put a great many other questions. She could not get in a word about the flag. She began to suspect a method in Mr. Simpson's volubility.

"And how is this naughty Polly carrying on?" he asked.

Miss Stanton smiled on the pair. "Have you told grandpa about our flag, Polly?"

Dave Simpson squared his shoulders. His amiable expression vanished. His pocket was attacked.

"Well," he faltered, "I'm sorry to disobleege you—really—'specially as little Polly here wants it. But—but—well—you see, in the matter of contributions for flags and such things you mustn't look to me to help you out. Hope you ain't over-much disappointed," he added.

"Oh, not overmuch, for Mr. Blodgett warned me in season," smiled Miss Stanton.

"Bill Blodgett!" exploded Mr. Simpson. "What's he know about it? Bill Blodgett! That's a good one! I'll have you to know Bill Blodgett's the meanest man in Plunkett! Splits his coppers for the contribution-box! What are you laughing at?" he asked in an aggrieved tone.

"I was only thinking what Mr. Blodgett said," she replied demurely. "He told me you are the meanest man in Plunkett."

Mr. Simpson stared furiously. "I'll pay Bill Blodgett for that! What else did he say?"

Though his tone was fierce, Miss Stanton noted that little Polly was not at all alarmed; so she kept her own courage undaunted, and slowly, as if she was teaching a lesson to a very dull pupil, replied:

"Mr. Blodgett said to me: 'You go see Dave Simpson, and I'll match you, cent for cent, dollar for dollar, whatever you get out of Dave Simpson!' Now, what do you say, Mr. Simpson? Of course he reckoned you wouldn't give a cent."

Mr. Simpson flushed with anger. "I say this!" he said, emphatically, "I'll give you ten dollars—ten dollars for Bill Blodgett to match. Yes! for the sake of seeing Bill Blodgett shell out, I'll give you—I'll give you—Polly, girl, we'll give a clean $20! 'Cent for cent, dollar for dollar,' says Bill Blodgett. Ha, ha, ha! It's as good as a circus. Simpson gives $20, Blodgett matches it. And Blodgett and Simpson hain't spoke for years. Blodgett and Simpson go halves on a $40 flag for Plunkett school-house. Ha! I guess I've got Bill Blodgett this time!"

"But will Mr. Blodgett give his share?" asked Miss Stanton, anxiously.

"Got to!" replied Mr. Simpson. "One thing about Bill Blodgett, he never goes back on his word in a financial transaction."

So the little schoolmistress went back to Mr. Blodgett. When she told him that Simpson had given her $20 he turned pale, and without a word went with her to the house, took two ten-dollar notes out of a cupboard, and gave them to her. She thanked him earnestly, but he said not a word in response.

Miss Stanton kept the secret for a whole week. Then all Plunkett was stirred with the news, marveling much that Plunkett was to possess the flag, but more that it should be the gift of the two men whose stinginess and mutual animosity had become notorious.

Sammy Blodgett, almost bursting with pride, placed in Miss Stanton's

"WHAT ELSE DID HE SAY?"

hands a copy of the County Oracle, in which the wonderful fact was told. The item ended thus: "We congratulate Plunkett on the possession of such generous citizens as William Blodgett and David Simpson, men who, like brothers, fought to preserve our glorious union, and who, still of one heart in time of peace, unite to unfurl the starry banner for which they bled, to float in proud benediction over the heads of the young men and maidens of Plunkett."

"Ain't it grand?" whispered Sammy.

"Wonderful!" she whispered back. It certainly was wonderful. Who could have written it? When she put this question to Mr. Simpson that worthy laughed uproariously.

Mr. William Blodgett did not take the joke so philosophically. He grew glummer of face and shorter of speech than ever. The neighbors trembled a little, not knowing what the matter might come to.

Dave Simpson became very much interested in the flag. It awakened all his old patriotism. He fell to telling war stories to Polly, and he could not keep Bill Blodgett out of them—Bill and he had been such inseparable comrades in arms. Then he and Miss Stanton held many consultations regarding the flag-raising.

"What do you do in Plunkett on Memorial day?" she asked, one morning, excitedly.

"Do? Nothing at all."

"Well, we'll do something this year, Mr. Simpson," said the determined little schoolmistress. "I can't, at this short notice, clear the graveyard, get up a procession and all that, but I can manage the children and the schoolhouse."

"What'll you do?" he asked.

"Why, plenty of things! We'll fly our flag for the first time on Memorial day. We'll invite the parents, the school committee, the minister—in fact, the town. The children will sing. And we'll have speeches—yes, speeches, Mr. Simpson, from Plunkett's two noble benefactors."

Mr. Simpson pooh-poohed vigorously at the last idea; nevertheless she saw he was pleased.

Arrangements were made for a celebration, and Mr. Blodgett was asked to make an address.

"I won't have anything to do with such tomfoolery!" he thundered. "Dave Simpson's made a big enough fool of me now."

"I'm sorry you won't make a speech, sir," said Miss Stanton. "But, anyway, I hope you'll let Sammy take a part in the celebration."

"Well," said Blodgett, ungraciously, "if he does, see to it that he speaks up good and loud."

So Sammy was selected to speak a piece in his grandfather's place. He had very little oratorical gift. Miss Stanton struggled with him faithfully and diligently. Yet each time, after he slipped from her presence, he reappeared with the sing-song inflection and abominable emphasis that made her blood run cold. She could not understand these persistent relapses.

"Sammy," she cried, in despair, "what shall I do with you, if you will not speak it as I teach you to?"

Sammy burst into tears. "I wisht there wasn't ever any Memorial day, nor any flag, nor anything. I wisht I was dead—so, there!"

"Why, what's the matter, Sammy?"

"Before I'm out of bed in the morning, gran'pa he's after me to speak my piece," sobbed the boy. "And the same every noon and after school at night. And he stands me upon a rock down in the back pasture where nobody can see or hear, and he goes off to the other end, and I have to holler it at him. And I begin your way, and he says he'll lick me if I don't say it his way. And between you both—boohoo!"

Here was a revelation. Mr. Blodgett, for all his surly manner, had become interested in the celebration. It lent a touch of pathos to what would otherwise have been ludicrous.

"You poor dear!" she said, finally. "You shall not be bothered any more by me. Say it just as your grandfather wishes."

So the daily coaching in the back pasture went on without interruption. The cows chewed their cuds; the sheep lifted their dull heads and were not wise enough to wonder, though occasion for wonder grew. For, marvel of marvels! Mr. Blodgett, after the elocution lessons, fell to telling war stories to his grandson.

This was the first common interest of their lives. Sammy felt he was finding a place in his grandfather's heart. How "good and loud" he would speak that hated piece, for payment!

Mr. Blodgett, in his turn, tried his utmost to keep Dave Simpson's name out of his reminiscences. He fought against it all the more because he was conscious of strange and tender renewal of his old friendship; but Dave's name crept into almost every tale.

So it came about that one day he blundered on the story of that time when Dave Simpson had saved his life at the peril of his own. Then he faltered and finally broke down. He had put the incident out of his heart and mind.

What good friends they had been—he and Dave! Either would have died for the other as readily as for the dear old flag. And now they were enemies, though the veterans of Plunkett—her only soldiers left!

He strove to become angry again.

"'Twas a mean thing for Dave to do, anyhow to ketch me up so!" he was growling, just when Sammy interrupted with a burst he had long repressed: "O, gran'pa! how I wisht I could see you dressed up like a soldier!"

The old man thought a moment. "Well, come along," he said. He did not understand why he humored the boy. He was more of a mystery to himself than to Sammy.

"Sh! Sh!" Blodgett led the way to the dusky, cobwebbed garret. He took from the old chest a faded army coat, a soldier's cap, a knapsack and a musket.

"Sh! Sh!" As stealthily as they had ascended they crept down the stairs, and so, with their precious burden, to the secluded back pasture.

Then Bill Blodgett, with an expression on his face that was new to Sammy, put on the battered blue, placed the cap above his thin, gray locks, adjusted the knapsack, shouldered the musket.

Now, indeed, thoughts of Dave Simpson crowded to the front. How proudly he and Dave had tramped away together in their army blue! Others had gone with them. Who had returned? Only himself and Dave. How they had cheered each other on the toilsome marches!

"Now, Sammy," cried Blodgett, trembling with awkward earnestness, "I'll show ye how Dave and me used to—"

A twig snapped. A stone fell from the wall. The flock of frightened sheep went cantering the length of the pasture. With a ringing cry, Dave Simpson leaped the wall like a boy.

"Hold on, Billy! I'll drill ye."

"Dave!"

"Attention! Present arms!"

Bill Blodgett obeyed the old words of command instantly, and with true soldierly gravity. Sammy's delighted heart nearly burst its bounds, betraying its excitement in every tense muscle. When the drill was ended, a nervous silence ensued till Simpson broke it: "Say, Billy, let's wear the old uniform to the flag-raising to-morrow."

"Seem's if 'twould be the proper thing to do," responded Mr. Blodgett.

That was all. Not a smile, not a hand-shake, not a word of repentance; yet the miracle of reconciliation had been wrought. And at the celebration on Memorial day the two veterans were present in their faded, eloquent uniforms. No speeches came from their lips, for their hearts were too full, but Sammy spoke up "good and loud" enough to redeem the loss, and the flag was raised by Blodgett and Simpson, pulling together on the rope. Then, at another pull from little Polly, it trembled, fluttered and flung its glory to the welcoming breeze, while the children cheered with a will, and their elders softly, with something tugging at their throats.—Emily J. Langley, in Youth's Companion.

INTERESTING RELICS.

The History of a Ring Found on the Battle Field at Manassas.

Although more than 30 years have elapsed since the first and second battles of Manassas, interesting articles are still found by the relic seeker. Only a few days ago friends found shells containing powder, pieces of canteens and whole bayonets. But I write to mention a most peculiar and interesting find. A young man, Laws Spencer, living on the old Logan farm (Catharpin P. O.) picked up a ring in the famous Deep Cut, which has a history. The ring is of good gold, with a blood stone scroll intaglio. The motto on it is "Sic itur ad astra." Around the scroll is V. M. I., and at the base a pen and sword crossed. Inside is engraved: "One of the 29—O. C. Henderson, July, 1859." My friends tried to purchase it, but he refused several large bids. With some care we have tried to reach the owner. Gen. Scott Shipp, superintendent of V. M. I., says: "O. C. Henderson was a classmate of mine and was wounded in the hand at second Manassas." He sends also the register of V. M. I., and it shows that O. C Henderson was captain of a Virginia battery. This register also shows that there were just 29 in the class of '59. I have heard of the "fellow who found the needle in the haystack," but this finding goes ahead of that. It is very strange that this ring should be found at all, but strikingly strange it should be found so near the anniversary of that terrible battle. Our supposition is that O. C. Henderson had a finger shot off, and probably if search were made he might find a long-lost bone. The Deep Cut witnessed bloody contests. An officer who was in the engagement writes about the fight on August 30, 1862: "Before the railroad cut the fight was most obstinate. I saw a federal flag hold its position for half an hour within ten yards of one of the confederate regiments in the cut, and go down six or eight times, and after the fight 100 dead men were lying 20 yards from the cut and some of them within a few feet of it. Some of the men fought with stones picked up out of the cut, after their ammunition gave out. Line after line surged up the hill, time after time led by their officers, but repeatedly dashed back on one another, until the whole field was covered with a confused mass of struggling, running, routed federals."—Cor. Washington Star.

BRAVELY DONE.

Running a Gauntlet of a Thousand Muskets in the Performance of Duty.

"That is one of the bravest men I ever knew," said Gen. Rosecrans to James R. Gilmore (Edmund Kirk) as Inspector-General Ducat left the room where the two gentlemen were conversing. "I saw him once," continued the general, "coolly face almost certain death to perform a duty. Three men had fallen before his eyes, and he had to run the gauntlet of a thousand muskets; but he did it." Mr. Gilmore relates the circumstances in the Louisville Courier-Journal:

It was at the battle of Iuka, where Rosecrans, with only 2,800 men actually engaged, was fighting a confederate force of 11,000, holding a chosen and very strong position. Ducat, in riding up to the general, had observed a regiment of Gen. Stanley's division about to be enveloped and overpowered by a much larger force.

"Ride on and warn Stanley at once," said Rosecrans. An acre of fire, swept with bullets, lay between them and the menaced regiment. Ducat glanced at it and said:

"General, I have a wife and children."

"You knew that when you came here," said Rosecrans, coolly.

"I'll go," said Ducat, moving his horse forward after his momentary hesitation.

"Stay a moment. We must make sure of this," said Rosecrans. He thought a thousand lives of more value than four, so, hastily writing some dispatches on the pommel of his saddle, he gave one to three orderlies, and sent them off at intervals of about sixty yards over the bullet-swept field.

Then he looked at Ducat, who had seen every one of them fall lifeless, or desperately wounded. Without a word, Ducat plunged into the fire, and, wonderful to tell, he ran the gauntlet in safety, and with his clothes torn by minie balls, and his horse reeling from a mortal wound, he got to Stanley, and saved the regiment. The orderlies found their graves on that acre of fire.

Not for the Dead Alone.

Not for the dead alone this day we cherish;
For all our brave deserve as well
As those who in the conflict fell—
Each risked his all—no one could tell
Who was to perish.

Not for the dead alone we bring these flowers:
But for their parents bowed with years,
Their children whom this day endears,
For wives and sisters yet in tears—
Their griefs are ours.

Not for the dead alone these ensigns gory;
But to impress on every eye
At what a cost we still may fly
That fabric fashioned from the sky—
Our nation's glory!

Not for the dead alone the drums are beating;
But listening ears shall catch the strain
And comrades join the sad refrain
Till heart to heart shall beat again
In solemn greeting.

Not for the dead alone commemoration;
But that our sons be taught to-day
The price their fathers had to pay
To keep and unto them convey
This mighty nation.

Not for the dead alone—Ah! truly not;
But for an object lesson grand
That all the earth may understand
The valiant saviors of this land
Are not forgot!

An Old Obligation.

While Frenchmen grumble that they still have to pay taxes in order to make up the war indemnity exacted by Prussia 25 years ago, the town of Koenigsberg, in Prussia, has only this year paid the last installment of the loan contracted to the war contribution imposed on it by Napoleon I.

Three Russian naval officers have been fined $50 each for trespassing on the British fortifications at Hong Kong, and making sketches.

Slaughter of the Buffalo.

Between the years 1860 and 1882 more than 15,000,000 bison (buffalo) were killed within the limits of the United States.

BACKACHE.

From the Press, New York City.

Few people have suffered more from pain in the back than Mrs. Lillie B. Newell of No. 2318 Second Avenue, New York City. For several years she was so afflicted with this distressing malady that she was hardly able to get around, and could do little to care for her children which made her suffering all the harder to bear. Her husband, Charles Newell, who is a well-known New York optician, tried in every way to find a remedy for his wife, but no medicine seemed to have the power to remove her pain.

Mrs. Glynn, a sister of Mrs. Newell, is a professional nurse, and was familiar with the symptoms of her sister's sickness. Mrs. Newell was away on a visit when a reporter called upon her, but Mrs. Glynn, who lives at No. 416 East One-hundred and-twentieth Street, told the story of her sister's recovery.

A doctor was called when Mrs. Newell's condition became serious and he prescribed small pink pills which, in a short time, relieved the woman's pain as no other medicine has done. "After awhile," Mrs. Glynn told the reporter, "we learned that the medicine the physician was giving my sister was nothing more than Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Knowing by experience how excellent a remedy these pills were, Mrs. Newell bought some at a drug store and continued taking them. The effect was most gratifying, for in six months my sister was perfectly well and the pain in her back was nothing more than an unpleasant memory. Both she and I have recommended the Pink Pills to other people, who have not failed to find them all that is claimed. All doctors my sister had been treated by, before taking the pills, had done her no apparent good."

Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose form, by the dozen or hundred) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. The price at which these Pills are sold makes a course of treatment inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

BIG JOHN MORIARTY.

Said to Be the Tallest and Strongest Man in Eastern Maine.

John Moriarty, known all over eastern Maine as "Barney Kelley's Giant," died in Oldtown hospital recently of typhoid fever, says the Lewiston Evening Journal. He has been for nearly two years employed as construction hand on the Bangor & Aroostook railroad, and later on the new Ashland branch, where he became sick.

Moriarty stood 6 feet 9¾ inches in his stocking feet, and generally weighed 240 pounds. Had he been fat his weight would have been enormous. But he was very lean. "Why," said Barney Kelley, "you could feed the giant on porterhouse steak and eggs and he wouldn't gain a pound; but he was an awful tough man!"

His arms were very long and he had hands as powerful as the paws of a gorilla. All over his body the muscles stood out in lumps and cords, and his strength was immense. He could do as much work as two ordinary men, and on that account his services were always in demand at more than common wages. He was especially serviceable as a derrick man—he could turn the heavy crank all day without tiring. An ax was like a toy in his hands, a cant-dog like a walking-stick. He could up end and shoulder a small log or piece of timber that two ordinary men could barely lift, and in every department of hearty manual labor he was a very Hercules.

Many stories are told of the giant's mighty strength. Once, when two saucy woodsmen "guyed" him about his towering height, he seized them by the shoulders, one in each hand, and knocked their heads together till their teeth rattled—and they were two good-sized men.

At another time some toughs came into a barroom where he was and proceeded to "clear the place out." Moriarty took them, two at a time, and pitched them half way across the street as though they were so many ninepins.

RAILROAD TRAVEL.

Modern Civilization Has Made It Quick, Comfortable and Secure.

In the Ladies' Home Journal John Gilmer Speed writes entertainingly and instructively on the construction and operation of railroads, under the caption, "Running a Train at Night." He prefatorily asserts that "the most remarkable achievements of modern civilization, probably, are those which affect traveling, making it at once quick, comfortable and secure. We cross states and continents at the rate of 30 miles an hour, with greater security against accident than our grandfathers enjoyed in their stage coaches, and we have, even when on the cars, comforts unknown in the palaces of kings when our grandfathers' grandfathers were young. During the year (from interstate commerce commissioner's report for year ending July 1, 1894), one passenger was killed for every 1,985,153 passengers carried, and one was injured for every 183,822 carried. This surely is as safe as living ordinary humdrum lives in large cities."

The report further shows that a man's chances against injury were such that he would have to travel 4,406,659 miles before getting hurt, and go 47,588,966 miles before being killed. At the rate of 30 miles an hour a man could travel, if nature permitted, on American railways for 181 years, without leaving the cars, before being killed, or with the same amount of security against accident he could go round the earth 1,903 times before meeting his death by accident, and 176 times before getting hurt.

Imprudent, But Gushing.

Young women who take books at the circulating library are imprudent to use their pages as blotters. They are doing wrong also, for it is against the rules. A copy of "Lord Ormond and His Aminta," which has been in use in a Philadelphia library, held in front of a mirror revealed the inscription: "I send you my heart with a kiss." All women finish their letters with that phrase, which cannot therefore betray anybody, but in this case the signature was there.

Shoes of the Gauls.

Before the Gauls were conquered by the Romans they had boots or shoes with soles in which were silver-headed nails. Some of these have been discovered in late years. The latter kind of boots and shoes—the long pointed ones—so familiar in pictures of the 14th century, and others, are more generally known.

Sabbath in Scotland.

Scotland's Sabbath is losing its sanctity. Driving, cycling and golf on Sunday have now been followed by a vote of the Glasgow corporation throwing open the public bath-houses for four hours on Sunday morning.

Cincinnati.

Cincinnati is worth $188,751,350, and has a debt of $26,240,197.

TO THE ST. LOUIS CONVENTION

With the Celebrated Republican Flambeau Club.

A special vestibuled train of sleeping cars, dining and baggage cars, will be run from Minneapolis and St. Paul to St. Louis June 13th via the CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY (the popular "Hedrick Route") to accommodate the Republican Flambeau Club and their friends throughout the Northwest.

Leave the Twin Cities afternoon of June 13th and arrive St. Louis next day.

This train will be side-tracked at a point within two blocks of Auditorium Convention Hall and six minutes' walk to the principal hotels. Passengers desiring to do so can occupy the sleepers during the convention at low rates.

The service, in every particular, will be absolutely first-class, and all may depend upon thoroughly comfortable and pleasant accommodations, both going and returning, and while occupying the cars in St. Louis.

The Republican Flambeau Club is composed of leading business and professional men in Minnesota, and their trips to former National Conventions and Inaugurations have always done great credit to the Northwest.

The railroad rate is one fare for the round trip. For exact information as to sleeping car rates and accommodations, meals, etc., address FRANK P. NANTZ, Secretary Republican Flambeau Club, 604 Oneida Blo k, Minneapolis, or J. T. Conley, Assistant General Passenger Agent C., M. & St. P. Ry., St. Paul.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

Syrup of Figs

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all-important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

You Poor Rheumatic.

There is a remedy, thoroughly reliable, called "Allen's Vegetable Extract," that we will guarantee will cure you, or it shall cost you nothing. If you will write us fully about your case, we will gladly consider it, and sell you our medicine if we feel sure it will cure you; not otherwise. 130 doses by mail for $1.00. Old age comes early to the clothes that are dragged up and down over the wash-board. It's ruinous.

Nothing else uses them up so thoroughly and so quickly.

This wear and tear, that tells so on your pocket, ought to be stopped. Get some Pearline—use it just as directed—no soap with it—and see how much longer the clothes last, and how much easier and quicker the work is. Pearline saves the rubbing.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 513 JAMES PYLE, New York.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, MAY 29, 1896.

DELANO DIARY

—School examinations have kept the teachers and scholars of the High School quite busy this week.

—The entertainment to-night., at the City Hall, by the school children is ty be Free. Everybody come.

—Visit the clothing fire sale, Delano.

—The Franklin Band has been engaged for about six months to furnish the music at Watertown, to-morrow, Decoration Day. Their fame is getting abroad in the land.

—The swine ordinance has been the subject of considerable discussion among Delano citizens this week; and floods of oratory, have been turned loose on the street corners and elsewhere, on the subject. Such ordinances should be carefully constructed. to injure as few as possible; yet all should be treated alike. Kindly, but firmly, the laws should be enforced.

—The entertainment at the City Hall, on Wednesday evening, by the Graduating class was well attended, netting about $23. The class possesses considerable stage ability, and if they play their part in life as well as they did in "The Bicydlers" and "Which is Which" they will do well. The Solo by John Steffes and the Recitation by Miss DeKay, were well received.

—Rev. B. E. Sherwin, of Dassel, was a passenger east Monday, on his way to join the excursion from the west to Pittsburgh, Pa. where he goes as a delegate from the Third Minnesota Congressional district to the Prohibition National Convention to Nominate a President and vice President. He expects to be at home in time to preach Sunday. Mr. S. didn't know who would be the nominee but expected they would be good men.

—Several badly broken buggies in front of the village blacksmith's shops give silent but effective evidence of the fact that there must have been awfully rough roads or some terribly poor drivers, out to the Rader neighborhood last Saturday evening or early Sunday morning. One covered carriage belonging to Mat Fautsch and occupied by several of the young men of Delano came to such a degree of dilapidation as to be almost beyond the skill of our smithes to repair; some advised getting what they could for the outfit, and buying Mat a new one. Many of the boys will, doubtless, remain at home for a season to help them replenish their "once fat pocket books"

—The St. Cecelians, of the Catholic church gave a sociable at the City Hall, on Monday evening which was well attended; beyond expectation as was evidenced by the disappearance of the ice cream long before the close of the evenings exercises. A voting contest took place, Katie Shaffer receiving the largest number of votes had the chance to draw the prize a picture of either Rev. Cominski or Rev. Mathew. Rev. Pendergast, of Minneapolis, made a short speech in which among other things he gave the young men of the audience some very good advice. "To learn a trade" and to "remain at home" in the country and not flock to the cities. Rev. Cominski made a very humorous speech and although Rev. Pendergast said he was noted for short speeches Rev. Joe beat him on this line. Considerable fun was had in bidding on a cake, at auction. Rev. Joe got it, and divided it up among the audience.

—The clothing fire sale, in Ddlano, is a success. 35-1t.

—The present grade of our village is not giving the satisfaction the old one would had it been followed. The new grade made by the village council differs in many places from the old one, which is said to be "lost," a sad reflection on the capability or the honesty of some one, and many lots are renderen very undesirable places to live on. The beauty of our village depends very much on the rolling ground, the up and down hill of the streets. The dead level and straight lines that make part of Minneapolis look flat, compared to the rolling ground of her sister city, St. Paul, should be a lesson to us to preserve our naturally beautiful village in as far as we can, consistant with easy travel. Again, where lots are worth $1000 per front foot it may be advisable to level them up in business portions of a city; or where they are so far from a level as to make travel inconvenient; but in a village like Delano, to build sidewalks, and to raise old ones to a grade, straight across a block where the corners are high, leaving a majority of the front ends from one to three feet below grade, which, in case the owners filled up the front of their lots, (a thing not at all likely,) it would leave a slant, from the side walk to the alley, little less than that of a quarter pitch house roof; looks to us awfully foolish. And for a majority of property owners on such a block to sit idly by and see their homes for the past quarter of a century, nearly, spoiled, ruined, to please an individual who wants to exhibit a little more authority than, under the circumstances is called for, is not wise.

The grade that was the guide for people so long ought not to be so ruthlessly brushed aside "lost" and a new one differing so much substituted, unless the property owners want it. Of course if no one objects, and the council see fit to depreciate the value of people's property fifty per cent by changing grade, they can do so; but if the people say no, their voice must be heard and heeded. The council is a servant of the people.

—Visit the clothing fire sale, Delano.

—Maxfield says the coal chute at Minneapolis, now works to a nicety.

—F. H. Lindsley is Memorial Day Orator for Delano; at 1 P. M., at the City Hall.

—Mesdames Astrop and Bohn, are authority that it rained, over in Stewarts pasture, Tuesday evening.

—The jolly Countenance of Assessor Valentine Eppel beamed upon most of our taxpaying citizens during the week.

—An enthusiastic Forth of July meeting was held last night, another is called for Tuesday evening, at the City Hall.

—Barber Bohn's place of business will be closed on Saturday, until 4 P. M. while the Professor is at Watertown with the band.

—We are creditably informed that Mr. Howard, of the recent Billings trial notoriety stopped off a few minutes one day recently and interviewed himself to the Eagle.

—Prof. Geo. Innis, of Hamine, will preach the Baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of the High School, at the City Hall, on Sunday evening. Come and hear him.

—Recorder W. R. Johns, sallied forth from his office and visited most of the dog owners of the Village this week and demanded from $1 to $3 each for all members of the canine family.

—That fearful rubby-dub-dub to be so frequently heard about town at all hours and places, is said to be Oscar Ball practising some marches for Decoration Day. He has joined the Franklin Brass Band.

—His Honor the Mayor of Delano seems to be having about as much trouble running the present Village Council as Grover Cleveland is supposed to have had with the last Democratic Congress.

—The township of Franklin will hold its primary election, for the election of delegates to the County Convention, at Sweedeback & Erickson's Hall on Saturday June 6, from 3 to 5 P. M. Be there and vote for your choice of delegates.

—Don't fail to attend the new fangled primary election to be held at the City Hall, Saturday, June 6, from 3 to 5 P. M. Vote for the delegates who will the nearest represent your views on the live issues of the day. If you are a Democrat be there.

—Wash Rader has chosen a dozen boys and girls to decorate graves on Memorial Day; and is drilling them for that occasion; they are: Mary Steffes, Marjorie O'Hair, Julia Coolen, Carrie Eppel, Bessie Wilder, Laura Schaffer and Oscar Eppel, Charlie Bentz, Willie Johns, Lee Johns, Earl Jones, Charley Lohmiller.

—Memorial Day will be observed by meeting at the City Hall at 10 A. M. marching to Delano Cemetary, returning to the hall and disbanding for dinner. At 1 P. M. assemble in hall and listen to speech by F. H. Lindsly and other exercises, and election of officers. Then march to Catholic Cemetery where, after decorating graves the crowd will return to their homes.

—Some of our Village Council have waked up to the fact that their votes, individualy, count for as much as does the vote of the Mayor: and that it is the duty of committees, sometimes, to attend to business, and to order goods, and to vote on bills and look after village affairs; and that unless ordered by the council the Mayor is not expected to transact all the business to suit himself. Voting to table water works south of the track where people are entiteled to fire protection as well as the balance of the village, don't look just right.

Memorial Day Meeting.

The meeting to arrange for observing Memorial Day called at the City Hall for Saturday night found the hall engaged and went to Schaffer's store and transacted business as follows:

Schaffer's Store, May 23d, 1896.

A People's Party County Convention and Primary Election will be held at Buffalo at 11 A. M. Monday, June 22, to send 14 delegates to Duluth to elect 7 delegates and 7 alternates to the national Peopel's Party Convention to be held in St. Louis July 22. All Primary elections will be held on Saturday June 20, polls open from 3 to 5 P. M. 6 days notice must be given by posting 3 notices, by any qualified People's Party voter in the district.

District Court will convene at Buffalo, on Monday, June 1. It is presumed that Judge Seagraye Smith will provide. The Grand Jury will have to wrestle with the J. R. Howard case: the man charged with bribery or attempted bribery, through O. L. Billings. There seems to be a terrible smoke, and it is usually supposed that where so big a smoke comes from there must be some fire. And it is to big a crime to bribe Juries to leave a charge uninvestigated. It would ruin most men to have such a charge hanging over them. And the fair name of the county, its officials, and every citizen is more or less tainted by allowing such charges to be brought against anybody and the party not proven innocent or guilty, if such a thing can be done. Honest people everywhere desire a clean record, and wish a full and thorough looking up of this affair. If Mr. Howard is innocent the people should know it. If any one else is guilty they should be given their just deserts, from the highest to the lowest. No national, politicel, religious or other party can long survive the shielding of men from crime in this country more than can those who let them off for money.

We have no acquaintance whatever with Mr. Howard, but our suspicions have been aroused before in regard to some transactions in the court of this county and we are for an honest investigation and a thorough one while at it.

Editor French, of Wright County Times, seems to have been considerably warmed by the Journals "X Rays" recently, and takes occasion to allude to the "physical makeup" of "Eaton and Catlin." You ought not to have done so Brother French, it don't look well to run down your neighbors in such style, and then blow your own bugle by informing the readers of your paper that instead of being appointed "doorkeeper" you were given a position as "one of the aids to the sergeant at arms, a purely ornamental position." Of course, they would like a handsome man, with a portly "physical makeup," for "a purely ornamental position." But then we don't believe Mr. French in justified in remaining away, as he says he intends doing, for fear the position will be only "purely ornamental." We wouldn't wonder if each of the aids would have a chance to exhibit not only his "ornamental" qualifications but his "physical make up," as well; and to show to the G. O. P. in convention assembled, and have it reported with a picture of his "ornamental" and "physical make up" in the leading dailies of the country, how brave, or otherwise, he is. Mr. French, you should certainly reconsider so fine an opportunity to exhibit to the whole country your "ornamental" and "physical make up." You don't know what a chance you may be loosing. Of course it may be a dangerous position to be placed in; and there is the awful temptation for the pugilistically inclined to select the most "ornamental" and finest "physical makeup" when he wishes to strike out from the shoulder, making it more risky for Bro. French. But then there is said to be an "opportunity in the lives of all men." This may be an opportunity, who knows? Don't allow your fears to overcome you, Bro. Editor; don't get shaky in the knees: but get an accident policy, if you can find a company willing to take the risk on such an "ornamental physical makeup" and do your duty to your party and your country, never shirk when duty calls. Now, of course the G. N. Ry. isn't giving out advertising tickets, and transportation comes high but we would suggest that you send a photograph of your "ornamental physical make up" to the chairman of the committee on arrangements, you can probably get one for advertising. If not, send an "X Ray" and they will probably provide you with round trip tickets.

Democratic Primary Election.

A Democratic Primary election will be held at the City Hall on June 6, from 3 ot 5 o'clock, P. M. for the purpose of choosing three delegates to the county convention and Primary election to be held at Buffalo June 10.

TRUE FREEDOM, AND HOW TO GAIN IT.

We want no flag, no flaunting rag, for liberty to fight;
We want no blaze of murderous guns, to struggle for the right.
Our spears and swords are printed words, the mind our battleplain;
We've won such victories before, and so we shall again.

We love no triumphs sprung of force—they stain her brightest cause:
'Tis not in blood that Liberty inscribes her civil laws.
She writes them on the people's heart in language clear and plain;
True thoughts have moved the world before, and so they shall again.

We yield to none in earnest love of freedom's cause sublime;
We join the cry, "FRATERNITY!" we keep the march of Time.
And yet we grasp nor pike nor spear, our victories to obtain;
We've won without their aid before, and so we shall again.

We want no aid of baricade to show a front to wrong;
We have a citadel in truth, more durable and strong.
Calm words, great thoughts, unflinching faith, have never striven in vain;
They've won our battles many a time, and so they shall again.

Peace, progress, knowledge, brotherhood—the ignorant may sneer,
The bad deny; but we rely to see their triumph near.
No widow's groans shall load our cause, no blood of brethren stain;
We've won without such aid before, AND SO WE SHALL AGAIN.

CHARLES MACKAY.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND exhibited some of his old time back bone in yetoing the $75,000,000 river and harbor appropriation bill. But thats all the good it did, Congress passed it over his head.

MINNEAPOLIS saloon keepers are not generally understood to be worse than the states average of dealers in intoxicants, yet it is reported that 30 of them have been arrested for violating internal revenue laws.

THE Warren Sheaf threatens when pumpkins get ripe to reciprocate by sending some to Hon. C. K. Davis who furnished the seed. If all the editors do likewise the senator can hold a pumpkinpie sociable for his colleagues next winter, quite often.

THE Delano Eagle Company put in a bid for some state printing this week, and being away down on prices was likely to get a slice until they ran up against that ice Berg they have been abusing so roundly for some months. The state ought not to be looser on account of a little frigidity between members of the G. O. P.

PEOPLE are particular about what they eat; they want their food pure. But some walk up to bars and buy liquors adulterated with all imaginable articles; many of them chemically unfit for the human stomach. No man should be allowed to retain a license who will adulterate liquors. If only pure drinks were sold and nobody was allowed to treat his neighbor and make him drunken also, much of the difficulty of the liquor traffic would be done away with.

FOURTH OF JULY is hastening on and the average American Citizen is busy, so soon, looking up a place to spend his holiday. The best place is where a celebration is gotten up as a celebration, pure and simple, where all meet, as did our forefathers, in the wooded temples, on an equilibrium, where the same groumd is beneath and the same blue sky overhead; where the same shade protects from the same sun, and where the same gentle zephyrs cool the brow or watt sweet perfumes from the surrounding wild flowers and blossoms. There all can equally enjoy the beauties of nature and remember the deeds of those who made our Nation's birthday.

Big Independent Vote.

There seems to be a more than usual desire on the part of the citizens of our country to clear the political atmosphere of the United States. Things have been worked up to such a pitch as to mystify many on several important subjects. For a long time the tariff question has served as a blind issue for many to be led to the ballot box, like sheep to the slaughter on; but people have given that subject thought; they have reasoned from their own experence that it was better for their country not to have a protective tariff; and hardly anyone is satisfied with even the one now in use, to say nothing of the worse McKinley tariff. And now those who fear that people are going to insist on a still further reduction of the tariff are trying to drive McKinley to a platform, the strongest plank of which shall be a gold standard; in order to still further blindly lead the people against their own best interests. But the people all along the line have become aroused, have awakened from their lethargic state, and are anxiously loooking about them for the best way to clear matters up and preparing themselves intelligently to vote for what they beleye to be right. They will no longer be lead about unless they understand plainly what is ment by party platforms and are in accord with them. They will vote for those that suit them best. It looks as if the independent vote would be the biggest eyer known this campaign.

THE Duluth Citizet is the latest addition to our exchange list. It is a wide awake reform journal, advocating free silyer, woman's rights, etc, etc.

SOME of the cities among them Pittsburg are licensing cows to furnish milk to their citizens; the cows to be subjected to a sanitary examination periodically. If the license for cows is observed like saloon license the adulterations will be worse than ever. It is a wonder there is not a license for a well, so as to give some more inspectors a job.

LATELY it has been reported that Michael Doran was out of politics, and many an honest Minnesota Democrat fondly hoped it was true. He may not be so bad a man in politics as he has been represented, but it looks bad for him to suddenly resuscitate himself, and enter the political arena, again; as a leader favoring a gold standard, the idol of leading Republican politicians, and with what, to us, appears to be a minority of the Democrats or even of the Republicans of Minnesota. Most of the gold bugs of both parties appear to be men of money in the cities, or those who hover about them and hanker after more of the paltry pelf. There seems to be, whether or not tis true, a concerted action between the leading money men all oyer the country, to have a gold standard, regardless of party politics, and all the schemes that bob up aboye the political horizon whether in the east or in the west deserve to have the pure sunlight of honest inyestigation turned onto them before they are swallowed and voted for by Republicans, Democrats, or any other party.

GOLD BUGS claim to be the only bimetallists. They insist that in case free silyer was adopted, gold would be driven out of circulation; and that the only way to haye bimetallism is to have a single standard, and that standard must be gold. If it is true that by having but one standard we will have bimetallism, and they are honestly for bimetallism, why don't they advocate free silver, and a demonetization of gold? Would it not be cheaper for the goyernment to keep silver at its present size for dollars in circulation than it would to recoin them? Isn't there a great many more pieces of silver than gold in circulation? And if a single standard is the only way to bimetallism wouldn't it be better financering to get at it the cheaper way, and the easiest way. For our part we take no stock in that argument, whatever; we are in favor of bimetallism, and believe in making all dollars of the country good for what one dollar is good for. We do not believe having one dollar to redeem another with, is just exactly the correct thing. It allows the "endless chain" business to be carried on a little too extensively. If all debts are payable in all dollars then people will not all prefer to hoard one kind, and money will circulate more equally.

McKinleyism.

Anyone who is familiar with the record of McKinley knows that he stands squarely with the republican party on all questions advocated and fought for by that party in the past thirty years, and he shows his usual good sense by refusing to be drawn by his enemies into a controversy on these questions.—Sherbourne County Times.

Of course; he is noted for believing in "protection." And the Republican platform of 1892 claimed to be in favor of "Bimetallism," at least we have understood they claimed to be with the people; "a government of the people", and their platform made at Minneapolis, said "The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money." Why are the gold bug organs getting so anxious to haye an expression from Mr. Mc Kinley, on the subject. If he represents the ideas of the G. O. P. for 30 years can't they read up the platforms?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 29, 1896.

Just as the McKinleyites were hugging themselves to think that the republican opposition to the fat-frying candidate had been whipped into silence they made a discovery which has frightened them. This discovery is a confidential circular sent out by J. S. Clarkson, asking for the personal history of every delegate elected to the St. Louis convention, and for the name of the person who has the most influence over him. The McKinleyites don't know what Clarkson is driving at, but they know that he doesn't want Mc Kinley nominated and that it is likely to be something to hurt him. Hence this discovery, made through Clarkson sending one of his circulars to a McKinleyite, has greatly alarmed them. Clarkson isn't the only big republican who is secretly working against McKinley. They may not be able to keep him out of the nomination, but they will make him spend some anxious hours before he gets it.

It has leaked out that President Cleveland is gathering data upon which to base his veto of the $75,000,000 River and Harbor bill, which may go in any day before next Wednesday. The impression in Congress is that the bill will be passed oyer the veto.

The Senate voted down the proposition to add 75 cents a barrel to the internal revenue tax on beer, which was offered as an amendment to the filled cheese bill.

Democrats were disappointed because the Supreme court decision, that the money appropriated by the last Congress for sugar bounties should be paid, did not touch the question of the constitutionality of the sugar bounty. Some of the ablest democrats have from the birth of the party claimed that the whole system of government bounties was unconstitutional, and it was hoped that a decision would haye been made of that question in this case.

There is every reason to believe that the House committee on Invalid Pensions was merely indulging in a little campaign buncombe when a favorable report was ordered to be made to the House on the service pension bill, and that few members of Congress seriously wish this bill to ever become a law. The bill provides that every man who served ninety days or longer in the U. S. Army or Navy between 1861 and 1865 shall receive $3 a month and one cent additional for each day over ninety that he served in either branch of the service, and this money is to be paid to the million or thereabouts who are already drawing pensions for disability as well as to those who are not on the pension roll. The bill, if it becomes a law, would add annually $30,000,000 or more to the already enormous expenditures for pensions.

Ex-Congressman Enloe, of Tenn., who is visiting Washington and who is an authority on the democracy of his state, said of the outlook: "Tennessee is in good shape. We will elect our democratic state ticket by an old-time majority. The people are as mad as hornets over '94 slump, and are going to expatiate that slip by eating up the republicans in November."

It hardly needed a denial from Chairman Harrity of the National Democratic Committee, to convince anybody who knows him that he had never said that the National Committee would attempt to keep anybody out of the Chicago convention. Mr. Harrity is in Washington, and thus explicitly defines his position: "Speaking for myself as a delegate to the National Democratic Convention, I expect to enter it with a view of abiding by the will of the majority. Whoever is nominated will receive my support, and I am certain that will be the sentiment of the great bulk of the delegates. Democrats always enter a conference, caucus or convention with the idea of submission to the voice of the majority. That is a cardinal principle and there is no reason to think it will be violated at Chicago by either the advocates of sound money or of free silver."

Section 61 of the Wilson tariff law, admitting free foreign alcohol to be used in the arts and manufacturers, was this week repealed by the House, the vone being 165 to 69. Secretary Carlisle had asked to have this section repeale because it ban been so clumsily drawn that it was practically impossible to make regulations to enforce it. This section was one of the amendments to the Wilson bill in the Senate. It was known at the time that it was badly drawn, and expected that it would be put into proper shape in conference. Everybody remembers how the House was compelled to accept all the Senate amendments in a lump to save the entire bill from failure.

The discussion of the bill prohibiting further issue of bonds would have been made much more spirited in the Senate if there was any probability of action by House on the bill.

From the Wright County Times we clip the following:

Janitor Edwards yesterday was noticed with a can of gasoline going over the court house square, pouring a few drops on every dandelion plant. We stopped and inquired about it, and found that where he poured gasoline on the plants they withered and died. The roots dried right up and no more bother will be experienced with this troublesome weed. This remedy is a splendid one and cheap as well, and is worth trying. The results on the court house square are such that no trouble is anticipated from the weeds the balance of the year. In attempting to dig the plant out there is always a portion of the root left in the ground and it springs up again. Where the gasoline is used the whole plant is killed and the result desired is obtained.—Mankato News.

Silver Shiners; Spear Some.

Before our money standard was tinkered with silver dollars were more valuable than gold dollars. Why are they not so now?

Before the money standard was tinkered with the products of the farm brought, in many instances, double what they do now. Why don't they do so now?

Before the money standard was tinkered with our National political parties in their platforms, favored the money of the Constitution. Why don't they do so now?

If a gold standard is the salvation of this country, why does it call for the sacrifice of so many merchants and tradesmen who were encumbered with debts?

Debts daily grow larger; but property values daily decrease. Has the tinkering with the money standard made the change?

Moneyed men of all parties favor a gold standard. It apparently appreciates their money; making it possible for creditors to get twice as much of your products as formerly.

Moneyed men, alias Gold bugs, are a little shy of McKinley, the protection advocate; they dare not trust the people to yote on tariff again. Are Gold standard and Protective tariff twins, to be used to enrich the rich and to enpoor the poor.

The Uses And Delights Of Swimming.

Miss Marie Valleau, One of New York's Best Woman Swimmers, Speaks Enthusiastically Of The Art.

It is almost a truism to say every woman ought to know how to swim; and it is very certain that all would realize the pleasure of it. I am fairly familiar with most of the sports practiced by women but I know of none more delightful than swimming. Just after your plunge, when you begin to move through the refreshing water with long, easy strokes, you have sensations which nothing else in this world, I believe, gives you; and swimming is one of the few sports which combines pleasure with great utility. Every summer we hear of accidents in the water resulting in fatalities which would have been ayoided if the women involved had been able to swim.

Aside from the pleasure of swimming there is hardly an exercise which gives such symmetrical development to muscles. The moyement is so peculiar, moreover, that the muscles of the arms and legs which ordinarily get but little exercise come into play. One of the great essentials of good swimming is proper breathing. The inhalations must be regular and deep, and in assuming the position one naturally expands the chest. Hence, there is nothing in the world better for lungs than swimming, in moderation. Excess, of course, is to be avoided, as in anything else. A swim of half an hour is amply long for eyen those who are experienced swimmers. As for learning to swim, it is not so difficult as some people imagine. Twelve lessons, and often less, from a good instructor, will make a woman of average vigor a master of art.—From "Women in Athletics," in Demorest's Magazine for June.

NEW YORK city has a mother's club. Permit us to suggest that the lady's slipper would be a good flower emblem for it.

WITH its politics, its cyclones, floods, and its sunshine, that brought the roses three weeks in advance of the usual time, the year 1896 will be historical.

A YOUNG farmer at Fryeburg, Me., has invented a four-wheel tip cart, which separates automatically in case the horse gets frightened and runs away.

THE finest wire in the country is made at Taunton, Mass. This metal cobweb of minute diameter is exactly the one five-hundredth part of an inch in thickness—much finer than human hair.

CYCLONES are capable of doing remarkable things, but we do not believe the story of that Kansas man who says a cyclone pulled him around its outside so quick that he stepped on his own heels.

IT is understood that the government of New Zealand will introduce a measure for the exclusion of consumptive persons on the same lines as that dealing with smallpox, making masters of ships liable.

THE czar, who was recently crowned in Moscow, is 28 years of age. The German emperor is under 40. The young men of Europe are coming to the front. Meanwhile the prince of Wales is a grandfather and still waiting for the throne.

SARA BERNHARDT impressed a Syracuse (N. Y.) dramatic critic as having a "slim, lynx smile, combined with serpentine sinuosity, ophidian grace, catlike softness, tigerish ferocity and the agility of the leopard." What more could anyone expect for a single price of admission?

REPORT comes from the Soudan that the new small caliber bullet inflicts wounds that are worse the second day than the first. A wounded man who keeps on fighting for 24 hours is a dangerous customer, and the new rifles must be charged with an unexpected and serious defect.

PEARY is contemplating another journey to arctic regions, this time to bring back a 40-ton meteorite he discovered last year. This will be a welcome change from the usual purpose of seeking the pole. An expedition armed with derricks will inspire greater public confidence and insure more speedy success to the relief party in locating it later.

A FRENCH savant thinks that by the year 2000 a spiritual chemistry will have been discovered that should entirely change human nature. This will be greatly due to chemistry utilizing the heat of the sun and tapping the central heat of the globe. Under the reign of chemistry the earth, we are told, will become a vast pleasure garden, and the human race will live in peace and plenty.

IT has been learned that Tennyson predicted the day of his death. Just a year before his death friends of the poet were visiting Aldworth house. The late Lord Selbourne turned to Tennyson and remarked: "You ought to be happy here." "Ah!" sighed the poet, "I have only a year to live." His hearers laughed at the remark, but it was a prophetic assertion that was verified almost to the minute.

A NEW claimant to the title of "meanest man" is in evidence, but temporarily in hiding. He attended a revival of Chicago Free Methodists, exhorted, sang, led in prayer, and was so "perniciously" devout the preacher held a private session with him after the meeting. When the session rose and the preacher was alone with his thoughts he discovered the contents of his vest had departed with the newly converted brother.

THE question is sometimes asked, will not the rivers gradually carry the land into the sea? Yes, but it will take a long time. Recent computations show that the River Thames which is quite a mixer of land and water, would require 11,000,000,000 years to level the tight little isle with the sea. By this time, you know, we will all be in glory. There is no use in worrying about what your descendants 11,000,000,000 years from now are going to do for a living. By that time they may be fishes and take delight in the sea, or they may be salamanders and take delight in—the fire. "Sufficient unto the day," etc.

IT is reported from New York that experiments by Tesla and Edison have been rewarded at practically the same time by the discovery of a system or systems by which the X ray may be utilized as an illuminant more intense and whiter than the arc light. Tesla's discovery is said to be the perfecting of a vacuum tube system of electric lighting without wires, and one that can be made ready soon for practical commercial purposes. Edison's discovery is described as the similar use of a Crookes tube to produce illumination, and he says that practically all the electric energy is transformed into light.

THE states of Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Kansas, Nebraska and Texas have felt the fury of the cyclone this year, the loss of life being reported at over 300. Such occasions as these bring out into bold relief the limitations of science and man's inventive genius. The elements gather their forces at leisure and sweep down on the earth, and not a barrier can be devised to ward off their fatal stroke. The best minds of the age, trained in the developments of the past, pour over nature's book in a vain search for signs of its changing moods. Without a note of warning, "out of a clear sky," the tornado rushes on its victims.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Proceedings of the First Session.

Washington, May 28.—The senate yesterday defeated the proposition to increase the beer tax 75 cents a barrel by a vote of 34 to 27. The filled-cheese bill was further discussed, as was also the bond bill. A bill was favorably reported to increase pay of letter carriers throughout the United States. The house spent almost the entire day discussing the senate amendment to the general deficiency bill appropriating large sums for various claims, and it was adopted finally.

Washington, May 29.—The bond bill was further discussed in the senate yesterday. Senator Carter, of Montana, gave notice of an amendment to the filled-cheese bill, putting on a tax and establishing regulations against adulterated beer. In the house a partial conference report on the Indian appropriation bill occasioned an animated controversy. A resolution adopted by the senate providing for the loan of tents by the war department and such other relief as the secretary may deem necessary to the sufferers by the St. Louis storm was concurred in.

Washington, June 1.—In the senate on the 29th ult. the bill for the repeal of the free alcohol clause of the Wilson tariff act was passed, as was also the house bill concerning the distillation of brandy from fruits. No session was held on Saturday. In the house no business was transacted. A message was received from the president vetoing the river and harbor bill.

Washington, June 2.—The bill to prohibit the issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of congress was further discussed in the senate yesterday, but no action was taken. In the house the bill authorizing the appointment of a labor committee of 20 members to investigate the relations of labor and capital and to report to congress desirable legislation in relation thereto was passed.

Nearly all the candidates, headed by Alva Crabtree, of Springfield, nominee for secretary of state, have withdrawn from the prohibition state ticket of Ohio as a result of the split at Pittsburgh.

The wholesale dry goods firm of Wolff & Sharp at Macon, Ga., failed for $250,000.

Jesse Slayton and William Miles, both colored, were hanged by a mob at Columbus, Ga., for assaulting white women.

Sixteen persons lost their lives in Missouri towns adjoining St. Louis in the recent cyclone, and 46 in Illinois towns, a total of 62, and property valued at $3,000,000 was destroyed.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

In Cuba yellow fever was greatly reducing the Spanish forces.

The death of Miss Kate Field, known the country over as journalist, author, editor and orator, occurred in Honolulu of pneumonia, aged 56 years.

In Moscow a panic resulted from the great crush of people at the popular feast in honor of the coronation of the czar, causing the trampling to death of at least 1,300 persons, and many more were injured.

Later advices from Moscow say that 3,600 persons were killed and 1,200 injured, the majority of them fatally, by the crush on the Khodijnskoje plain.

The insurgents burned the entire towns of Jamaica and Puerto de la Guira, near Havana.

LATER NEWS.

No Bonds.

Washington, D. C., June 2.—At 7 o'clock tonight the long struggle in the senate over the bill to prohibit the issue of bonds came to an end and the bill was passed by a vote 32 to 25. The bill, as passed, covers only three lines, as follows:

"Be it enacted that the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever, without further authority of congress, is hereby prohibited."

A riot occurred in front of the Illinois Steel Works, at Ashland avenue and Thirty-second street, Chicago, the 2d, and two men were shot. They were: J. Sexton, laborer, employed at the steel works; will probably die. MichaelMartin, saloon-keeper; slight chances of recovery. Martin was shot by Sexton, and the latter was shot by Policeman, Conneily.

An explosion of gas in the mines at Roche Bdlle, France, the 2d, killed 25 miners.

An eastbound passenger train on the Northern Pacific road left the track at a point near Grey Cliff, about 50 miles east of Livingston, wrecking the engine and five coaches. Three hobos riding the blind baggage were instantly killed and several trainmen were injured. The passengers are reported uninjured.

The house the 2d passed the river and harbor bill over the president's veto by a vote of 220 to 60.

George D. Perkins was renominated for congress the 2d by the republicans of the 11th Iowa district.

Henry M. Smith, colored, was hanged at Lexington, Ky., the 2d, for assaulting Mrs. Hudson a year ago. Only 50 people witnessed the execution in the jail.

The republican state convention of Maine the 2d endorsed Thos. B. Reed and declared against free coinage.

TRAMPLED TO DEATH.

Horrible Disaster Occurs at a Coronation Feast.

Thirteen Hundred People Lose Their Lives in a Stampede of the Populace in Moscow—Due to Absence of the Police.

Moscow, June 1.—One of the most terrible disasters that ever overtook the common people of Russia, who have for years been the butt of misfortune, happened Saturday in this city, when over 1,000 persons were killed or received injuries from which they afterward died in a panic on Khodijnskoje plain, precipitated during festivities in honor of the coronation of the czar. The official report places the number of dead at 1,380. Most of these persons were instantly trampled to death, and the spectacle presented when the portion of the plain on which the stampede took place was cleared of the survivors was sickening in the extreme. The crowd was awaiting the signal to dine at tables laid out of doors and the distribution of presents from the royal house when the disaster occurred. The immediate cause of it was the pitching into the midst of the dense throng assembled gifts, for which a wild scramble was made. Had the police been present in sufficient numbers the catastrophe might have been averted.

The disaster, it is now explained, was due mainly to the absence of the police, who had not arrived at so early an hour in the morning at the scene where the festivities were scheduled to take place. Fully 200,000 persons of all grades of society had gathered together on the Khodijnskoje plain at the time the disaster occurred. Only about 1,000 attendants were in charge, and they seemed to be unable to control the mob. Hoping to lessen the pressure of the assembled hundreds of thousands, all moving toward a common center, they tossed the packages and presents into the midst of the crowd. This seemingly precipitated the panic, since a scramble to obtain possession of the gifts ensued and the hollow piece of ground near the center formed a death trap for the thousands. The police made desperate attempts to control the people, but all their efforts were futile, and men, women and children were trampled upon by hundreds. For a time the officials in charge of the banquet lost their heads entirely. The crowds seemed to have gone mad with rage and excitement, shouting, cursing and yelling as they pressed onward over a path strewn with dead and dying human beings.

At the place where the disaster occurred the czar had planned to give a banquet on a mammoth scale to the multitudes of people who had come to Moscow to participate in the coronation ceremonies. To the people, especially those of the peasant class, this was one of the most attractive features of the week, and the banquet grounds on the Hoynsky plain were jammed at early dawn. In the open air long lines of rough tables, flanked by rougher benches, had been erected. It was at first arranged to accommodate 400,000 people, but in view of the immense crowds assembled in and about this city for the coronation fetes, extra tables and benches were hastily erected. Twice 400,000 persons were desirous of taking part in the feast, but the authorities decided that there must be a limit to the number to be entertained, and so the figure was fixed at 500,000.

By dawn the mass of peasants about the tables was enormous and they were all desperately hungry, some of them having fasted, by choice or necessity, for nearly 24 hours. The guards did everything possible to keep back the crowd, but suddenly the masses, impatient to get at the food, pressed forward, swept everything before them, and overturned tables and benches as if made of grass, trampling thousands under foot and crushing the life out of a great number of people. The oldest and weak naturally suffered the most.

The passage between the various booths became a scene of the wildest struggles. Here it was the most were killed. Despite the best efforts of the cossacks and of the police, who unfortunately arrived too late to be of much service, the crowd constantly increased. It was a long time before the place could be cleared enough to allow the work of rescue to proceed. Many of the injured were carried to the various hospitals, which were soon filled to overflowing. Hundreds of persons who were wounded, however, were removed to their own homes or taken to private residences. Most of the victims were women and children.

ADDRESS TO THE SILVER MEN.

National Silver Party Urges Friends of the White Metal to Organize.

Washington, June 2.—The national silver party, through its chairman, J. J. Mott, has issued from its headquarters in this city an address to the friends of silver. This address recites that since the founding of the national silver party on January 22 last the work of organization has been steadily but quietly pursued and the country aroused to a pitch of excitement unknown since the civil war. It declares that the convention of the party to be held in St. Louis on June 22 will undoubtedly be one of the most important conventions and notable gatherings ever assembled in this country. Upon the wisdom of its acts and that of the people's party convention to be held at the same place and time depends, the address declares, "the vital question as to whether we can have a just settlement of this money issue in our generation. The address concludes as follows:

"The republican party is committed to the gold standard through the platforms of 80 per cent. of the state conventions, and any straddle that may be made in its national platform will deceive no one. The democratic party must not expect the country to accept any candidate it may name who is acquiesced in by the gold wing of that party. The question of vital importance is for silver men to name a candidate for president whose nomination will be readily acquiesced in by the believers in monetary reform. Friends of silver, look to your interests and organize now while the fruit is ripe for plucking. Do not wait on the problematical action of any party."

Dropped Out of Sight.

St. Paul, Minn., May 29.—Three hundred feet of the roadway of the Northern Pacific railway sunk in Bumars lake, near Aitkin, before daylight Thursday morning, and 20 feet of water now washes over the spot where heavy trains were running Wednesday. The grade was built upon the north shore of the little lake and has been built over an underground lake, as the whole track simply dropped out of sight. A west-bound freight barely escaped a complete wreck there at four o'clock a. m. The engineer saw the waves rolling ahead of him where the track had always been. Applying the brakes, the fireman jumped from the engine just as it leaped over the bank into the lake.

VETOED.

President Puts His Disapproval on River and Harbor Bill.

Washington, May 30.—The president Friday sent to the house a message vetoing the river and harbor appropriation bill.

In his message the president says that the bill contemplates the immediate expenditure of about $17,000,000, and continues:

"A more startling feature of this bill is its authorization of contracts for river and harbor work amounting to more than $62,000,000. Though the payments on these contracts are in most cases so distributed that they are to be met by future appropriations, more than $3,000,000 on their account are included in the direct appropriations. Of the remainder nearly $20,000,000 will fall due during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and amounts somewhat less in the year immediately succeeding. A few contracts of a like character, authorized under previous statutes, are still outstanding, and to meet payments on these more than $4,000,000 must be appropriated in the immediate future.

"If, therefore, this bill becomes a law, the obligations which will be imposed on the government, together with the appropriations made for immediate expenditures on account of river and harbors, will amount to about $80,000. Nor is this all; the bill directs numerous surveys and examinations which contemplate new work and further contracts, and which portend largely increased expenditures and obligations.

"In view of the obligation imposed upon me by the constitution, it seems to me quite clear that I only discharge a duty to our people when I interpose my disapproval of the legislation proposed.

"Many of the objects for which it appropriates public money are not related to the public welfare and many of them are palpably for the benefit of limited localities or in the aid of individual interests.

"I learn from official sources that there are appropriations contained in the bill to pay for work which private parties have actually agreed with this government to do, in consideration of their occupancy of public property.

"Individual economy and careful expenditure are sterling virtues which lead to thrift and comfort. Economy and the exaction of clear justification for the appropriation of public moneys by the servants of the people are not only virtues, but solemn obligations.

"I believe no greater danger confronts us as a nation than the unhappy decadence among our people of genuine and trustworthy love and affection for our government as the embodiment of the highest and best aspirations of humanity, and not as the giver of gifts, and because its mission is the enforcement of exact justice and equality and not the allowance of unfair favoritism.

"I hope I may be permitted to suggest at a time when the issue of government bonds to maintain the credit and financial standing of the country is a subject of criticism, that the contracts provided for in this bill would create obligations of the United States amounting to $2,000,000, no less binding than its bonds for that sum."

ENDED IN MURDER.

Elopement of Indiana Lovers Results in a Tragedy.

Lebanon, Ind., June 2.—Wallace Riley, for many years a prominent resident of this city, was killed instantly Monday morning by Thomas Allen, a stock buyer. Allen's son, aged 17, had been keeping company with Riley's daughter, aged 24. On account of the difference in the ages of the young people both fathers objected to their marriage, but the couple succeeded in securing a marriage license Friday evening and were married. Immediately after the marriage they left for Putnam county and remained there until Monday, when a telegram advising them of the tragedy called them home.

When Miss Riley failed to come home Friday night her father set out to learn the cause. He soon heard of the marriage. He denounced the elder Allen as helping on the marriage. The men met on the streets Saturday afternoon. Riley said:

"Defend yourself! One of us is going to die!"

Riley pulled his revolver. Allen said he was unarmed, and the two repaired to Hooton's hardware establishment in search of a weapon for Allen. They were finally separated before any blood was shed.

Monday morning Riley was on the streets early, and was loud in his claims that he was after Allen. Riley was just coming out of the post office room when Allen drove up in his carriage, alighted and passed in. After getting his mail he started to leave the post office, when Riley accosted him with drawn weapon. Like a flash Allen drew his pistol and the firing began. Riley fired two shots and Allen four. When the smoke cleared away Riley was lying in the post office door, and Allen's son, who witnessed the affray from his father's carriage, had received a severe wound in the right side. Allen was arrested and is in jail. Both men are wealthy and influential. Riley has cut a prominent figure in democratic politics for many years. Great excitement prevails here.

DEATH OF KATE FIELD.

A Lady Famed as a Journalist Passes Away in Honolulu.

Yokohama, June 1.—News is received here from Honolulu that Kate Field, the American writer, is dead there of pneumonia.

[Kate Field was a daughter of Joseph M. Field, an actor, who died in Mobile, Ala., in 1856. She was born in St. Louis about 1840. She was educated at various seminaries in Massachusetts and later devoted special attention to the study of music. She made several prolonged visits to Europe, and while there became the correspondent of the New York Tribune, Philadelphia Press and Chicago Tribune. She also furnished sketches for periodicals. In 1874 Miss Field appeared as an actress at Booth's theater, where she achieved only a moderate success. She afterward appeared as a variety performer, song and dance artist and recitationist. From 1882 until the summer of 1883 she was at the head of an extensive "Ladies' Cooperative Dressing association" in New York, which resulted in a disastrous failure. Miss Field started a piquant weekly publication in Washington several years ago under the title of Kate Field's Washington. She published it until last year, and then announced that she was compelled to suspend publication on account of ill health. Miss Field first won public attention and commendation as a lecturer and writer in her crusade against Mormonism. Miss Field had been a hard worker all her life. After the suspension of the Washington she went to Cripple Creek and wrote syndicate letters from that typical mining camp. Then she went to the Sandwich islands on a health-seeking tour.]

Took Six Lives.

San Jose, Cal., May 28.—Col. R. P. McGlincy and his family, embracing six persons, were murdered Tuesday night by his son-in-law, James Dunham. Among the victims of the fiend was Dunham's wife, a daughter of Col. McGlincy. The crime was committed at Campbell, eight miles southwest of this city. Wife, father-in-law, mother-in-law, brother-in-law and two domestics paid the bloody debt of the fiend's rage. Not a being in the path of the butcher escaped the carnage except the murderer's own child, a babe one month old. The infant was either overlooked by the inhuman monster or he became satiated and disappeared without seeking to send the infant to join its mother.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

A Peculiar Suit.

A peculiar suit was filed at Duluth in which Ilma A. Pepper, of St. Paul, seeks to annul a divorce secured in St. Louis county by her dead husband, Ashbel H. Pepper, of Minneapolis. In her complaint she says that they were married in Pottery, Vt., July 4, 1854, and they have had five children, whose ages now run from 25 to 40 years. In 1886 she claims that her husband abused her, and after that they lived separate, she in St. Paul and he in Minneapolis In 1889 Pepper went to Duluth and represented himself as a citizen of St. Louis county, and presented a petition for divorce, alleging that his wife had deserted him and had removed to Boston, when in fact he was not a resident of that county at all and he well knew that his wife was living at that time in St. Paul. Pepper died in Minneapolis, intestate, and the plaintiff did not hear of his death, or of the divorce until February, 1896. She wants the divorce overruled on the ground of fraud.

At Little Falls.

If the jams of logs at Little Falls break with such a head of water behind them, mills, bridges and every improvement above Minneapolis would be swept away and the west side would be under at least 12 feet of water. Such a disaster would be a calamity to the whole upper country. It has been arranged to sound steam whistles if the jam shows signs of weakening, so that the people can save themselves by flight to high ground. At present the water is flowing over the country around the jam, and one farm is reported as being under six feet of water. The surplus water at some of the government dams is being let off, which makes the situation worse than it otherwise would be.

Open for Entrees.

With the state fair dates only three months away Secretary Randall and his assistants are making preparations for a lively campaign. Recently they deposited in the mails a wagon load of premium lists and have many more to follow as rapidly as they can be addressed. The Secretary's books are now open and entries can be send in at any time from now to Aug. 29 when the books close. It is much petter to send in entries early as they are insured every attention. With very few exceptions entries are open to the world. A few preiums are offered only to productions of Minnesota, but such a plainly stated in the premium list.

County Displays.

W. J. Footner, chairman of the committee on county displays at the G. A. R. Encampment, has formed a committee of men who are especially well equipped for helping each county to make a creditable display. Applications for street space and other privileges are coming to Mr. Footner, and his committee will begin vigorous work at once. Every county that participates will have opportunity to display its resources to at least 300,000 visitors, day and night for a week, and the expense will be trifling.

Andrew N. Nelson, for six years treasurer of Ramsey county and one of the best known Scandinavian Americans in St. Paul, died at the St. Joseph hospital, of morphine taken with suicidal intent.

A number of Duluth people have been taken in by two swindlers, who offered bargains in clothing. They showed samples of suitings, which they claimed were on exhibition at the Atlanta exposition, and which could not be sold to jobbers, as they were of foreign manufacture.

Charles. Withey has been commissioned as postmaster at Mesaba.

VENDETTAS IN SICILY.

Still Prevalent, and the Slightest Trifle Brings Them On.

In Sicily, young men who are eligible partis have to exercise extreme care in their demeanor toward young unmarried ladies. To dance with them so often as to be remarked, to attempt to talk to them alone, is, to use the ingenious expression of an Italian friend of mine, expected to make you their future-in-law. In the lower classes, says the New York Mercury, a vendetta results if a man pays attention to an unmarried girl without marrying her. Vendettas are quite prevalent still. I heard a characteristic and rather amusing story about one the other day. A gentleman's coachman did his part in a vendetta and was sent to prison for a term—there being no capital punishment in Sicily. His master went to visit him in prison, and asked if he could do anything for him. "Yes, signor; if you will pay half a franc a day for me I can have a better room and better food, and a shave." He attached most importance to the shave. If a man sees his brother being murdered, not more than anyone else in the crowd will he do anything to bring the offender to justice. He may not even interfere. But he will take it upon himself as a sacred duty to kill the murderer whenever he has him at his mercy.

TO THE ST. LOUIS CONVENTION

With the Celebrated Republican Flambeau Club.

A special vestibuled train of sleeping cars, dining and baggage cars, will be run from Minneapolis and St. Paul to St. Louis June 14th via the CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY (the popular "Hedrick Route") to accommodate the Republican Flambeau Club and their friends throughout the Northwest.

Leave the Twin Cities afternoon of June 14th and arrive St. Louis next day.

This train will be side-tracked at a point within two blocks of Auditorium Convention Hall and six minutes' walk to the principal hotels. Passengers desiring to do so can occupy the sleepers during the convention at low rates.

The service, in every particular, will be absolutely first-class, and all may depend upon thoroughly comfortable and pleasant accommodations, both going and returning, and while occupying the cars in St. Louis.

The Republican Flambeau Club is composed of leading business and professional men in Minnesota, and their trips to former National Conventions and Inaugurations have always done great credit to the Northwest.

The railroad rate is one fare for the round trip. For exact information as to sleeping car rates and accommodations, meals, etc., address Frank P. Nantz, Secretary Republican Flambeau Club, 604 Oneida Block, Minneapolis, or J. T. Conley, Assistant General Passenger Agent C., M. & St. P. Ry., St. Paul.

THE SILVER CHAMBER.

BY ROGER POCOCK.

MINING (queried the stranger) — mining? Wall, now I claim to be posted on mining. Didn't I take hold of the Let - Her - Go-Gallagher silver mine when stock was down at nothing, and make it worth three fifty within a year? Ever hear of the Let-Her-Go-Gallagher? Oh, but you ought to, for Gallagher stock has been glammocking around on London 'change since 1880. A pretty straight silver proposition was the Let-Her-Go-Gallagher. An American miner would have stocked her at $100,000 and make dividends; but pshaw! What can you expect of a gang of Britishers? A company promoter picked her up cheap from the assigns of a busted Jew, got up a syndicate, with Lord Guineapig for president, and, times being so-so, palmed off $1,000,000 worth of stock on the mugginses. Then he invested the plunder in his wife's name, went smash and got whitewashed in bankruptcy.

So there was the Let-Her-Go-Gallagher like a white elephant on the hands of Lord Guineapig and his mugginses What was they going to do? Work the mine? Well, you see, Lord Guineapig's younger brother was a mining expert, and the mugginses—mostly preachers and widows—were proud to be humbugged by a lord, so the end of it was that the directors levied an assessment and started to work developing.

And, as I said, an American mining man with $1,000,000 would have made the mine pay, but it needs thundering big profits to distribute a dividend on $1,000,000. These tenderfeet began operations by renting a big place in the city, built a $250,000 granite building for offices in Denver, Col.; put up the wrong kind of mill, the wrong kind of smelter, and the wrong kind of works; then, to show how much they didn't know, gave the management to Hon. Augustus Guineapig. At the city offices there were clerks and flunkeys; at the Denver office, managers, clerks, typewriters and flunkeys; at the mine, assayers, experts, managers, clerks, typewriters and flunkeys. Moreover, they all had their horses, their dogs, their guns, their eyeglasses and their horsecloth overcoats.

Every time the assayer sent home a button of silver there was a champagne luncheon for the directors; every manager's report went as a puff to the newspapers, and the official photographer used to send large groups of the staff in their working clothes.

On 'change the stock wobbled up and wobbled down with every letter from Colorado; why, even the head of an elk, sent home by Hon. Augustus, sent it up three points. But at last all the capital was spent, no ore was in sight worth a cuss, and the shares were hard to sell in the city at three for a shilling.

That's when met Lord Guineapig in Denver—blue as vitrol—for he'd got to report to his shareholders that they'd been sold again, poor suckers, and must make an assignment.

"Look-a-here," says I, "have you any particular hankering after liquidation?"

"What do you mean, sir?"

"Well, sir, seems to me that now you're in a nasty hole, it'd be superfluous to wallow around in it. 'Spose I take a-hold of your mine and make it pay; what'll you do for me in the way of shares?"

"Oh, I'll leave you our assayer, Mr. Gneissmann; Mr. Smiff, our accountant; the Hon. Augus—"

"Take 'em away and bury 'em," says I. "Them, their lordships, their horses, their dawgs, their guns, their blarsted eyeglasses, and their horsecloth ulsters. I want your dead mine, but I ain't having no truck with the long procession of mourners. I want $5,000 down, absolute power and a third of the profits."

CRIED FIT TO BREAK HER HEART.

That's how I became manager of the Let-Her-Go-Gallagher Mine.

Takes a well educated liar to manage a mine. Most bosses, when they get into a paystreak, cable home: "Great Bonanza—immense returns coming." Of course, the stock goes up flying. Then when the engines bust, or a few men get smashed, they wire, "Dreadful catastrophe!" so that the shares go down, down, down, till the bottom drops out. Now, when I struck it rich, I kept my mouth shut till I'd filled up the safe against a rainy day; then I'd be able to have all sorts of smashups without their being any the wiser in the London market. Not that I did have much trouble beyond an occasional shooting scrap on a pay day. Fact is, my life was straight bliss save for one thing, and that was a Britisher.

It was Smiff, Lord Guineapig's old accountant, who knew no more of mining than a Freibourg expert, but the creature, having lots of wealth, had bought the mine next to ours, the Gallagher's Daddy. Now, I ain't prejudiced to speak of, but I never had any use for an English la-di-da son of a lord in checked pants and gaiters. It hated me, too, worse than pizen—blast its cheek! Not that I wasted my business hours hating, for I just kept my head shut unless I could give a chance mark in the eye to the Gallagher's Daddy.

Well, one night, who should come into my office but a young woman. Pretty as a picture she was, all wet and shivering, but her mouth was—gummy. Cry? Cried fit to break her little heart. Mr. Smiff, she said, was a beast—a horrid little beast; yes, that's what she said. Smiff had sent for her all the way from England, as his clerk and typewriter; then, when she showed up at the mine, coolly informed her that he had since written countermanding the order. Wouldn't take her out of the rain! Mad? I'd have killed the thing, but that, being midsummer, game was plumb out of season!

Pretty? A perfect little witch of a woman—black hair, black eyes that snapped, and a thin, oval, winsome sort of a face that bowled me right out. She had the cunningest, cutest little ways you ever seen, and a real lady, every inch. I took her right on my books as secretary, walked her over to the landlady at our boarding-shark, and had a cabin fixed up regardless! Oh, but she was a ripping clerk—smart as a stock broker, always busy, eager to learn, sharp as a steel trap with the books. She'd take down my letters in shorthand, whisk them off on the typewriter, keep the letter-book indexed up to the minute, run the postage stamps. Why, I got so used to her in a week that I barely took the trouble to sign what she wrote, much less see if it was correct. Fact is, I gave over my heart, the keys of the safe and the books. She ran me, she ran the office, and, if she liked, she was free to run the mine. How she did hate the Thing—that horrid, nasty Smiff!

Bit by bit she put me up to the scheme; little by little she led me on—I just burning to get quits with the Thing, if only for her sake. At least, she showed me how I could fairly knock the stuffing out of the Gallagher's Daddy.

You see, he'd struck it rich—lit onto a bonanza that was the talk of Colorado. The Silver Chamber, they called it—a mass of sulphurets and ruby silver, big as a church, running $2,000 a ton. It was right at my end of the ledge, within a few feet of the end of my third level drift, which had been rich to the very edge of my claim.

"Grab into it," said the sly little puss. "Trouble? Never fear. If you've got the pluck," says she, "I'll supply the brains. Now," says she, "I'll go around and begin by squaring Smiff's engineer—get around him in a jiffy—and we'll take such a rise out of old Smiff that he'll think he's sat down on dynamite."

We bribed Smiff's engineer, who disabled his hoisting gear in such a way the mine had to be closed while he sent down to Denver for skilled hands.

While Smiff's men were lying around, we bought them up, till there weren't six left in his pay roll, while I was working double nights on the third last drift. Now, both mines were worked with shafts, because there was no slope around worth tunneling from; moreover, they were both wet as Niagara, so you see the pumps were about the heaviest part of the machinery.

At that little cat's instigation, I took some carpenters by night to the Daddy's shaft. Lowering men with ropes, we got three solid brackets fixed to the timbering—say 40 feet down. Then we lowered down a tank of well-tarred lumber, which fitted nearly in the brackets, and filled up the shaft. Finally, we put in three feet of water, and stole away. Next morning the Thing came sauntering down to the works and when he looked down the shaft, there was the blackest water within a few feet of the top.

"Bai Joave! what a beastly shame!" It wailed. "Me mine's all full of water! Come, you men—you beastly engineer fellah—wig up the pumps!"

But the "beastly engineer fellah" couldn't "wig up the pump," because the said pump was busted.

Work? How we worked! Double shifts, double time, Sundays, holidays, hoisting out the bonanza sulphurets of the Gallagher's Daddy. The silver chamber—why, the name's pigwash to the reality. I never, in all my mining experience, saw such a haul. Think that Sniff petted? Think he found out, and had deputy sheriffs around my ears? Not a bit of it. The critter went off fishing; yes, fishing, and was the laughing stock of Colorado, while I hustled.

Ye gods! I was the blindest ass ever born! Never found it out till I'd worked the silver chamber down to the last ton; never till the last ounce was consigned to the smelting company down at Denver. I was down there for my holiday, when I met the manager of the Great Dinde smelting syndicate, and he greeted me with a regular horse laugh.

"Well, Mr. Philanthropist," says he, "how goes it?"

"'Philanthropists!' What do you mean?"

"Why, ain't you been working double shifts for the last three months and consigning every blessed dollar of your bullion to the credit of the Gallagher's Daddy?"

"You're mad!" says I.

"Well, I've been thinking it was you who'd gone locoed—unless you've mortgaged body and soul to Mr. Smiff."

A light broke in on me. "Let's see the books," I howled, "and my letters."

Yes, it was the cold, paralyzed truth, I'd been victimized — horribly victimized, by that little she-cat. While I signed letters without glancing at them, she'd written strict orders, from me, that all bullion was to be credited to Smiff of the Gallagher's Daddy.

While he was away fishing, with scarcely six men to go on his pay roll, I'd been working his mine at the expense of my company, and handing over the whole proceeds to his bankers. It was a horrible put-up job. That she-fiend of a secretary had been sent down by the critter in revenge. She was his wife, newly out from England—Mrs. Smiff, of the Gallagher's Daddy mine.

Can you ask? Can you torture the heartstrings of a ruined man? I skipped the country that night, and the Let-Her-Go-Gallagher Silver Mining syndicate, limited, is a busted community.—N. Y. Herald.

CYCLONE'S AWFUL WORK.

Details of the Havoc at St. Louis and East St. Louis.

The List of Death Numbers Over 400—The Damage to Property Will Cause a Loss of Between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

Chicago, May 28.—A cyclone struck St. Louis about five o'clock Wednesday afternoon, causing death and ruin on both sides of the river. The grand stand at the race track was blown down, killing 150. The east end of the great Eads bridge was destroyed, and it is reported that an Alton train went into the river. Steamers on the river were sunk with all on board. A station of the Vandalia in East St Louis was destroyed, and it is reported 35 lives were lost. The roof of the republican convention hall was taken off. The two top stories of the Planters' hotel are gone. The Western Union and many other buildings are wrecked. Everywhere is desolation and debris. The city Wednesday night was in darkness. Fires broke out and threatened to destroy what the wind spared. The wreckage hindered the fire department in its work and made it difficult to check the flames. At Drake, Ill., a schoolhouse is said to have been demolished and 80 pupils killed. Telegraph wires are down and it is difficult to secure information. Heavy damage to life and property is reported from other localities.

Woe in St. Louis.

St. Louis, May 29.—A pall of gloom and death hangs over the Mound City. Thirty-six hours have scarce been sufficient to bring the people to a realization of the horror with which it has been visited, and they are yet dazed and stupefied. Save for the fitful glare of the gas jets in the windows of the saloons and resturants, and the electric lights of the few hotels and other concerns that operate their own plants, the entire city is still in darkness. In the devastated district the search for the dead buried in the ruins is being carried on with the aid of torches and locomotive headlights. Details of police keep the crowds at a distance, while the air is filled with the shrieks and sobs and hysterical lamentations of the bereaved Ever and anon the clanging of a gong is heard in the distance, and vehicles and street cars come to a stop while an ambulance dashes by to add one more victim to the record of the dead at one or another of the extemporized morgues. The streets in the center of the city, usually active with pedestrians until midnight, are deserted, save for those whose avocations keep them from their families or friends, while the summer gardens and other points of entertainment are bare of patrons. Grief, mourning and stupefaction have taken possession of the city.

COURSE OF TORNADO ACROSS ST. LOUIS, THE RIVER AND EAST ST. LOUIS.

Have Lost All.

The total number of families who are without homes and whose every article of household effects was swept away by the storm is variously estimated at from 500 to 800. It will be several days before a complete and reliable roster can be made.

Almost a reign of terror prevails in East St. Louis. Save for a tug and a few rowboats, placed at the service of officials, physicians, newspaper men and others whose duties called them to the scene, the place has been cut off from communication with this city since Wednesday night, a section of the upper or railroad portion of the Eads bridge having been carried away, while guards were stationed at either end to prevent pedestrians using the foot bridge.

Eads Bridge Opened.

The roadway of the Eads bridge was cleaned of wreckage at 11 p. m. Thursday, and a test engine and car passed over in safety.

In addition to the injured in the two schoolhouses, there are 94 maimed women, children and men in St. Mary's hospital. Women and girls from the farms of the surrounding country poured into the city in droves Thursday afternoon and evening, with bundles of old linen, clothing and other necessaries and proffered their services as nurses. The good samaritans were badly needed by the hospital people and city authorities, and nearly every victim in the public or extemporized hospitals has an individual attendant.

REMAINS OF A BUSINESS HOUSE IN HICKORY STREET.

The Ruined District.

A district in this city bounded north by Chouteau avenue, west by Grand avenue, south to the city limits and east to the river, is virtually a mass of ruins. Not an electric light has burned nor a car run in that section, comprising 720 city blocks, since 5:20 p. m. Wednesday. Within this territory scarcely a building has escaped injury and thousands of them are in ruins. On surveying the desolate scene one marvels that the deaths are not treble greater. Beginning at the western boundary of the scene is the handsome and exclusive residence section known as Compton Hill, the home of the fourth generation of the early French settlers of St. Louis. This aristocratic home place is strewn with debris. Just east lies Lafayette park. There the trees, shrubbery, fountains and statuary that have been the pride of the city were caught by the wind and the place is shaven bare as with a giant scythe. Farther east and south to the city limits were the homes of the thrifty German-Americans who have given a distinct character to the district. To-day thousands of them are sharing the roofs of their hospitable and more fortunate neighbors.

Interspersed in this latter section and on the east to the river are mills, breweries and numberless manufacturing concerns. These were fair targets for the storm and they suffered. It was this class of losses that added most to the wiping out of what is conservatively stated to be $4,000,000 invested capital. There are 16 breweries within these bounds worth $4,000,000, and, while none are destroyed, all are damaged. The losses fall heaviest on those least able to bear them—business men of small capital and owners of humble homes.

After the storm had laid its heavy hand upon the southern half of the city fire came to complete the work of destruction. Five columns of flame shot up, but, thanks to the deluge of rain, they were mainly confined to their starting points. In three instances the engines were unable to get nearer than a block of the fires.

Its Track in East St. Louis.

In East St. Louis the track of the storm is as clearly defined after touching the Illinois shore as if platted by a surveyor. Tearing diagonally through the city from southwest to northeast, it cut a clean swath of destruction. Bloody island, the river front of the city, is a low, narrow strip of land, now joined to the mainland, that was the termini of all the railroads centering there. Large freight sheds were strung along the river front. Nine of the largest of these are in ruins. The greatest damage was done to the Vandalia, the Mobile & Ohio, the Big Four, the Chicago & Aiton, the Wabash and the Louisville & Nashville sheds. At the Vandalia the loss of life was greatest. There the structure seemed lifted up and dropped again over the foundations. Fourteen of the dead enumerated were taken from these sheds. Across Cahokia creek, in the city proper, the destruction was complete. The relay depot, an abomination which even the corroding hand of time could not destroy, went to pieces before the storm. The switch tower, upon the perfect working of which depends the movement of hundreds of trains, was made useless. Three small hotels in the vicinity were destroyed. North and east of the relay depot a wide residence section, mostly small houses occupied by mechanics, was cleaned up. It is through this part that the majority of the fatalities occurred. The high dykes to the west that shut off the waters of the Mississippi were no protection and the frail houses went down like houses of cards. The viaduct across the mass of tracks east of Cahokia creek was made useless. The new Martell house, the McCauseland opera house, the city hall, Flannigan's hall, three churches, the high school and residences that covered 14 blocks of ground east of the viaduct, were demolished. Farther on to the north and east, in the stock yards vicinity, everything was swept away. The definite limits of the storm, indicated above, may be clearly noted here. The National hotel was uninjured, while two blocks southeast a house owned by H. D. Sexton was torn to kindling wood. Passing on outside the city every suburban garden, orchard and field is razed of its growth. In all this desolation death ran riot. High above the storm were heard the cries of suffering and the shrieks of people struggling helplessly against the storm's fury. The points of greatest disaster, the water front and the vicinity of the relay depot, have not yet given up all their dead. Scarcely a single person in the storm's highway escaped some injury.

WRECKAGE IN THE COURT OF THE CITY HOSPITAL, ST. LOUIS.

Disasters on the River.

The track of the storm across the river was practically the same as that of the great storm of August 4, 1878. The trend of the main volume of wind was from southwest to northeast, leaving the Missouri shore at the center of the southern half of this city and striking the Illinois shore in a path whose northern edge was the Eads bridge and extending south three-fourths of a mile. Within this path were moored 25 steamers large and small. The storm fell so suddenly that none of the vessels were prepared. In all ten large passenger steamers, five ferryboats, two transfer boats, two tugboats and half a dozen small pleasure barges were driven to the opposite shore or sunk outright.

The steamer J. J. Odil was loosened from its moorings and blown against the second pier of the Eads bridge, where it sank. Just before the boat struck her boilers blew up. Nine of her crew of twelve are reported as missing. Those of the crew who reached land in safety are Jack Morrissey, Pat Milan and a man named Moore.

About the same time the Odil struck the pier the towboat Dolphin No. 2 was blown from her wharfboat at the foot of Morgan street, dashing her up against the first pier. She struck the pier with a force that crushed in her starboard side. She drifted down the river for about three blocks and then sank, only leaving her prow above the water.

There were 11 persons, three of them women, all of whom had jumped from either the steamer Pittsburg or the Libbie Conger, who managed to catch driftwood, which carried them down the river to the Pittsburg dyke, where they were caught in an eddy and sunk to the bottom.

The Bald Eagle was blown down the river for a considerable distance, when the boat was capsized and went to the bottom. About 20 persons were on board, but nothing has been seen or heard of them.

A great many lives were lost by the sinking of barges and smaller crafts. In most every case there was at least ten men on board each of them, and in many cases several of them are still missing.

The Baton Rouge Belle, a tugboat, was forced from its hawser out into the middle of the river. When it reached there it began to roll over and over down the river till it reached the foot of Chouteau avenue, where it was forced against the wharf of the Wiggins Ferry company by the wind, and sunk in ten feet of water.

The City of Monroe was dashed against the shore, but did not go down. Capt. Ziegler exhorted his passengers and crew to not jump overboard. His last words were: "There is no danger." He was blown into the river and drowned.

The following boats are reported as damaged or missing: Pittsburg, City of Vicksburg, City of Providence, Belle of Calhoun, the Madill, the Elm G. Smith, the Louis Houck, Dolphin No. 2, Bald Eagle and the J. J. Odil.

The Losses.

Three of the principal real estate dealers in this city state that they have figured that the actual real estate loss in St. Louis will not exceed $10,000,000. The damage to household property, bric-a-brac, paintings, statuary, etc., will however swell this amount nearly $2,000,000 more. The loss in shade trees and ornamental shrubbery is beyond computation. Lafayette park, for two decades past the pride of the aristocratic "French residents," is but a memory. Not a tree is left standing in all its broad domain and it is surrounded by a quadrangle of demolished houses—many of which can only be located by the numbers on the adjoining ones that escaped. The following figures, showing losses, have been obtained from persons in possession, in almost every place, of personal knowledge:

St. Louis United Elevator company	$ 100,000
St. Louis Refrigerator and Wooden Gutter company	125,000
Eads bridge	50,000

B. F. Seidel	20,000
Cox & Gordon	8,000
Belcher sugar refinery	6,000
Hydraulic Press Brick company	10,000
W J. Lemp brewery	60,000
Total	$3,700,000

This table aggregates less than $4,000,000, a total quite large enough, but almost insignificant when compared with the fabulous estimates. To this, however, must be added the damage done to residence property throughout the city, which, while it will be very large, cannot in the nature of the case amount to as much as that done to business property as shown above. Viewing the situation in this light, it will be seen that $10,000,000 should be ample to cover the actual property damage. This estimate has not included the loss and damage of furniture. This will never be known.

Extent of Tornado's Work.

St. Louis, June 2.—The extent of the tornado's disastrous work here and in East St. Louis has overshadowed the losses sustained in adjacent towns in Missouri and Illinois, and no accurate list of killed has been made. A careful compilation from all sources gives the following losses in outlying towns by the tornado:

Missouri, Outside of St. Louis.

	Killed.	Injured.	Property Loss.
Renyeck	16	19	$50,000
Clark	19	19	35,000
Laddonia	2	18	15,000
Farber	1	15	15,000
Dye school house	5	20	5,000
Curryville	1	5	8,000
Vandalia		10	30,000
Bear Creek	7	35	5,000
Total	16	133	163,000

Illinois, Outside of East St. Louis.

The total loss in Randolph and Audrain counties will amount to $300,000 additional. Loss on crops and farm property in entire state will swell total beyond $2,000,000.

	Killed.	Injured.	Property Loss.
Breckinridge	2	2	$18,000
Birkner	6	20	20,000
Mascoutah	1	5	25,000
New Minden	5	30	75,000
New Baden	15	30	50,000
Mount Vernon	5	20	50,000
Fairfield	2	10	15,000
Richview	3	25	75,000
Irvington	5	20	20,000
High Hill	1	7	7,000
Total	46	179	$355,000

Losses at scores of other points, including farm property and crops, may raise the total to over $1,000,000.

In the Two Stricken Cities.

At two o'clock Monday afternoon the Chronicle compiled the following table as the latest list of fatalities in St. Louis and East St. Louis:

Known dead	341
Unknown dead	11
Fatally injured	20
Missing	118
Total	490

Work of Relief.

The actual work of relieving the distress caused by Wednesday night's tornado has been begun. Canvassers representing the relief committee were busy all day Sunday investigating the condition of applicants for aid. Staid business men joined with representatives of St. Vincent de Paul's society and the Provident association, and block after block in the stricken district was carefully gone over in the search for the needy. As rapidly as it could be ascertained what was needed by persons who had suffered from the storm, steps were taken to relieve them. In some instances food and shelter were provided, while in others clothing was given out.

AT TENTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS, ST. LOUIS.

What is needed most is shoes, bandage cloth, children's clothing and ladies' underwear. Necessary furniture and cots, together with dry bedding, are also much called for.

In the meantime the work of soliciting subscriptions was not neglected, and the sub-committee appointed for that purpose continued their task. A number of voluntary subscriptions were received, and the responses to the appeal were so numerous that the belief is expressed that the amounts given by corporations and individuals will pass the $100,000 mark before noon today. Helen M. Gould has sent $1,000 to be credited to the relief fund.

In East St. Louis.

Pity aroused by the suffering in St. Louis is deepened to despair when the woes of East St. Louis are contemplated. The biting chill of the rain-laden air was a poor comfort Monday to the thousands of homeless ones there who made shift to shelter themselves amid the ruins of their homes or bivouacked in empty freight cars. But all are struggling hopefully to better their sad condition.

It is still too soon for any thought of rebuilding the homes of the island poor. The devastation was so terrible and complete that this cannot come for some time, but the business interests which have capital behind them are on their feet and working with all their might. This is manifest, and somewhat relieves the otherwise forlorn aspect of the situation.

Killed Himself.

St. Paul, Minn., June 1.—Otto C. Macklett, one of St. Paul's oldest residents, took his own life at two o'clock Sunday afternoon by shooting the top of his head off with a shotgun. Worry over his affairs was the cause. He was 57 years of age.

Yellowstone Park

Is more and more impressing itself upon the public, as the years go by, as being the great park of the land. The strong feature of it is the fact that it is not a man made park. True enough man has built roads and bridges and hotels in order that he may see the park, but he has not yet tried his hand at constructing new fangled geysers, or re-adorning or re-sculpturing the Grand canyon of the Yellowstone. These are as God left them. There, too, the elk, bear, deer and other animals are not enclosed in wire fences. They wander free and unfretted whithersoever they will. Man's handiwork is but little seen and the park is the grander for it. Send Chas. S. Fee, General Passenger Agent, Northern Pacific Railroad, six cents for Wonderland '96, and read about the park.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, of ROXBURY, MASS., Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor.) He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

The Blue and the Gray.

Both men and women are apt to feel a little blue, when the gray hairs begin to show. It's a very natural feeling. In the normal condition of things gray hairs belong to advanced age. They have no business whitening the head of man or woman, who has not begun to go down the slope of life. As a matter of fact, the hair turns gray regardless of age, or of life's seasons; sometimes it is whitened by sickness, but more often from lack of care. When the hair fades or turns gray there's no need to resort to hair dyes. The normal color of the hair is restored and retained by the use of

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, JUNE 5, 1896.

DELANO DIARY

Job printing at the GAZETTE office.

—The hay crop, at present, gives promise of being exceptionally fine.

—Wheat reached 47 cts per bushel this week, the lowest since last fall.

—A meeting is to be held at the City Hall, on Monday evening, to organize a gold and silver club.

—Prof. C. S. Hawker and the graduating class had an excursion and picnic on Tuesday, visiting Lake Sarah.

—The Junior class of the Delano High School tendered a reception to the graduating class on Wednesday evening.

—The St. Paul Dispatch will be delivered to any part of the city every evening, same day it is printed, by Oscar Ball.

—We warn brother Dare to look out when that new primary teacher "Miss Schley, of Delano," arrives in his town. He may get "Schleyed."

—Farmers report potato bugs much more numerous now than at any time last year. The probabilities are that potatoes will pay better this year, as there is a much smaller acerage planted.

—Schaffer's new carriage met with a severe shaking up Sunday by colliding with a cow, near Mrs. Cramer's residence. The tongue and a wheel were broken; the driver, not a Schaffer, went out over the dashboard, but was not seriously injured.

—The committee on speakers for the 4th of July has secured Prof. Charles S. Hawker for the oration, and John Steffes, of the graduating class of the Delano High School to read the Declaration of Independence. The committee evidently believes in patronizing home talent, a commendable thing to do occasionally.

—The new election law is not being carried out to the letter in some precincts; perhaps the convention will have power to rectify some discrepencies. It is best under the circumstances for a full delegation to be elected and sent to Buffalo to represent each town. Do your duty as far as possible.

—A splendid party was given on Monday evening, by Mrs. G. W. Bolton, in honor of Miss Irene Cheeley, who is about moving to Elk River to teach. About fifty guests were present. Vocal and instrumental music of high order added enjoyment to the occasion; likewise ice cream and cake.

—The M. E. church has been papered and had electric lights put in and now presents the finest appearance inside that it ever has. Everybody is welcome to attend. Sabbath School every Sunday at 12 M. Epworth League at 7:15 P. M.; Church services at 8: P. M. Prayer meeting on Thursday evening.

—Nearly all the little villages and towns about us have passed ordinances preventing the use of sidewalks for bicycle riding. When Delanoites are away from home they, who are accustomed to go rushing along expecting a clear sidewalk, would do well to bear in mind that fact, or they may get to help fill the treasury of some of our neighbors.

—The Elk River Star News seems to have taken the liberty of changing the name of the new Prrmary Teacher for their school, even before she has taken up her abode at her new habitation. Of course Mr. Dare is a legislator, and has a right to do things that other people have not; but even if he is, he had no right to change Miss Cheeley to Miss Schley. Being an old bach he might Dared to have made it Dare.

—The Catholic church in the cemetery west of town still contains the altar, and has pictures on the wall, as when deserted by the congregation. This is one of the oldest churches in this section of country, and deserves to be repaired by being straightened up and reshingled and put in a state of preservation as a relic of pioneer days. It could also be made useful as a place of worship for visitors to the cemetery, many time.

—The Baccalaureate Sermon, by Prof. George Innis, at the City Hall, on Sunday evening was listened to by one of the finest audiences ever assembled in Delano. The Professor out did himself in the effort, which was a splendid one. To say that all were pleased is putting it mild. Should the Professor came to Delano again we think he would find a good audience almost any time. He has traveled consiberable and being a man of observation, and having a happy way of narrating what he has seen, a lecture from him on his traveles would no doubt be interesting and instructive to our citizens. Perhaps he could be prevailed upon to come in the near future and tell us of his travels.

—The entertainment given by the Public School on Friday evening was an enjovable one, and the audence was large; standing room was at a premium. The little ones acquitted themselves finley, showing the tender care and training of loving teachers. The Hall was nicely arranged and decorated for the occasion; being hung with flags and bunting, potted flowers were arranged about the stage, pictures of George and Martha Washington were on either hand. The mumbers given were, many of them, relating to Memoral Day, which would occur on the following morning, and taught lessons of patriotism. Such entertainments, if more frequently given, would do much toward elevating the moral atmosphere of the rising generation of our village.

—A number of Delanoites enjoyed a fine ride on Captain Cheeley's boat, the Acta, on Lake Minnetonka, Thursday, on the invitation of Miss Irene Cheeley.

—Druggist Wittman has procured a new and handsome camera and now takes instantaneous shots at passers by. He is accumulating quite a collection of pictures of familiar faces and other objects.

—Several of our citizens have been heard to remark that if the street crossings on R. R. Avenue, on 2nd and 3rd streets were cut down where they should be the balance of the grade wouldn't be so bad.

—Delano is arranging for an old time celebration of the 4th of July. Committees have been appointed and arrangements are being made to have as good a celebration as the town has ever seen. If you want to enjoy yourself come to Delano.

Memorial Day.

Memorial Day was a fine one, and was duly observed in Delano. The bank, post office, and other places of business were closed a part or whole of the day. Quite a number gathered at the Hall soon after ten o'clock and marcked to the Delano cemetery under the guidance of Marshal John Cunningham. Rev. Tabor Davies offered up a fervent prayer. The graves of the 15 old soldiers were decorated with flowers by the dozen boys and girls under charge of Sargent Wash Rader.

Afternoon the audience assembled in the City Hall. America was sung. Prayer by Rev. Tabor Davies, and the decorating of the monument to the unknown dead, were followed by an eloquent speech by F. H. Lindsley. Dr. Catlin then read the report of the committee appointed at a previous meeting to prepare a constitution for the organization of the Memorial Day Association of Delano. On motion, the report was accepted, and officers were tnen elected to serve one year, as follows: President, F. H. Lindsley; Vice President, Tiff Hittsman; Secretary, T. J. Catlin; Treasurer, William C Lewis.

The audience then visited the Catholic cemetery where Rev. Father Schaus made a brief but patriotic speech and conducted religious services, the young ladies furnished a song, the old soldiers graves, 8 in uumber, were decorated, and the audience dispersed for home.

County Cullings.

North Rockford is working up a Fourth of July celebration which is laid out to be a grand affair. The ordinary oration, and four 15 minute speeches from persons representing the four political parties, will furnish abundant food for thought for the hungering multitude that assembles there, doubtles.

Remember the primary elections on Saturday, June 6, from 3 to 5 o'clock P. M. They are to be held in every precinct in the county, at the same time. Don't stay away and let the gold party capture our convention, and then bolt the ticket, but vote your sentiments at the primary, by electing to the county convention delegates in accord with your views on the money question. The Franklin primary is called for Swedeback & Ericksons Hall: the Village of Delano, at the City Hall.

Some of Wright County's citizens may be led to think more favorably of a jail at the county seat after reading the Commissioners proceedings at the last meeting when they allowed: For a surgical operation, to a Minneapolis doctor $15; for hospital treatment of a prisoner, to a Minneapolis Hospital, $30; to J. E. Holmberg, boarding county prisoners $281.96. If we had a county jail we could attend to our own prisoners a great deal more satisfactorily, and it would not be necessary to turn them loose in the woods about Buffalo when it was meal time either.

A bad runaway occured at Waverly, on Wednesday eyening. As Martin Sherman's team with several occupants was leaving town at the R. R. crossing, near the creamery, the horses became frightened and threw Sherman and Peter Ketler out of the wagon leaving them unconcious on the ground. Mr. Walter, the creamery man, was on his way to the creamery and the team struck him breaking his leg below the knee. Ketler had his lower jaw broken and received several ugly cuts on the head and face. Dr. O'Hair had more than he could look after so surgical assistance from Delano was summoned, and the sufferers were made as comfortable as possible. Sherman went home, and the others stayed in Waverly.

LATER.—Mr. Ketler was sufficiently recovered to permit his removal home, near Winsted, Thursday morning.

J. R. Howard was indicted by the Grand Jury Wednesday. His attorneys, Tim Byrns, W. E. Culkin, and M. A. O'Hair, are hard at work in his defense. County Attorney Alley, we believe, will honestly an conscienciously prosecute the case for all there is in it. If there has been bribery of Jurymen and other corrupting influences at work in our district courts it should come abruptly to an end. No wonder people loose confidence in the Jury system while they have suspicions even, that such things are going on. A full and free investigation is what every honest man wants. Our county's honor, our courts purity, and our citizens honesty are at stake, and demand vindication. And if false acquisations have been made against innocent people, it is due them, that in so far as possible, the truth be known. Let the truth prevail. The money consideration is as nothing compared with unsullied integrity.

No Use For Alcohol.

Perhaps there is nowhere so great need of investigation as in the line of scientific temperance. Certainly if a person will not be influenced to discard alcoholic drinks by the knowledge that they undermine health, the most precious of our earthly possessions, then nothing will prevail to save him from the habit.

The following from the Voice is a well expressed statement of facts that should be carefully considered.

Following on the heels of Nassen's and Peary's emphatic declarations against the use of liquor in Artic exploration, and that of Stanley's against its use in African exploration, and the almost unanimous opinion against it expressed by the trainers of athletic clubs in New York city, comes another testimony from one who has learned in the school of experience.

In the New York Medical Record, for March 21, Major Altred F. Sears, civil sanitary engineer, has an article on the "Sanitary Care of Men in Masses." The paper is an interesting review of over 40 years' experience in army and engineering corps and railroad-construction camps. It contains many practical suggestions in regard to hygiene and some good-natured slaps at army doctors. The author says that there are two kinds of physicians, "the doctor of hygine and the doctor of medicine: one cares for health and the other for disease, and the thing cared for always comes out ahead."

It is, however, the major's opinion in regard to the use of whisky that is of especial interest to readers of THE VOICE. After describing the work of his company, kneedeep in the mud of a Southern swamp, he goes on to say:

"Each forenoon at 11 and in the afternoon at four o'clock, the men of the fatigue parties were entitled to a ration of whisky. The men of Company E. did not get it. In lieu thereof, by the cordial permission of General Viele, they received extra rationsof tea, coffee, bread and meat. * * * * * * *

And here it seems proper to declare my uncompromising opinion, as the result of a long experience in dealing with men, that time has never occurred when the regular ration of whisky is other then a danger to the health of those who receive it, and a menace to the good order and dicipline of the camp. Thirty odd years ago I was not so sure of the fact, and there were times when I surrendered to the orders of the surgeons and gave whisky and quinin to the men. When some old hulk had been kept aflot on whisky for years, it would have been cruel to cut off his dram, but in the case of young men coming under my charge from the tender care of home, I felt then, as I do now, that to have taught them the use of alcoholic stimulants by administering this stupid prescription of incompetent medicos, would be a responsibility no rational (not to say benevolent) man should dare assume."

Still the testimony accumulates. Prohibitionists still stand with one foot on the law of God as revealed by science and with the other on the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court. The basis is a solid one.

THE OLD CLOCK ON THE STAIRS.

Somewhat back from the village street
Stands the old fashioned country-seat.
Across its antique portico
Tall poplar-trees their shadows throw;
And from its station in the hall
An ancient time-piece says for all,—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

Half way up the stairs it stands,
And points and beckons with its hands
From its case of massive oak,
Like a monk, who, under his cloak,
Crosses himself and sighs, alas!
With sorrowful voice to all who pass—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

By day its voice is low and light;
But in the silent dead of night,
Distinct as a passing foot-step's fall,
It echoes along the vacant hall,
Along the ceiling—along the floor,
And seems to say at each chamber door—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

Through days of sorrow and of mirth,
Through days of death and days of birth,
Through every swift vicissitude
Of changeful time, unchanged it has stood,
And as if, like God, it all things saw,
It calmly repeats those words of awe.—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

In that mansion used to be
Free-hearted Hospitality:
His great fires up the chimey roared;
The stranger feasted at his bord;
But, like the skeleton at the feast,
That warning timepiece never ceased,—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

There groups of merry children played,
There youths and maidens dreaming stayed;
O precious hours! O golden prime,
And affluence of love and time!
Even as a miser counts his gold,
Those hours the ancient timepiece told,—
"Forever—never!
Never—Forever!"

From that chamber, clothed in white,
The bride came forth on her wedding night;
There, in that silent room below,
The dead lay in his shroud of snow;
And in the hush that followed the prayer,
Was heard the old clock on the stair,—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

All are scattered now and fled,
Some are married, some are dead;
And when I ask, with throbs of pain,
"Ah! when shall they all meet again?"
As in the days long since gone by,
The ancient timepiece makes reply,—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

Never here, forever there,
Where all parting, pain, and care,
And death, and time shall disappear,—
Forever there, but never here!
The horologe of Eternity
Sayeth this incessantly,—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

Republican County Convention and Primary Election.

A republican County Convention for the County of Wright will be held in Dudley's Opera House in the village of Buffalo, in said County, on Saturday the 27th day of June 1896 at 12 o'clock m. for the purpose of electing nineteen delegates to the Republican State Convention to be held at the city of St. Paul on the first day of July, 1896, to nominate a Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Treasurer and Attorney General. Also to elect twenty delegates to Republican Congressional Convention for the sixth Congressional District of Minnesota to be held at the city of St. Cloud on the 19th day of July, 1896, to nominate a candidate for Congress in said District.

The several election districts in said Wright County are entitled to representation in said county convention as follows: One delegate at large from each election district and one delegate additional for each forty votes or major fraction thereof, cast for Knute Nelson for Governor in 1894, to wit:

Albion	4	Rockford	5
Buffalo	4	Silver Creek	3
Chatham	2	Southside	3
Clearwater	4	Stockholm	6
Cokato	6	Victor	4
Corinna	2	Woodland	3
Frankfort	2	Annandale V	3

Maple Lake	2	Delano V	3
Marysville	4	Howard Lake	3
Middleville	4	Montrose	2
Monticello	4	Waverly	1
Otsego	3	Monticello V	4
		Maple Lake V	1

The primary elections for the election of said delegates will be held in all the election districts in said Wright county on Thursday, June 25th, 1896, the polls to be opened at 3 o'clock p. m. and remain open until 5 p. m., said primaries to be conducted under the primary election law; the town and village committees to fix the place for holding the said primary elections, and give at least six days notice thereof as the law requires.

Dated June 1st 1896.

By order of County Committee,
J. T. ALLEY, Chairman.

EX-MAYOR DE AUTREMAT, of Duluth, is apparently gaining ground as a candidate for Congress on the Democratic ticket in the Sixth district.

THE St. Paul Republican daily papers are using up a good deal of space now a days trying to make people believe that Moses Clapp is a free silver man and ought not to be elected Governor on that account. That ought not to hurt him for that office.

KENTUCKY has a favorite son as a candidate for the Presidency, and its neither Hon. John C. Carlisle, nor Henry Watterson, but Joseph Blackburn, the man that the whole power of the gold bugs of the country tried so hard to supercede in the U. S. Senate and failed.

THE New York World published recently a letter of William McKinley's, written to a Farmers Alliance in 1890 in which he is reported to have said; "I am in favor of the use of all the silver product of the United States for money as circulating medium." No wonder the Wall Streee people are so shy of his nomination for President.

BUTLER'S bill making it necessary for the President to consult Congress before issuing more bonds passed the Senate, both Minnesota Senators, Davis and Nelson voting against it; but the House refused to pass it. So we may look out for some more bonds soon. The House is republican, and the law under which bonds are issued ditto, we believe.

THE Star News, of Elk River, says: "But we Sixth district fellows have a foolish notion that we know what we want and how to get it, but we don't cross any byridges until we come to them." Wonder if brother Dare intends people should, by this, understand that he has fallen into line behind Congressman Towne? That's the way the Hon. Charles A. talks, barring the "foolish notion."

IN an article on Sixth district politics, Hon. Mr. Dare, of Elk River, gives us to understand that he is a friend to silver, but not "in favor of free coinage by this country alone at a ratio that could not by any possibility be anything but disastrous to the business interests of the country." What ratio is that? It surely can,t be the one we have had for so many years. 16 to 1, for so long as that ratio was unmolests, we heard very little about our base money." Mr. Dare is a great deal more afraid of the ability of this country to take care of itself than we supposed he was. Being a republican, favoring high protective tariff to keep our people to home, to make them buy what they need from the ingenious Yankee at what ever price he may ask for it, while better goods are left without purchasers. Being so brave as to Dare to do this, we say; he Dare not advocate the free coinage of silver at the same ratio that stood the test of years, in this country alone, but must have all the foreign powers to acquiesce in his movement.

BOISE, Bryan, Bland, Blackburn, for President. It seems as if the Democrats are bound to "B" in the race at all events.

Golden Arguments.

The strongest point the advocates of a gold standard for our money system seem to think they have is, that in case a free coinage of silver law is passed, the gold will be driven out of circulation; that about 600,000,000 of dollars will be totally wiped out of existence, and business will have to be done on a silver standard dollar basis. Now this is quite a plausible theory to some; but where are the premises to be found? What are the facts in the matter? Has not the United States done business on a gold and silver basis all its life? Has it not flourished and grown in wealth? Why should it not continue to do so? How do the gold advocates know that gold will go out of circulation if silver is restored to its old place in our money system? And where would it go to if it did go out of circulation? Would a larger amount than the present $160,000,000 be hoarded in the United States Treasury?

Another stock argument is that the amount of gold being mined, yearly, exceeds what a few years ago was mined of both gold and silver, and that we will have enough gold on which to do the business of the country. It is claimed that in South Africa, in Alaska and other far away corners of the earth gold exists in paying quantities, and that there is no further use for silver. These arguments seem, to us, lame, very lame. It would take a good while for those foreign countries to supply the world with gold enough to make a very perceptible increase in the per capita wealth of the country. Admitting their argument that the worlds gold is increasing to be true, would it not soon flood the country with gold, necessitating another change in standard. If these new gold fields are supplying us with such unlimited quantities of the yellow metal and we have already enough on which to do business would it not be a wise thing to do to demonetize gold? How foolish to make a single standard of that which is so very rapidly increasing, from the gold argument standpoint. Again it is argued that we have enough standard money with the present stock of gold. Why then do we want paper? Because, they say, 92 per cent of the business of the country is done on credit. We must have paper to represent the credit.

As a matter of fact would it not be much better for the small business transactions of the country, big ones too for that matter, to be done for cash, than to be done on credit? Would it not be better for those who buy to pay in coin, gold or silver as far as possible? Would not business transactions be far more satisfactory then than under the credit system? And, under that system, would not all the gold and silver in the country be needed? Coin of the constitution is what our country wants.

The "Press Combine."

The six corporate gold organs of the Twin Cities are organized in what is called the Dual City Publishers' Association. The six papers are governed in their internal affairs on the usual trust or pool basis by a central board-just as the 24 roads of the Chicago "general managers' association," the 31 mills in the steel pool, or, the 40 or 50 factories in the whisky trust, are governed. Each publisher of these six dailies puts up a forfet of $1,000 as the penalty of going against the fiat of the central board. The president of the Twin City "press combine" is Frederick Driscoll, of the St. Paul Pioneer Press, and the secretary is George Thomson, of the St. Paul Dispatch.

It thus appears that the Minneapolis daily gold-bug press whose stock and bonds are largely controlled in Boston and New York-are controlled in their internal affairs by St. Paul publishers. Driscoll, of the Pioneer Press, has more say in the control of the Journal printing-office, for instance, than Mr. Swift who essays to be manager, or than Manager Murphy in the Tribune.

What the purposes of this "press combine" are, let their acts disclose. Minneapolis tax payers have recently seen how this "combine" attempted to get the city printing at 50 cents an inch, when the Penny Press bid 23½ cents. For six months past the "combine" has been quietly plotting against the typographical union. On the currancy issue, the "combine" is a Wall street gold machine. On all questions where there is a conflict between the interest of the public and the interests of corporations, the "combine" may be depended upon to stand for the corporations. In short, the "combine" has adopted the motto of Talleyrand: "Society is divided into two classes, the shearers and the shorn. You should always take the side of the former against the latter."—Penny Press.

The Influence of Books.

Who can measure exactly the influence of books on mankind? What good books have done for civilization and for the progress of the world.

Go back to the times before printed books were invented and what was the world? Innumerable small nations and people spread over the earth's surface who had but little intercourse with each other and who made small progress in civilization. But note the change when books began to be printed and circulated, men of learning then had a means of imparting their knowledge to others and lost no time in doing so. Everything seemed to be inspired with new life and civilization took a long stride forward. Books are a mighty factor in the progress of the world. From them we learn what man has done and can do. For in the best books great men talk to us, with us, and give us their most precious thoughts. In books lies the soul of the whole past time, the audible voice of the past, when the body and material substance of it has all vanished like a dream. Everything that mankind has done, thought, gained, or been; is lying in magic preservation in the pages of books. Books touch and quicken us with the life and spirit of those who wrote them.

Books do not think for us but make us think for ourselves. Everybody ought to own books. A house without them has been well called a literary Sahara, and how many houses there are: We are a "reading people" but nothing is easier to find than houses in which the furniture, the pictures, the ornaments, everything are objects of greater care and expense than the library. Is it any wonder that their inmates whatever their wealth or comfort, are intellectual starvelings? Think not, for books give us thought, hope and above all, they give us great pleasure, as books are the windows through which the soul looks out and a house without books is like a room without windows.

Children should have books for the love of knoledge comes through reading and grows upon them. Nothing is more important to young people than an early love for good books, indeed the influence of books upon all members of a family can hardly be exaggerated. The biographies of literary men, and of great men not literary, are full of testimonies of value.

One true service of reading books, one which is the chief end and aim of all good books, is the developmedt of true and high personal characters, and also to reach the highest achievements, or attain the place in the admiration and love of the human race which we call fame, and by doing these things they make nobler and wiser men to control the enterprises of the world.

We must learn to know books as we learn to know other good things. "Who can overestimate the value of good books," asks Prof. W. P. Atkinson, "those ships of thonght as Bacon so finely calls them, voyaging through the sea of time and carrying their precious freight so saftely from generation to generation. Here are the finest minds giving us the best wisdom of present and all past ages; here are intellects gifted far beyond ours, ready to give us the results of lifetimes of patient thought; imaginations open to the beauty of the universe far beyond what is given us to behold; characters whom we can only vainly hope to imitate but whom it is one of the highest privileges of life to know. Here they all are; and to learn to know them is the privilege of the educated man. But one must learn to read carefully, to retain the good and cast away the bad. There are probably no books in which the good and bad are not combined. History is full of dangerous episodes, biography of specious examples, poetry of inflaming imaginings and fiction of demoralizing license. One of the most sensible quotations concerning books and reading is Lord Bacon's saying "Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts, others to be read but not curiously, and some few to be read wholly, with diligence and attention." All really great men in the litrary world have recognized the great value of books. "Of all the things which man can do or make, by far the most monentous, wonderful, and worthy, are the things we call books says Carlyle, Milton calls them "the precious lifeblood of a master spirit." James Freeman Clarke closes an exellent chapter on reading with these words, "Let us thank God for books. When I think, consider what some books have done for the world and what they are now doing, how they keep up our hope awaken new courage and faith, soothe pain, give an ideal life to those whose homes are hard and cold, bind together distant ages and foreign lands, create new worlds of beauty, bring down truths from heaven I give eternal blessings for this gift and pray we may use it aright and abuse it never.

McGary Again.

Mr. Editor, by the leaves on the trees we know that summer is nigh and so by the signs of the times and prophetic prophesy it seems there is a storm approaching in our national history. The laboring class and yeomany of the country are becoming aroused as they never were before over the financial condition of this country and are asking to what point of compass are we drifting in our nations history. Joshua led the armies of Israal oyer the Jordon and broke the walls of Jerico and came off victorious. But we as a people have a more desperate foe to contend with than did Joshua; money it seems has become the bone of contention in these later days and men are striving for the ascendancy to power whereby they may fill their coffers and increase their wealth. The great political battle to be fought this fall will be between a single gold standard and free coinage of silver. If 412½ grains of silyer with the stamp of the government on it saying it is one dollar and a legal tender for all debts public and private, unless otherwise stipulated in the contract, is not a dollar, if not, then our Congress and this government is not what our constitutional fathers said it was, soyerign by the will of the people. The ground has been gone oyer a good many times of late in regard to demonetization and remonetization of silver, and no doubt the people begin to understand it by this time. When silver was demonetized in 1873 that made it not a legal tender, but when it was remonetized in 1878 the silver dollar became a legal tender for all debts public and private, but subsidary coin is a legal tender for $5 only because it is ten per cent light, taking ten dimes to weigh one dollar. The law of 1890 (The Sherman bill) providing for the purchasing of so much silver bullion per month to be coined into silver dollars at the discretion of the secretary of the treasury but it was neyer intended to coin the silver bullion that was purchased but to treat it as merchandise; it was intended to let it accumulate, then raise the alarm about the accumulation of silver. The law continued in force three years and four months. During that period the Secretary of the Treasury purchased monthly four million five hundred thousand ounces of silyer and issued therefore legal tender notes redeemable in either silver or gold at the option of the secretary; that is the notes were redeemable in coin and that ment gold for the holders of the notes, this was only a scheme concocted by the money power whereby they could filch the people for their own agrandizement. Have we not had about enough of such legislation against the constitutional money of our country. It is strange to me that some of our farmers, working men and men doing a small trade in business will clamor for a single gold standard, when it is in direct opposition to their business.

If we should get free coinage of silver (but I do not believe we will) our silver mines would open up anew their mines, giving employment to a good many men, and the silver bullion would be coined and put into circulation, then miners would not hoard it up, and it would go out among the people, this, the bankers, bond holders and money loaners know, and that's why they do not want it for they can not control that money. The moneyed men want a single gold standard, national bank notes, a gold reserve fund and then they can handle the finance of this country at their will. It might do for a monarchial government to have a single gold standard, whose subjects are ruled by regal authority. But it would not do for a free republic like ours. The republican national convention at St. Louis, in my opinion, will declare in their platform for a single gold standard, and the national democrat convention at Chicago will declare in their platform for free silyer and so the fight will be between the two metals. Neither will a high protective tariff save us but there must be more union as regards the interest of this country, or we will go as did the Romans.

Abraham bought from Ephram the cave of Machpela for a burial place and paid for it four hundred shekles of silver, current money with the merchants of those days. It is estimated that a shekel in those days was about 50 or 60 cents of our money to day. But now days it seems that silver is not good enough to buy bonds. stock, and mortgages, but must be paid for in gold.

THE New York World

Thrice-a-week Edition

18 PAGES A WEEK. 156 PAPERS A YEAR.

Is larger than any weekly or semi-weekly paper published and is the only important Democratic "weekly" published in New York City. Three times as large as the leading Republican weekly of New York City. It will be of especial advantage to you during the Presidential Campaign, as it is published every other day, except Sunday, and has all the freshness and timeliness of a daily. It combines all the news with a long list of interesting departments, unique features, cartoons and graphic illustrations, the latter being a specialty.

All these improvements have been made without any increase in the cost, which remain at one dollar per year.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and the BUFFALO GAZETTE together one year for $1.75

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.00.

Statistics show that the average Irishman is the most cheerful man on earth. Suicide is less prevalent in Ireland than in any other country in the world.

The first house ever built in Minneapolis has been moved to a new site by the school children of the city. Tornadoes are attending to this business in other cities.

The Westminster Gazette says that 2,396 of Spurgeon's sermons have been printed and sold, and that the sum total of the sales reaches nearly 100,000,000, an average of about 35,000 copies per sermon.

The calamity at St. Louis was understood by the English newspapers, it appears, as a disaster at sea, and they issued bulletins, saying: "The steamer St. Louis has been wrecked and 1,000 lives lost."

A dentist in Brooklyn, N. Y., was ordered to pay $1,000 for taking away a part of a woman's jaw in extracting a tooth. It is proper to add that the suit was brought by the woman herself, and not by her husband.

Those people who affect to believe the bicycle craze is dying out should peruse the following advertisement from a Buffalo newspaper: "Will exchange folding bed, child's white crib or writing desk for lady's bicycle."

In awarding damages against a railroad corporation a western judge declared that fat women with bundles "have a right to more time to get on and off a train than might be required for a foot-racer or a grayhound."

Those who watched the recent burning of Longfellow's cottage at Nahant heard the "bells of Lynn" across the water tolling out the alarm of fire. The cottage was very dear to Bostonians. The poet occupied it for 25 summers, from 1857 to 1882, the year of his death, and wrote some of his verse there, but not much, for he preferred to loaf in summer.

Harper's Weekly is responsible for the statement that Londoners think the reign of the American girl in Great Britain has ended. The report, it says, is that the British damsel has learned her lesson, and has come to be as lively and brilliant as her American cousin, and is a winner once more in the competition between them. If the news is true there will be few mourners.

The old Order of Dunkards have declared against bicycles and gold tooth fillings. The Dunkards may mean well, but they ought to know that a man bounding along on a wheel with his molars fairly glistening with 23-karat plugs is in a far more religious frame of mind than the fellow who walks the floor at night with the toothache. We trust the prohibition is not final.

It is well to remember in reading such fearful stories as those of Hermans, of Utah, or H. H. Holmes that it is the exceptional thing that is chronicled. Goodness and not evil is the rule in the world or it would be the cases of goodness that would attract the public eye instead of cases of wickedness. People who mourn because a good deed is not telegraphed from Maine to Texas may take comfort in thinking that it is what is out of the ordinary that attracts attention.

Astronomical observers have noted recently the existence of extraordinary disturbances on the surface of the sun. This may be merely a coincidence, but it is likely to lead to the conclusion in many scientific and unscientific minds that these solar disturbances are in some way the cause of the terrestrial disturbances of the past month. Inasmuch as the world knows so little of the causes of atmospherical phenomena, almost any theory that is advanced is entitled to respectful consideration.

A recent test was made of a ten-inch gun at Bethlehem, Pa., the second of 100 such guns which the Bethlehem Iron company has contracted to furnish the government. Projectiles weighing 575 pounds were used, and the new smokeless powder sent them with a speed of 2,010 feet per second, and a pressure of 27,000 pounds with a charge of 106 pounds of powder. A charge of 271 pounds of brown prismatic powder sent the projectiles 1,907 feet per second with 38,500 pounds pressure. The test is regarded as in every way satisfactory.

The last week of May in the year of our Lord 1896 has won for itself a most unenviable place in history. It was ushered in with severe storms, which went on increasing in violence until the culmination at St. Louis. The tracks of these storms are marked by devastation in town and country, the wrecks of human habitations, and the destruction of countless products of human industry. Worst of all, human lives have been lost by the hundred. Entire families have been annihilated and the survivors of others are bowed down in sorrow and desolation.

One of the interesting discussions during the closing days of the recent Methodist general conference in Cleveland was on the subject of the limit to pastorates. The subject was brought up by a proposition to extend the limit from five years to ten. The debate showed a very strong leaning toward the privilege of longer pastorates, and an amendment which would have removed the time limit altogether was laid on the table by the close vote of 180 to 150. At the last the whole matter was tabled, and so there will be no change in this respect for four years to come.

The most significant feature of the tornado that swept through St. Louis and East St. Louis rests in the fact that it was the first time a storm of that violence had tried its fury on a city of the size and importance of St. Louis. It appears now that the more solid buildings were able to live through the strain with comparatively little damage. The great hotels, the warehouses, the banks, the newspaper buildings, the office buildings, nearly all the structures, in fact, of really stable construction came out of the fearful ordeal practically unscathed. The great damage was done to the smaller and weaker structures.

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

The Proceedings of the First Session.

Washington, June 5.—The senate yesterday passed the filled cheese bill, which taxes manufacturers $400 annually; wholesale dealers, $250, and retail dealers, $120. Conference reports on the naval and Indian appropriation bills were agreed to. In the house the claim of William Elliott from the First South Carolina district was defeated and the seat was given to George W. Murray (colored). The committee on ways and means by a vote of 13 to 2 decided to report the senate bond bill adversely.

Washington, June 6.—In the senate yesterday the resolution relating to Americans captured on the vessel Competitor in Cuban waters and sentenced to death or imprisonment was discussed. The immigration bill was considered, as was also a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment for the election of senators by the people. A resolution was offered for final adjournment on the 8th inst. In the house Gen. Rinaker (rep.) was given the seat from the Sixteenth Illinois district now held by F. E. Downing. The senate resolution to prohibit the issue of bonds without authority from congress was reported adversely.

Washington, June 8.—The senate gave its almost undivided attention on Saturday to the conference reports on general appropriation bills and several of them were agreed to. The house disposed of all the essential business before it, which consisted of conference reports on appropriation bills. The president's veto of the general deficiency appropriation bill was sustained, and a substitute was sent to the senate omitting the French spoliation and other claims which incurred the presidential opposition.

Washington, June 9.—The senate passed the new general deficiency bill yesterday and the conference report on the post office appropriation bill was agreed to. In discussing the immigration bill Senator Morgan spoke of the present war in Cuba and said the conditions were such as to justify intervention by the United States. In the house a bill for the amelioration of the condition of American seamen was passed and conference reports were agreed to on the post office, Indian and District of Columbia appropriation bills.

A RESUME.

Something of the Work Done by the Fifty-Fourth Congress.

The Shortest "Long" Session Held in Thirty Years—Important Bills That Have Been Passed—The Committee Work.

Washington, June 9.—The first session of the Fifty-fourth congress, now in its closing hours, enjoys the distinction of being the shortest "long" session for a period of 30 years. Of the measures which become laws, the most important from an international standpoint, was the bill creating the commission " to determine the true divisional line between Venezuela and British Guiana." Of scarcely less general interest were the bills prohibiting prize fighting in the territories; permitting appointments in the army and navy of former United States officers who served in the rebellion and making one year's residence in a terrntory a prerequisite to obtaining a divorce there.

Excepting these, however, the remainder of the 225 bills and resolutions which received the president's approval were not of a character to deserve extended mention. The more important were the bills incorporating the national society of the Daughters of the Revolution, opening the forest reservations in Colorado, for the location of mining claims; regulating proof of death in pension cases; providing for a naval training school in San Francisco harbor; making it unlawful to shoot at any railway train or any person thereon or to throw missiles into such train, and repealing clause 61 of the tariff law providing for a rebate on alcohol used in the arts.

If the session, however, be conspicuous by reason of its brevity and the limited number of important laws enacted, it resulted in the introduction of a larger number of bills in the house than during any similar period for a quarter of a century. The total number of bills introduced during the entire last congress was 8,987, of which 4,405 were introduced during the first session, which corresponds to the session now drawing to a close and in which latter the aggregate reaches 9,500. Of these 2,300 were favorably reported by the committees to whom they were referred, and scores of them are likely to be brought to the attention of the house next winter.

The Nicaragua canal bill is one of these measures. After many months of consideration in the committee, it received a favorable report in the face of an absolute certainty that it would not be taken up during the present session. The bill to liquidate the indebtedness of the Pacific railways to the government is another far-reaching measure, which is also upon the calendar with a favorable report, but which for prudential reasons will continue to slumber there. Others are the service pension bill, reported by the invalid pensions committee; the Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma statehood bills; the Pacific cable bill and the joint resolution conferring the rank of lieutenant general upon Maj. Gen. Miles.

The popular interest in the Cuban revolution was shown in the large number of resolutions, more than 50 in all, that were introduced and referred to the committee on foreign affairs. After careful consideration, a concurrent resolution was reported, for which was subsequently substituted, in conference, the senate resolution expressing the sympathy of the United States with the insurgents, recognizing their belligerency and calling upon the president to use his good offices to secure the independence of the island.

Measures for which there has been a widespread demand that have passed the house and will probably receive consideration from the senate next session, include the bankruptcy bill, the McCall bill, providing an educational test for immigrants, the labor commission and labor arbitration bills and the bill simplifying the rules of the pension office so as to facilitate the adjustment of private pension cases.

The early weeks of the session were a busy period for the ways and means committee. Of the 187 measures referred to it, 30 were acted upon. Two of the greatest importance were the bond and revenue bills. The bond bill passed the house, was sent to the senate and returned with the addition of an amendment providing for the free coinage of silver. The revenue bill died in the senate committee on finance. Among other measures of interest reported by the ways and means committee were the bills permitting the killing of all the fur seals in Alaskan waters; the "filled cheese" bill and the bill amending the law permitting a rebate on alcohol used in the arts.

The committee on invalid pensions broke all previous records for work. Upwards of 2,800 bills were referred to it, of which 700 private bills were reported to the house. Among the measures reported in addition to those which passed the house, were bills giving members of state militia a pensionable status; granting pensions to remarried war widows; broadening the scope of the law pensioning army nurses; increasing the pensions of those who lost limbs in the service and providing for the payment of pensions by check.

The pensions committee, which deals with a different class of measures from those which are referred to the invalid pensions committee, disposed of 240 of the 600 bills referred to them.

The committees on post offices and post roads, railways and canals, coinage, weights and measures, agriculture, military, public lands, patents, judiciary and commerce reported the ordinary number of measures, but with few exceptions they were not of unusual importance.

The results accomplished by the senate during the session just closing are entirely out of proportion with the legislation that was introduced. Up to Saturday there had been introduced a total of 3,261 bills more than were introduced during the whole of the last congress. The same ratio of increase is found in the flood of memorials and petitions that have been laid before the senate. Out of this array of proposed legislation but little has been done.

The finance committee, to which was referred 105 different measures, has succeeded in getting through the senate but three of any importance that have become laws—the filled cheese bill; the amendment to the administrative feature of the tariff act permitting express companies to pay the duty on packages valued at not more than $500 and deliver them to the residence of the importer direct, and the bill to repeal the free alcohol clause of the tariff law. The Dingley bill came out of committee with a free coinage amendment which prevailed in the senate, and this proposition to increase the revenues through tariff duties has ever since been hung in the air between the two houses. The bankruptcy and contempt of court bills, the two most important measures emanating from the committee on the judiciary, were not even considered by the senate. The favorable report from the committee on privileges and elections for an amendment for the election of senators by popular vote, became the text for many speeches that never got beyond that indefinite stage.

The senate committee on pensions shows a better record for accomplished results. Senate pension bills aggregating 1,020 were referred to this committee. Similar bills aggregating 220 came over from the house. Two hundred and seventy senate bills were passed by the senate, of which the house passed but 50. On the other hand, the senate passed 110 of the house pension bills out of a total of 220 passed by the house. Out of all this proposed legislation but 83 bills became laws, as follows: Senate bills without the approval of the president, 11; senate bills approved, 27; house bills become a law without approval, 8; house bills approved, 37; total, 83.

Bonner Reelected President.

Harrisburg, Pa., June 6.—At Friday morning's session of the annual congress of the Scotch-Irish Society of America, Robert Bonner, of New York, was reelected president for another year, notwithstanding his expressed desire to retire. All the other officers were reelected, the only addition being the election of M. Wilson McAlarney, of Harrisburg, as secretary of the Pennsylvania society.

Fire in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, Minn., June 4.—The Edison building, one of the highest and best buildings in the city, adjoining the Lumber exchange in Hennepin avenue, burned Wednesday night. It was supposed to be fireproof. The fire was under control at midnight. Several newspapers and printing establishments were in the building. Five stories were destroyed.

A RUNAWAY TEAM.

Causes the Death of Austin Corbin, the Well-Known Financier.

Newport, N. H., June 5.—Mr. Austin Corbin and his grandson Corbin Edgell, with Dr. Paul Kunzier and coachman John Stokes started on a fishing trip about three o'clock Thursday afternoon. On going out of the yard at the farmhouse, the horses shied, tipping over the open carriage, throwing the occupants down an embankment about eight feet against a stone wall. The family saw the accident from the plazza and hurried to their assistance with the farm help. They found Mr. Corbin conscious but terribly wounded. His nephew and the doctor were also conscious. The coachman was unconscious and apparently hurt the worst of all. They were carried to the house and doctors summoned.

Mr. Corbin's injuries were very serious, a compound fracture of the right leg above the knee, a fearful scalp wound over four inches long on the forehead, cut through to the skull; one on the right side of the head three inches long and the hip and chin cut badly.

Dr. Kunzier was thrown over the wall and sustained a broken arm and sprained ankle, so far as known, and Corbin Edgell has his leg twice broken between the knee and ankle.

John Stokes' right leg was broken between the knee and ankle, an dhe sustained a fractured skull. Stokes died from his injuries about six o'clock without regaining consciousness.

The cause of the horses shying is said to be from the fact that the coachman was driving them for the first time without blinders.

Mr. Corbin died at 9:42 Thursday evening, shortly after the arrival of Dr. Cilley from Boston. His son, Austin Corbin, Jr., arrived on a special train form Boston about 11 o'clock, but too late to see his father alive. All the other members of the family with the exception of his son-in-law, Mr. George S. Edgell, who is in the west, were present when he breathed his last.

[Mr. Corbin was born July 11, 1827, near Newport, N. H., of an old New England ancestry. His father, a farmer, was many times elected a member of the legislature of that state. Mr. Corbin received his early education in the schools of his native state. He afterward studied law with Chief Justice Cushing, of New Hampshire, and Gov. Metcalf, of Rhode Island, and finished the course at the Harvard law school, where he received his degree in 1849. He practiced while at home, but in 1851 removed to Davenport, Ia., where he remained until 1865. Though successful as a lawyer, Mr. Corbin did not practice long. He became a partner in 1854 of the banking firm of Macklot & Corbin, which was the only concern of the kind in Davenport which did not suspend payment in the financial panic of 1857.

Upon the passage of the national banking and currency act of 1863 Mr. Corbin, though located far distant from the financial centers of the country, was among the first to apply for a charter under that act. He organized and became the president of the First national bank of Davenport, which opened its doors for business June 29, 1863—the first in the country, the second being the First national bank of Philadelphia, which commenced business two days afterward, on July 1. The bank was successful, and Mr. Corbin was enabled in 1865 to come to New York with a considerable fortune. Here he founded the Corbin Banking company and acquired interest after interest until he became one of the leading financiers of the community. He had in the meantime become a still larger lender of money upon Iowa farms, not only on his own account but for moneyed institutions and individual investors in New York and New England, the business having so grown as to engross almost his whole attention. It grew in volume and rapidly extended over the states of Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas and Oregon, and the territories of Dakota, Montana and Washington, and finally over the whole west and south.

Not content with the personal management of the details of this vast business he soon turned his attention to railroad affairs. His first experience in this direction of any consequence grew from the care of large investments in the securities of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Railroad company, which he successfully reorganized in the interest of the bondholders of all classes. Afterward he became actively interested in various railroad enterprises, but it was his connection with the Long Island railroad that brought him most prominently before the public as a railroad manager and financier. He bought into the control of the property in December, 1880. January 1, 1881, he went into possession as receiver and president of the corporation.

Within the space of eight months a revolution was wrought. From a condition which made it the laughing-stock of railroad men it became a thoroughly equipped and completed system, with numerous branches reaching every part of the island, and one of the most reliable paying properties in the state. As in the case of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western railroad, he was virtually forced into Reading in 1886. He was looked upon as the only man who could save the company. On January 1, 1888, he presented the property to the stockholders not only in a solvent condition, but with a largely increased and rapidly increasing revenue.

MEETS IN GRAND RAPIDS.

Opening Session of the Convention of Charities and Corrections.

Grand Rapids, Mich., June 5.—The 22d annual convention of Charities and Corrections, opened Thursday evening, with 600 of the 800 delegates in attendance. The convention opened with Harvey J. Hollister, president of the Grand Rapids Charity organization, as presiding officer. The address of welcome on behalf of the state was made by Gov. John T. Rich. He was followed by Mayor L. C. Stow, on behalf of the city and J. B. Angell, president of the University of Michigan, on behalf of the educational institutions of the state. The several addresses elicited hearty applause from the delegates and citizens in attendance. The response was made by Andrew E. Elmore, of Green Bay, Wis., and when he closed he was heartily applauded. The annual address was then read by A. O. Wright, of Madison, Wis.

President Wright, in his annual address on "The New Philanthropy," spoke of the progression from age to age in the methods of handling and improving the dependent classes. He stated that the new philanthropy of the dawn of the 20th century was distinguished on its philosophic side by studying causes as well as symptoms and considering classes as well as individuals. On its practical side it seeks to change environment and build up character as well as to relieve distress. He emphasized the need of checking bad heredity through the state institutions and the necessity for attacking pauperism and crime in the slums.

Grand Rapids, Mich., June 6.—The national conference of corrections and charities divided into sections Friday for the discussion of special topics and branches of the work. The juvenile reformatories section was presided over by Franklin H. Briggs, of Rochester; charity organization, by Dr. Philip W. Ayers, Chicago; chronic insane poor, by Dr. Samuel Bell, Newberry, Mich.; soldiers' and sailors' homes, by C. E. Faulkner, Atchinson, Kan., and child-saving work, by H. W. Lewis, Washington. The general session at noon was devoted to soldiers' homes and at night to a discussion of the civil-service system in public institutions.

A FEAST OF SONG.

Auspicious Opening of the National Saengerfest at Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, Pa., June 9.—In all fully 2,000 active participants in the National Saengerfest arrived in this city Monday, and, according to the badges conspicuously worn, the German populations of Chicago, Milwaukee, Peoria, Cincinnati, Cleveland, St. Louis, New York, Indianapolis, Wheeling (W. Va.), Philadelphia, Columbus, Dayton, Evansville, Louisville, Memphis, Minneapolis, Denver, San Francisco and New Orleans are especially well represented.

A heavy rain and windstorm in the early evening played havoc with the gorgeous street decorations, but did not deter about 8,000 people from attending the reception concert given by local societies and singers, which was a complete success. At 8:15 o'clock President John Dimling appeared upon the darkened stage and read a brief telegram of friendly greeting and kindly expressed wishes from President Cleveland. As Mr. Dimling ceased speaking, the electric wire connecting the Saengerfest hall with the executive mansion in Washington was closed by President Cleveland pushing a button, and in an instant the spacious hall was flooded with light. Long and loud applause greeted both the message from the president and the beautiful effect of the illumination, the most attractive feature of which was the mammoth lyre, constructed of hundreds of varicolored electric globes.

When quiet had been restored, the orchestra, of 77 pieces, under the direction of Heinrich Zoellinger, rendered the "Kaiser Maroch," which was fully appreciated by the vast audience. Fest President Dimling delivered an address in acceptance of the Saengerfest flag, and closed with a welcome to the singers, and introduction of Lieut. Gov. Walter Lyon. Mr. Lyon heartily welcomed the singers to Pennsylvania. The mayors of Allegheny and Pittsburgh followed in brief addresses of welcome to the twin cities. After the rendition of "Freedom and Fatherland," Rev. F. Ruoff delivered the festival oration, and Gov. McCorkle, of West Virginia, made a few congratulatory remarks. Then followed "The Deluge" (Cantata); "Old Folks at Home," and an aria, "I Have Lost My Eurydice" (Orpheus), sung by Grace Damian. The programme was long, but was enthusiastically received and appreciated. The first evening of the week of song was an unqualified success.

CAPT. BOURKE DEAD.

Close of the Career of One Who Gained Fame with Both Sword and Pen.

Philadelphia, June 9.—Capt. John G. Bourke, Third cavalry United States army, died at the Polyclinic hospital Monday morning. Capt. Bourke was stationed at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt. His wife was with him when he died, but the daughters were at their home in Burlington, Vt. The remains will be interred in the National cemetery at Arlington.

[Capt. Bourke was as well known for his writing as his fighting of Indians, his talent being in the direction of their anthropology and folk-lore. He was a stanch friend of the red man of America in time of peace. He was a member of scientific societies in France, England and the United States. One of his most valuable works on the medicine men of the Apaches was published by the Smithsonian Institution. His most popular books are the "Snake Dance of the Moquis," which he was the first white man to describe in a book from being an eye-witness; "An Apache Campaign," "On the Border with Crook," all of which have had English editions. At the last meeting of the American Folk-Lore society Capt. Bourke was elected president. He enlisted as a private in the Fifteenth Pennsylvania cavalry during the war and fought in the Army of the Cumberland. He was awarded a medal of honor for gallantry at Stone River, and when the war closed the president appointed him a cadet-at-large to West Point.]

MARTIAL LAW DECLARED.

Anarchist Plot Feared in Barcelona—Many Suspects Arrested.

Barcelona, June 9.—Martial law has been declared here. The total number of victims of the bomb explosion are eight dead, 21 dying and 18 injured. Sunday's outrage was accompanied by features of peculiar atrocity. It was while the people, both those in the procession and those looking on, were devoutly kneeling that the bomb was thrown by the unknown assassin. Whether by design or not it did its deadliest work among the innocent and harmless, the majority of the victims being women and children. Those who were not killed outright were horribly mutilated and are subjected to excruciating torture by their injuries. It is believed that the outrage was immediately directed against Gen. Desbujola, one of the dignitaries of the city who was carrying the banner at the head of the religious procession. Other city officials also took part in the procession.

The impression is general that anarchists did the work as a result of a widespread anarchistic plot. The police are working on this theory and have arrested 22 men know to entertain anarchistic sympathies. In connection with these arrests they have seized a number of documents which furnish some clew to the plot of which Sunday's bomb-throwing was a manifestation. These documents indicate that the center of the terrorist agitation is directed with the purpose of precipitating a number of demonstrations accompanied by acts of violence at different points simultaneously or following close upon each other, so as to create a reign of terror in the different European governments.

DIED WITH HER CHILD.

A Chicago Mother Drowns Her Babe and Herself.

Chicago, June 9.—After having quarreled with her husband at noon Monday Mrs. Hannah Kock, of 1044 West Thirteenth street, left home with her two children and threw them and herself into the river near the California avenue bridge. She and her two-month-old daughter Emma were drowned, but the other child, Charles, nine years old, escaped. Two boys who were swimming in the river at the time witnessed the deed. Before they could reach the scene the mother and baby had disappeared and the little boy had struggled to the shore.

Big Fire in Toronto.

Toronto, Ont., July 9.—The big department store of James N. McKendry & Co. in Yonge street, just north of Queen street, was destroyed by fire at eight o'clock Monday night. McKendry carried a stock valued at $150,000, which is a total loss. The fire spread to the department store of the T. Eaton company, south of McKendry's building, but was soon extinguished. Eaton, however, will suffer a very large loss from water.

HARD TUSSLE WITH BRUIN.

Oregon Hunter Attacks a Bear with an Ordinary Jackknife.

J. C. Hearing, who was hunting and trapping in the Blue mountains, a few miles west of Elgin, met with a little adventure with a bear recently that might have proved rather serious to him had it not been for the intervention of one of his dogs, says the Portland Oregonian. He was engaged in setting traps, and as he had considerable weight to carry he had no weapon with him except a jackknife, and on his rounds his dogs discovered the winter quarters of a bear in a big hollow tree. The bear was at home, and was pretty much alive, as subsequent events proved. As bear pelts are quite valuable, Jake was quite anxious to secure this one, but was afraid that if he went to camp, a mile and a half distant, bruin would escape, so he lashed his pocketknife to the end of a stick and attempted to cut the animal's throat. He only succeeded in inflicting some painful flesh wounds, which so enraged the brute that it suddenly came out of its hole, and was almost on him when one of his dogs made a sudden onslaught on the animal's rear, which diverted his attention long enough to enable Jake to dodge behind a tree, and the dogs soon made it so tropical for the bear that it was glad to take refuge in a tree, where they kept it until a gun was procured from camp, when the animal was quickly dispatched.

HELD IT IN THE FIRE.

Medicine Man Proves His Powers to a Zulu King.

Among the great characters of the Zulu is the medicine man. He uses his craft wholly by superstition, and states to his astonished people that the great spirit of the moon had revealed to him the cause of the complaint, whether it be sickness or crime.

The great Dingaam was a chief who was a terror to his medicine man. There was no punishment that was too severe but he would inflict it in an insinuating way on the man of witchery. It is related that his confidential man and the great medicine being of the whole Zulu tribe had come under his suspicion. He was sent for by the king, who welcomed his witch doctor in cordial terms. A large fire was burning near by. The king stated:

"My man of medicine, your hands are cold; go nearer to the fire—nearer. Yes, the right hand is very cold. Put it into the fire."

Thus the poor man was obliged to keep his hand in that fire of white heat until the member had burned to a crisp. The command of the king was supreme, and one indication of the pain would mean instant death. After the seeming suspicion of the king had been gratified he stated that the hand was warm now and that all was well.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

COURAGE.

Hearts are heavy with doubt
And eyes are dim with fears,
For the urging ills without, within,
The crowding want and the growing sin,
And the dream of the confident years
Seems crumbling and dying out;
But courage, soul! be brave, endure!
Behind the wrong God standeth sure.

Helpless we stand, and weak,
By the beds where our dear ones lie,
And see them suffer, and have no power
To lift the weight of one weary hour,
Or call the light to the eye
Or the rose to the fading cheek;
But courage, soul, count not in vain
Thy hope, for God is in the pain.

Downward the dark wings sweep,
The flickering life burns low,
We watch the faint pulse flutter, cease,
The suffering give place to peace,
The dear face calmer grow.
Up, soul! thy courage keep!
For God, who gives our mortal breath,
The Lord of life, is Lord of death.

PRESSIE.

BY ELLA S. ATKINSON.

JOHN BRAY and his wife sat at the door of their little home Sunday evening. He was baggage master at the brown station along the track, and Sunday was his one night off. He had tilted his chair back to the wall of the house, his feet were caught in the rung, and he was drowsily content, sitting there in his shirt sleeves, his wife beside him and the long, pure twilight deepening into lauguorous, flower-scented night.

"Yer flow'rs is doin' pretty well, Mary," he began, presently. Mary had been crouched on the step, her elbows in her knees, her face buried in her hands, and she had been so long silent that he wanted to hear her speak, to know if she were weeping.

"Oh, yes," she answered, without enthusiasm.

There were no tears in her voice, but the tone was hopelessly dreary.

"Yer 'sturtiums ain't blowed yit," he continued, with a wish to enliven her.

"No, jist buddin'."

"An' the sweet peas?" with a movement toward the window where the thrifty vines were climbing up their taut white strings.

"They'll be out in a week," and then the silence grew around them again.

"There's the down express," John volunteered after a long pause. A puff of smoke rose over the cutting beyond the bridge, the headlight leaped into sight, the whistle screeched its warning and the train thundered by, its window lights shooting in and out on the curve like sparks tossed on a hurricane.

"There they go," Mary said, enviously, "comin' here an' goin' there, seein' things an' people, an' enjoyin' theirselves, an' we jist stick here in the one place like the bowlders over on the roadside."

Her tone was hard, the inflection was a complaining one.

"I guess you git pretty lonely, some days," John ventured, letting his chair down on its front legs, and putting his hand on his wife's shoulder in a half clumsy caress.

"Oh! it's awful, John," she said, brokenly, taken off her guard by the tenderness, "when I've washed an' cleaned myself an' there ain't nothin' more to do. 'Tain't but what I could do knittin' or sewin' for winter, but I can't get the things to do with. Then the trains keep goin' by, an' I hate the people who kin go to places. I'd go ravin' mad, ef I didn't do somethin', so I allus go an' scrub up the kitchen floor. It works off them feelin's, an' some days I do it mornin's an' afternoons too."

"Why don't you go over an' set with Jim Lawson's wife?" John suggested.

"I don't like her," Mary answered, promptly, "fer she's allus braggin' 'bout her babies."

"How many hev they got?" asked the husband, carelessly.

"Four," the childless woman at his side whispered.

Mary had been a tailoress before she was married. She was ambitious beyond her fellow-workers, deft with her needle, quick with her tongue, and she dreamed of a future far different than the life of John Bray's wife. But ten hours a day at a sewing-machine wears upon a woman. John asked her to marry him, and she thought the little brown house would be a paradise. She kept the rooms spotlessly neat, she planted and tended the flowers, and helped her husband in the strip of land where their vegetables were. She had been married four years. John's salary was no higher, the house began to look a little shabby here and there, and Mary pined for companionship and grew bitter as she saw her ideals of life being slowly strangled one by one. John was away most of the time. When he came home, he wanted his supper, or his paper, and his wife dropped all her merry ways. She thought he despised them and in that she was wrong. He liked to be amused, but he made the mistake of accepting without thanks. She thought him cold and irresponsive. She thought him changed. It had come to him before that Sunday evening that she was unhappy. Now he brooded over it. Sometimes he reproached himself, more often, as poor human nature goes, he was out of patience with her. Day after day, when he went home for his noonday dinner, the little kitchen reeked of soapsuds, and the floor was damp from scrubbing. Often it was so at night. He knew his wife was discontented.

"You'll wear that floor out," he said angrily, one night.

"I'll wear the heart out of me first, was the retort. And John went away without kissing her good-by.

"It's enough to make a man stay out of his home," he muttered, and then he saw a train stop, and half-mechanically he began to run. It had only stopped for orders and began to move before he came up. Looking along the track, he saw a woman catch the rail of the last car and swing herself on. When he reached the place, he saw a curious black object on the bank. He jumped the ditch and took hold of it. It was a basket. He opened it, beneath the red semaphore light, started back with muttered words, shut the lids tight down, and ran down to his house. Mary was wiping the tea things.

"What's up?" she asked.

"See here," he said, lifting both lids of the old-fashioned market basket. A little baby lay there, blinking, squirming and crying a little.

"Where did you get that, John Bray?" He told her.

"Take it back," she cried. "I'll have no girl's brat around me."

"Hadn't we better keep it till mornin'? I'll let the constable or somebody know about it. Then they kin take it away."

"Well," Mary assented, "an' I'll take it out; it's all crowded up there."

John went off to his work, and Mary's tea dishes stood while she lifted out the tiny baby and tended to it. There were clothes and food in the basket and a note, beseeching the finder to care for the three weeks' old baby girl. Mary wept and crooned by turns over the wee, dark-haired thing, and presently it went to sleep in her arms.

Nine o'clock came, ten, half-past ten, and still Mary sat with the baby in her arms. John came in, and she straightway motioned him to silence.

"WHERE DID YOU GET THAT?"

"Why don't you set it down?" he asked.

"I wuz waitin' fer you to turn down the bed, fer she seemed so comfortable cuddled up here I hated to rout her up, doin' the thing myself."

John's boots were noisy, as he stepped about.

"Hadn't ye better go stockin'-footed, ye'll wake her up," suggested Mary. John took the oath of allegiance to the baby sovereign mentally and drew off his shoes.

"Ain't she a picture?" asked the wife, when she had nestled the wee thing down.

"I guess you liked holdin' that baby in your arms," John began, and Mary hid her face on his shoulder and cried.

"You'll kinder hate to give it up, won't ye? An' the constable's goin' to see about it to-morrer. I wuz down there. That's what kep' me so late. There don't seem to be any particler place fer to put it, but he'll find out."

Mary was silent for a little, and then the baby stirred. She hurried over to it, shaded the lamp and tiptoed back to John.

"Can't we keep her?" Mary began, wistfully; "her little clothes was in the basket and her food in a tin can, an' this note says about her."

John read the note, spelling it out, and absorbing its meaning slowly.

"I guess we kin keep her ef we want to," he said, judicially, and then, eagerly: "What'll we call her?"

"I wuz thinkin' Express 'ud be a good name," Mary answered.

"It's too long," John objected, "an' it's onhandy to say."

"Well, Pressie fer short, an' Pressie's a real pretty name. It's kinder 'propriate to call her somethin' like that," Mary went on, for Mary was romantic in her notions.

"Poor little mite," John said, solemnly, looking steadily at the same place in the floor for several minutes.

Mary crept up to him and sat on his knee. "I didn't know what wuz wrong with me, nor what I wanted," she sobbed, "but, John, ef I can keep that baby, there ain't nothin' I want. She won't cost much, John."

"No, it won't take much to board her, an' I guess Pressie'll hev to stay," John made answer, and then they rose and moved together to the door and out into the starlight.

John was moist about the eyes and happy at his heart. He took a new and strange delight in everything, in his present and future, his home, the sky, and his wife beside him. And they planned and wondered what Pressie would be like when she grew up. They said one to the other what company she would be, and how careful they would have to be about the track.

"I'll make a gate fer the door," John said, and he looked around for timber as if he thought he ought to do it tomorrow.

"Ye won't hev time to scrub yer floor so much now." John's tone was mischievous, as he said it.

But Mary only sighed, a long, deep sigh of contentment. Her childless misery had passed away. She had put her lips to the cup of motherhood.—N. Y. Independent.

Music at the Encampment.

At the national encampment of the G. A. R., to be held in St. Paul during the first week of September, the services of a large number of bands and drum corps will be required, over 100 having participated in the encampment and parades at Louisville. It is expected that many of the visiting posts and departments will necessarily employ bands which are located in the vicinity of St. Paul, as the expense of bringing them from their different home localities would be too great. The committee on music having this matter in charge asks that all leaders of band or drum corps who desire to furnish music at the time of the encampment, without delay send to Lieut. Robert L. Winne, secretary of the committee on music, Manhattan building, St. Paul, a statement giving the number of members of their respective organizations, a description of the uniforms which they wear, the character of music furnished, and the charge which will be made for their services per day or during the time of the encampment.

Wanted a Letter.

Albert E. Shaw, letter carrier No. 38, whose route lies in the neighborhood of Central avenue and 25th street NE, Minneapolis, met with a queer experience, recently, in making his usual rounds. In passing a certain residence he was accosted by the young hopeful of the family, who said: "Say, Mr. Shaw, any mail for me?"

"No," was the answer.

"Oh, you never bring me a letter," said the boy, and with that he immediately raise to his shoulder an air gun which he was carrying, and discharged the weapon point blank at the carrier. The ball struck Shaw square in the back of the neck and made quite a painful and bad wound. Upon reaching the next drug store, he stopped for repairs and an obliging clerk soon alleviated the pain. Mr. Shaw is thanking his lucky stars that the projectile did not him in the eye.

He Left a Will.

M. Snow, living in Des Moines River township, came in Fulda about 10 days ago and engaged William M. Davis to draw up a will, stating at the time that he had trouble in the family, and that if he shonld die he wanted his two youngest boys Frank and Allen, to have the bulk of his property. The will was made, in which he appointed P. Jager, one of his neighbors, and C. Wilson, of the city, his administratiors. Nothing more was thought of the affair until the other night the word was brought in that he had taken laudanum and was found dead about a mile north of his house. Mr. Snow had lived in Wautanwan county for a number of years, came there about 1876, and had accumulated considerable property.

Old Settlers.

At the annual meeting of the Old Settlers of Minnesota the following officers were elected. A. H. Cavender of St. Paul president, in place of J. C Terry. P. H. Johnson and H. N. Setzer were elected first and second vice presidents respectively, and A. L. Larpenter, recording secretary; J. B. Chaney, corresponding secretary, and Captain Russell Blakely, treasurer, were also re-elected.

Their First Reunion.

The Eleventh Minnesota volunteer infantry will hold their first reunion in St. Paul during the 30th National Encampment, Tuesday, Sept. 1, in the council chamber from 9:30 to 12 o'clock. The regimental committee in charge of the reunion desire to obtain the names and addresses of all survivors. The chairman is W. C. Wilson, 212 Masonic Temple, Minneapolis, and the secretary is Ben Brack, Lindeke, Warner and Schurmeier, St. Paul.

HE WOULD RUN NO RISKS.

Not Disposed to Hazard $1.75 on a Doubtful Seizure.

This is said to have happened in the wilds of Aroostook shortly after the Bangor & Aroostook railroad had commenced to exert its "modernizing influence" and bring to the newly-established express offices certain commodities, the sale of which or possession with intent to sell is contrary to the wise laws of the goodly commonwealth of Maine. A certain deputy sheriff was informed that there was deposited at a certain railroad station within his jurisdiction a package containing matter subject to confiscation. The railroad station, which also included the express office, was some distance from the village, and the minion of the law concluded to reconnoiter a little before taking the hard journey, perhaps for nothing. There was a telephone connection, and after communication was duly established the following conversation took place:

"Hello, there! Be you the express agent?"

"I be."

"Well, hain't there a box there marked for Mike Pommerlow?"

"I believe there is. Be you Mike?"

"No, I hain't Mike, but I'm a deputy sheriff, and I believe there's licker in that 'ere. Say, will ye let me seize it if I come over?"

"Will I let ye seize it? Why—"

The agent "tumbled" to use a horrid slang expression. He saw that the deputy was ignorant of the nature of the Maine law, and continued:

"Well, there's $1.75 due for charges, and if you'll pay that, seein' as how you've got the law on your side, I s'pose I'll have to stand by and see you seize."

"An' I don't seize unless I pay the express?"

"Don't nothin' go out of this office unless the charges are paid. Them's the orders."

"Wall, w-a-ll, but 'sposen I seize the box and tain't rum after all, do I get my $1.75 back?"

"N-n-no. We don't let out rum boxes on approval, nor I hain't got all day to talk, either."

"Well, now look here, young feller, you must think I'm a fool to pay express before I know whether it's rum or not. I don't seize nothin' but prepaid boxes, rum or no rum. Ye can't fool your Uncle Dudley outer no two dollars on onsartainties."

There was a sharp click on the other end of the line, and the express agent turned around with a grin just as a muddy buckboard drove up with the owner of the box in a highly nervous state. The charges were paid, the contraband disappeared around the bend in the road toward Caribou, and the agent took down his fowling piece and started down the track to shoot a few partridges from the telegraph wires.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

STOCKS AND COLLARS.

The Neck Finish a Distinctive Touch to the Fashionable Toilet.

Like the separate waist fashion, which everyone supposed would quickly run its course and be put aside, but which flourishes with time and grows with every season, the fancy to make the neck and throat trimming the crucial point of a toilet continues.

It has come to be quite the seal of an artistic dressmaker to create pretty finishes for the neckband of the gown, always, of course, keeping within the sacred realm of the style on which capricious fashion has set her hall mark of the moment. A cluster of ribbon loops standing up within the band as high often as the ears is a very effective finish, if the color selected is harmonious with the skin tints. The soft frills of lace flaring up to fall over in a graceful bunch are another becoming and favorite fashion, and discreetly concealing to throats that have begun to lose the plumpness of youth.

The straight-around and very full frills are more used in London than here, the American woman for some reason objecting to this arrangement and refusing to adopt it.

With fichu bodices the throat is sometimes fashionably finished quite low, the only approach to the bared neck hollows of a few seasons ago that is seen. As if to make up for this concession, the neckbands of tailor-made gowns are higher than ever, and frequently accentuate their height with a little turned-over-all-around collar, on which the ears rest.

The boa finish, as it is called, will be much used for summer gowns, and is a mass of crinkled or plaited tulle chiffon or lace, arranged in full jabot effect on a ribbon band. The long-necked woman finds this style of admirable purpose, but the stout woman whose head seems to be fitted upon her collar bones simply obliterates what little throat she might have.

For the decollete corsage the almost always becoming broad black velvet ribbon is again in vogue.

In addition to the neck finishes shown, which are a part of the frock bodice, the range of separate "collarettes" and "throatlets" is very wide. "Anything you may have in your odd and end box," said the woman the other day, "can be put together for a collarette."—N. Y. Times.

Spring Renovating.

The spring house-cleaning time, though sanitists frown upon periodical cleaning, thinking it should be chronic rather than sporadic, is very apt to develop the renovating desire. To alter, renew or make over, as well as to furnish and freshen, is to some extent a luxury; the modest purse must yield to the temptation under protest. One thing, however, almost any housekeeper may do, and that is, have a good carpenter in for a day's work in odd jobs about the house. Two or three cellar steps are loose or half broken, the several doors that have opened hard all winter, the piece of mantel or wainscoting that the heat of the house through the winter has loosened, the kitchen shelf that has been sagged, the window whose pulleys are broken, the bureau drawer that sticks—all these and more defects familiar to every house mistress are small individually, but in the aggregate are considerable. They can be remedied in a few hours' competent work. Physicians nowadays recognize the harm of small inconveniences. It may be the only spring tonic you need is this straightening of wearing and discomfort-causing trifles.—N. Y. Times.

THOUGHT HE HAD JAUNDICE.

Other Doctors Said Diabetes, Indigestion, Torpid Liver, Etc.

But None of the Prescribed Remedies Did Any Good, so the Patient Prescribed for Himself with Wonderful Results—He Is Now a Well Man.

From the Reporter, Fond du Lac, Wis.

About a year ago The Reporter correspondent on a trip through Stockbridge, Wisconsin, was introduced to Mr. J. W. Flower, whose appearance was anything but pleasant to one unacquainted with disease and its effects. One would think Mr. Flower had jaundice or consumption and to the reporter it seemed that he was not long for this world. Some six months later the correspondent saw Mr. Flower again and there was a very marked improvement in his appearance. In reply to a question as to what had been the matter with him he stated he did not know exactly, but that he had been examined and treated by several physicians who failed to agree as to his ailments. Said Mr. Flower:

"One stated I had diabetes, another indigestion, and another said my spleen failed to supply the system with sufficient red corpuscles, another said my liver had become hardened and torpid, but none of the remedies prescribed did me any good. I was cold and weak nearly all the time, I had no ambition, I had chills and then heat flashes, I was at times numb and thought I was paralyzed, my legs were so weak I could scarcely walk a block at times. I had given up all hope of ever getting better, when one day I read an article in The Reporter which spoke of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

"I thought it was about the same as with other patent medicines and paid no attention to it, but my wife who has been troubled as most women are, concluded to send for a box of the pills to use in her case, which she did. I read the circular wrapped around the box and concluded to try them myself unknown to her. I had no faith in their doing me any good, but much to my surprise after taking them a week I began feeling better and as my wife was also feeling better I told her I was also taking the pills. I sent for two boxes more, and in two months I was much better. My strength has improved ever since, and I am still gaining flesh. I have regained my appetite, and to-day I can do as much work on the farm as any man in my employ."

"Then, Mr. Flower, you honestly believe that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured you and your wife?" questioned the correspondent.

"Yes, and I have given them to my children when they complain and on them they work like magic. It would be impossible for me to speak too highly of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills which I have at all times in my household. I commenced to use the Pink Pills in my family about one year and a half ago, and find them to do more than they are advertised to do. I would not be without them for any price and am always glad to recommend them to all my friends, and would advise all others to use them, especially those who have suffered as myself and wife have suffered."

Mr. Flower, after the interview submitted the following:

STOCKBRIDGE, Wis., Jan. 18, 1896.

"J. W. Flower, being duly sworn on his oath, says the foregoing statement is correct and true.

(Signed.) J. W. FLOWER."

Personally appeared before me this 18th day of January, 1896, the above named J. W. Flower, and acknowledged the same.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

THE MUSTACHE.

How It Became a Symbol of Liberty an Fraternity.

The mustache, that questionable adornment of a man's upper lip, is trembling in the balance. The fashionable man of the hour who eschews this time-honored ornament will tell you that it is a crying and unnecessary evil, and is bound to go. And where can one find a better criterion of such momentous subjects than the fashionable man of the hour? In years to come the grandchildren of a beardless race may have to turn to their encyclopedias to find out what a mustache was. Anticipating this, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, a sort of advance sheet may be found in the following:

The home of the mustache is in Spain. After the Moors first invaded the country the Christian and Moslem population became so mixed that it was difficult to say which were Moors and which were Spaniards.

The Spanish then hit upon a means by which they could at once distinguish their brethren. They did not shave their lips any longer, and they allowed a tuft of hair to grow below the mouth, so that their beards formed the rude outline of a cross.

Thus the mustache became a symbol of liberty and fraternity.

Something of a Change.

A French paper vouches for this dialogue, which took place in a French assize court, as being literally true:

"Why," asked the judge of a man who had been caught stealing provisions, "did you attempt to rob this poor baker?"

"It was hunger that forced me to it," answered the man. "When the forest wolf is hunted from the woods by starvation, he takes his prey where he can seize it—"

"Hush!" thundered the court, rapping on the desk. "He does nothing of the sort. He endures his ills, repents, and becomes an honest man!"

Ideas of Savages and Children.

The Cheyennes and other Indians of the plains believe that thunder is caused by the flapping of the wings of an immense bird which flies across the sky, bringing the storm. All the ideas of savage tribes are based on such simple conceptions of nature. The ideas of young children are often identical with savage myths, as a result of minds on the same plane of development attempting to explain the same thing.

The Water Lily.

Several specimens of water lilies have the very curious peculiarity of blooming all day and at evening closing their blossoms, and, by retracting the stem, drawing the flour entirely under water. There is no more singular fact in the history of flowers than this oddity of the water lily.

A Dog with Artificial Teeth.

It is said that a dog in Mulliken, Mich., possesses and uses daily a full set of artificial teeth. The dog is very old, and is a family pet. When it lost its teeth recently its owner, according to the story, had the local dentist make the animal a full set of teeth, and they are said to be a perfect working success.

Extravagant Relic Worship.

The most extravagant instance of literary relic worship on record is said to be that of a well-known Englishman, who constantly wears in a small locket attached to a chain around the neck a portion of the charred skull of Shelley.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

The best reason in the world why some things sell so well is because they are good. That is one reason for the great sales of "BATTLE AX."

But good quality is only half the story. The other half is the size of a 5 cent piece. It is as big almost as a 10 cent piece of other and poorer kinds.

—The Democratic State Convention was one of the liveliest for years.

—The old settlers are invited to attend an annual meeting at Buffalo on Saturday June 20.

—The Cemetery Board will hold a regular meeting at Walter's office, on Saturday evening, 8 o'clock.

—Farmers complain that cut worms are eating up all the corn in the fields. And gardeners say little striped bugs on the vines never were worse.

—Miss Stella Davis has been given free tuition to the Hamline University by Prof. Innis who appreceated her efforts; she being the head of the graduating class. Good.

—The Democratic primaries held in this place were not kept open until five o'clock, as per notice given in the papers. Men at the polls at 4:32 could find nothing to show their had ever been a primary electisn. That's not right.

—The illustrated lecture in the M. E. church, Tuesday evening, for the benefit of Asbury Hospital was not as well attended as it deserved. The talk was well received and was instructive as well. Quite a donation was secured as a collection after the entertainment.

—At the Democratic Primary held at the City Hall, Saturday afternoon. M. A. O'Hair was chosen chairman, H. E. Grafft, Secretary; A. E. Meister and Louis Bock, Judges of election. The Delegates chosen were M. A. O' Hair, A. E. Meister, and Dr. C. B. Ames.

—From a copy of the Willeston Graphic, shown us by Phil Martin we learn the following of our former townsman; "I. C. Stewart, the harness-maker, is putting up a building adjoining Porter & Petti's poolroom, which he intends occupying as a harness shop. He will probably have the building completed and move into before another week rolls by.

—The graduating ceremonies at the City Hall, on Friday evening, were well attended. The exercises went off smoothly. The graduating class of six members each had an oration. The solos, by Miss Pearl Benham, of Red Wing, were finely rendered and much enjoyed by the audience. The school board was represented by Messrs Borsch and Frazee the former presented the graduates with their diplomas.

—At 3 A. M. Wednesday the fire bell called out the citizens of Delano to find H. Dyers butcher shop, on River street, on fire, the blaze from the rear end illuminating the town. The new fire company was soon on hand and did fine work. The flames were soon extinguished; but the shop has never had such a scrubbing out as the firemen gave it. Most of the building was saved. Mrs. Swedback's millinery store, next dore, was filled with smoke, but the fire did not get in. The new fire company turns out on time and gets the water onto the fire, two essentials in fighting fire.

For Good Roads.

EDITOR GAZETTE: The Fourth of July will soon be here and nothing has as yet been done by the Village on the roads leading into and being in the village limits, as the chuck holes were made this very early spring so they are to-day. The Watertown road is one continuous chuckhole: on the Woodland road, near the Oehrline place, a man driving at a tret may any day break his neck in one of these holes, the road leading to Montrose presents on the hill a chuck hole that might and ought to have been fixed months ago. But the village of course with their $3,500 license money has no time for country jakes, they are all right to come in to trade, bring milk to the creamery and contribute towards the $3,500. The village must grade private lots and provide a bicycle track for the sports. Talking about bicycles reminds me of that harrowing story about a woman from this town walking to St. Cloud to find out in regard to the death of her daughter. I am informed that the son of this woman also sports a bicycle at home, and of course the old woman had to walk ! ! ! times are hard. So by all means let the village provide a bicycle track for the young even if the old folks got to go begging. But seriously if the village thinks they can't afford to fix tne roads let them give back the territory to the town where it formerly belonged and the country jakes will see that they are in a passible condition.

That "Fifty-Cent" Dollar.

The "50-cent dollar" is the product of the "present gold standard." It is the off-spring of silver demonetization and gold appreciation. Legislation made it-legislation by the gold-bug forces Which now denounce their handiwork,

In 1873, under free coinage, there was no "50-cent dollar." The silver dollar in 1873 was worth $1.02 in gold. Legislation by Wall street and Lombard street reduced the value of the silver in the dollar to 50 and 60 cents. The restoroation of the law which existed from 1792 to 1873 will restore to the silver in the dollar the value which it had during 80 years of American free coinage history.

If the government enacts free coinage, there will be no "50-cent dollar." If the man with 412½ grains of standard silver can coin it into a dollar. The Oregon election returns have already abolished the "50-cent dollar" and made it a "54-cent dollar." When the November returns are in from 50 states and territories, and gold monometalism dies, it will be a 100-cent dollar.—Penny Press

Mrs. A. A. Clark of Hamliac, was in Delano, on business Saturday.

T. K. Danforth, of Minneapolis. visited old Delano friends this week.

E. E. Cleveland, of Maple Plain, was a Delano visitor early Monday morning.

Mr. Bruggeman, of St. Paul, was in town Monday, looking after his corner property.

Miss Lizzie Kimball came up to the graduating ceremonies. She returned to Hamline Sunday morning.

Swan Erickson, L. M. Maxfield, and Mrs. Dora Stewart were among those attending the I. O. O. F. convention at St. Paul.

County Cullings.

Petitions are being circulated to ask for a change of venue for J. R. Howard who was indicted for attempted bribery recently, at Buffalo. Arguments are used that it will cost the county so much to carry on the trial. Let it cost; if it is tried honestly and fairly it is money well spent. No such suspicions should be allowed to remain hanging over the fair name of our county.

Democratic County Conention.

Pursuant to call the Democratic County Convention to elect 14 delegates to the State convention met at Buffalo Wednesday. Chairman of the committee, J. C. Nugent called the meeting to order and read the call. M. A. O'Hair was then chosen chairman, and J. C. O'Leary, Secretary.

J. C. Nugent moved a committee of four on credentials be appolnted.

H. Tanner moved a committee of three on permanent organization and three on resolutions be appointed by the chair:

The chair announced as committees the following names:

CREDENTIALS—A. C. Meister, J. D. Murphy, F. L. Aydt, and Owen Daily.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION,—James Madigan, G. A. Ruckoldt, and Levi Cochran.

RESOLUTIONS—H. Tanner, Charles O'Hara and William Ziebarth.

J. C. Nugent moved that a commit' tee of five be appointed to select delegates to the State convention.

Moved by H. Tanner that the committee be appointed by the chair, carried.

Chair appointed as such committee: J. C. Nugent, H. Tanner, Charles O'Hara, Theodore Tilly, Dr. Shannon.

Wm Ziebarth moved to adjourn to 1:30 P. M. Carried.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Chairman O'Hair called the meeting to order.

Jas Madigan of the committee recommended that the temporary organization be made the permanent one. Report adopted.

J. C. Nugent moved that the town of Maple Lake, be represented bv Mr. O'Loughlin.

Annandale by A. P. Ritchie, and Albion by Mr. Dygart. Carried.

H. Tanner of the committee to select 14 delegates to the State Convention reported that the following names had been chosen: J. C. Nugent, Dr. E. A. Shannon, Wm Ziebarth, Theodore Tilly, Charles O'Hara, Levi Cochran, James Madigan, Dr. T. J. Catlin, H. Tanner, John O'Leara, M. A. O'Hair, Owen Daily, F. T. Aydt, J. F. McDonnell.

Mooved that the report be adopted. Carried.

H. Tanner then read the report of the committee on resolutions.

WE deplore the acrion of the U. S. Supreme court in setting aside the Income Tax law, passed by congress and we regret the cowardly and unbusiness like action of the present congress in refusing to meet the constantly recurring deficeincies in the national exchequer. We believe the revenue of the Government should be more than sufficent, to pay its expenses and that the public credit should be maintained at all hazzards.

It was moved "That this delegation should be instructed as a unite to vote on all questions that come before the state convention. Carried.

A. C. Meister then reporten for the committee on credentials, the following entiteled to seats as delegates;

Albion, M. Dygert. Buffalo village, Dr. Shannon and J. C. O'Leara. Buffalo, Peter Bjorkland, Michael Ryan. Delano, M. A. O'Hair, Dr C. B. Ames, and A. C. Meister. Chatham, J. C. Jude, Owen Daily, Patrick White, William Jones. Montrose, J. H. Ferrell, William H. Cress. Franklin, William Ziebarth, Joe Bauman, Frank Schaust, Clark Sturman, Frank Perlitz. Rockford, John Walker, Charles Bughee, and G. A. Ruckoldt. Woodland, Thomas McNealey, Charles O'Hara. Meeting adjourned.

Among Our Exchanges.

The amount of money spent for liquor in one year in the United States would give a year's employment to 1,500,000 men at fifty dollars a month. Do you honestly think that this is an item that can be long ignored?—Minneota Mascot.

The Minnesota university turned out a graduating class of 338 in all departments, last week. Of the twelve highest in percentage of scholarship eleven were girls, which speaks well for the aptitude of the female pupils in their studies. And still they say women are not competent to take a hand in the governmental affairs of our republic.—Litchfield Independent.

Towne has been most elegantly taken in by the experienced managers of the state machine. Merriam-Clough lose nothing by promising the earth to Towne. The state convention meets July 1, and Mr. Towne's friends stand manfully by the state machine. The Sixth district congressional convention will be held on July 16, and the friends of Merriam-Clough will find it exceedingly convenient to be absent from St. Cloud on that day.—Penny Press.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 29, 1896.

A bombshell has been exploded in the camp of the jubilant McKinleyites by the positive announcement that Speaker Reed will not under any circumstances play second fiddle in the McKinley orchestra. Mr. Reed is a thoroughly disgusted man. He thought he had his party in hand as well as he has had the republican majority of the House, and it hurts him to be knocked out by the man who has less ability than any of the prominent candidates for the nomination; and makes him mad to see men who had pledged their support to him falling all over each other to announce their allegiance to McKinley.

President Cleveland was not surprised when Congress passed the River and Harbor bill over his veto, nor has that changed his opinion of the merits of the bill, and predictions are freely made that a very small portion of the money appropriated by the bill, now a law, will be paid out by the present administration. There are more ways to kill a dog than hanging him.

The Butler bill prohibiting the further issue of bonds without the consent of Congress was passed by the Senate, the vote being 32 to 35, silver being the dividing line, but was quickly shelved by the House, which voted to lay it on the table, after it had been adversely reported fom the Ways and Means committee.

Unless the difficulty of keeping a quorum present in the House, which is becoming greater every day, shall delay the transaction of business Congress will adjounn by the middle of next week, probobly a little sooner. But there are several members of the House who stop everything by raising the point of "no quorum" every time they get the opportunity. There is no expectation of doing anything else than to finish up the regular appropriation bills.

Ex-Gov. Campbell, of Ohio, who is considered by many to stand a good show for the democratic nomination, is in Washington. He doesn't believe there will be a split in the party at the Chicago convention. Speaking about it, he said: "I feel quite certain that when the democrats meet in National convention at Chicago they will exercise good enough wisdom and moderation to frame a platform liberal enough and broad enough for all members of the party to stand upon. I believe that conservatism and good sense will prevail, and that differences of opinion will be subordinated to party welfare. The silver men appear to be in the majority and will doubtless exercise the rights always accorded a majority, but that is no reason for imagining that the party will split into fragments, as has been so cheerfully predicted by a good many people who don't in the least know what they are talking about. The democratic party has survived too many ordeals to dread ship wreck now, and it will continue to exist and to win victories as it has been doing from the beginning."

It would be amusing, if it were not such a really serious matter, to see the care with which the republicans in Congress are guarding their talk in Cuban affairs. Such men as Senators Sherman and Chandler, who are talking nothing but ripsnorting jingoism a few weeks ago are now as mum as Quakers on the subject. The reason is that somehow or other the republicans have become convinced that President Cleveland is getting ready to beat Congress at its own game, by an early recognition of the outright independence of Cuba. Whether the President has any such intention is a matter about which those who could speak by authority will not talk. It is probable that the republican scare grew out of President Cleveland saying to Senator Sherman and two other members of the committe on Foreign Relations, who called at the White House to discuss Cuban affairs, that he thought recognition of the independence of Cuba was preferable to recognizing the Cubans as belligerents.

It is now openly conceded even by such sturdy opponents of silver as Secretaries Smith and Morton that a large majority of the delegates to the Chicago convention will be silver men, but there is much less talk of a bolt by the opponents of silver than there was when the control of the convention was in doubt. In fact, a number of the strongest advocates of the gold standard in Congress have voluntarily stated to silver democrats their intention to support loyally the ticket and platform of the Chicago convention. So far the democrats in Congress are doing very little talking about any particular candidate for President, and while most of them have a personal preference there is nothing like a concentration of sentiment upon any one man.

A One-Idea Apostle.

As McKinley's enemies now concede his nomination on the first ballot it is time for his friends to begin to explain what they mean by calling him "the apostle of prosperity."

This sounds well in a Republican family quarrel, and it has been highly effective. But the campaign is not to be a mere family affair. It is to be fought before the people and McKinley is to run on his record. What is there in that record to show that he has the least idea of what business success means?

One idea he has shown in his whole career, and only one. He has done his best to close the markets of the country against foreign trade. When he had an opportunity to carry his purpose into effect he did it in such a clumsy way that he delivered his cause and the cause of protection helpless into the hands of his enemies. Not only the radicalism but the blundering of his bill forced the defeat of his party. Never before did the "free-traders" have opportunity to measure themselves against so vulnerable an opponent. The law checked the prosperity of the country, and what had been a heavy surplus in the Treasury became the deficit which has ever since operated to disturb trade and make it difficult to secure the stability without which prosperity is impossible.

Where is there a weaker candidate the man who stands for the monopoly and restriction that are the curse of American business?—N. Y. World.

HOBERT! HEBERT! Whose he?

MOSES E. CLAPP, undoubtedly the best man the Republicans have for Governor, is having a hard time with Dave Clough, Bill Merriam and the gang. But the rank and file are in favor of Moses, believing him a good man.

WE acknowledge receipt of the Hamline University catalogue for 1895-96. The Minneapolis College of Physicians and Surgeons has become the Medical Department of this institution; a Divinity College of Theology has also been added, which, with the College of Liberal Arts makes this a center of learning among the first. Look them over before going elsewhere for your learning.

IT seems strange, that after all the blowing done by Republicans about Bill Merriman buying his way to the front in politics they will now advocate the re-election of Gov. Clough, whom they have said was not fit for the position, with the expectation that the Governor will appoint Bill Merriam U. S. Senator as soon as C. K. Davis is promoted by McKinley, to a cabinet position. But such is Minnesota Republican politics.

THE late Democratic State Convention to elect delegate to the National Convention which will make the platform for the Democratic party of the U. S. for '96, represented the voters about as much as the caucus in the different precincts all over the counties representing them. Most of the precincts in the state did not hold a primary election, or a caucus of any kind. Whole townships were unrepresented at the county conventions that were held, and even counties were unrepresented at the state convention, and some counties whose full vote was announced did not have a majority of delegates from their county with them. Complaint was made in open convention that 9 votes for some county were being voted by one man. The local papers charge that Sherburne and Meeker our near neighbors held no caucuses and were counted in as full delegations. This sort of thing ought not to be. Chairman Hall announced that the convention had no right to disfrancise Who was to blame for their disfranchisement. Only the voters in the counties unrepresented.

Each voter should take it upon himself to see that under the new law three notices of primary election be posted six days bepore the time for holding it, and that his neighbors all turn out to the polls, and have a fair expression of the voters.

SEVERAL societies in our county started out to get up Fourth of July celebrations in different parts of the county. While we are heartily in favor of every church, society, political party, and every American citizen, celebrating the Fourth of July to his hearts content, we must maintain that it looks too clanish to be in harmony with the true American spirit for any one elan, clique, or society, to take exclusive control of the days exercise in any place. When our Revolutionary fathers shouldered their muskets it mattered not whether they were from this or that country, or to what church or secret society they belonged or if they were members of none. All were good enough to take their places in defense of their homes. So now, when we remember these stirring times by observing this anniversary, every village and hamlet should celebrate in the same manner, our Nation's birth day. If it be necessary or desirable to parade for advertising purposes or for other reasons any society or party, or if any are in need of funds let them choose another day for these purposes. The citizens should celebrate the 4th of July as American citizens; they should as their forefathers stood, elbow to elbow, to defend and protect our land, now stand and work as a whole to celebrate the recurrence of each anniversary of our nations birth. Delano offers to all a welcome to participate in the coming 4th of July celebration in good old American style. Everybody is to be looked upon as an American citizen and an American patriot, and if he is not, at heart, he is out of his element at Delano on the 4th of July.

THE Republicans should have nominated a man for Vice-President as well known the country over, if possible, as their nominee for President. This way of putting up a man for that important office for the purpose of carrying a doubtful state is all wrong and cannot be too stronly denounced. McKinley and Reed would have been strong.

Too Bad.

The government has just completed an immense steel vault in which to store away the $50,000,000 free coinage dollars that can't be forced into circulation.—St. Paul Globe.

It is too bad the goyernment can't get rid of its silver dollars when there is 65,000,000 people in the United States and only, according to the Globe, 50,000,000 silver dollars to be distributed. Why, thats not a dollar apiece, and there are plenty of people about here that would be glad to take even more than one dollar and work to pay for it too. Isn't there some other excuse for piling up the silver dollars in the vaults of the Treasury? That one is entirely too lame, even though it is advanced by the Globe's paragrapher.

Republican County Convention and Primary Election.

A republican County Convention for the County of Wright will be held in Dudley's Opera House in the village of Buffalo, in said County, on Saturday the 27th day of June 1896 at 12 o'clock m. for the purpose of electing nineteen delegates to the Republican State Convention to be held at the city of St. Paul on the first day of July, 1896, to nominate a Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Treasurer and Attorney General. Also to elect twenty delegates to Republican Congressional Convention for the sixth Congressional District of Minnesota to be held at the city of St. Cloud on the 19th day of July, 1896, to nominate a candidate for Congress in said District.

The several election districts in said Wright County are entitled to representation in said county convention as follows: One delegate at large from each election district and one delegate additional for each forty votes or major fraction thereof, cast for Knute Nelson for Governor in 1894, to-wit:

The primary elections for the election of said delegates will be held in all the election districts in said Wright county on Thursday, June 25th, 1896, the polls to be opened at 3 o'clock p. m. and remain open until 5 p. m., said primaries to be conducted under the primary election law: the town and village committees to fix the place for holding the said primary elections, and give at least six days notice thereof as the law requires.

Dated June 1st 1896.

By order of County Committee,
J. T. ALLEY, Chairman.

People's Party County Convention and Primary Election.

A People's Party County Convention for the County of Wright, Minnesota, will be held at 11 A. M. on Monday, the 22nd day of June, 1896, at Buffalo, to elect fourteen (14) delegates to the People's Party convention to be held at Duluth on June 25, 1896, to choose seven (7) delegates and seven (7) alternates to the National People's Party Convention to be held at St. Louis, July 22, 1896.

The several election districts in Wright County will be entitled in said county convention to a representation as follows:

One (1) delegate at large from each election district, and one (1) delegate additional for every twenty-five (25) votes or major fraction thereof cast for S. M. Owen for Governor, as follows, to-wit:

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 12, 1896.

President Cleveland adhered to his sensible rule of refusing to go to the Capitol to sign bills during the last hours of the session, and insisted upon having all bills sent to the White House, where he could give them careful examination, as is usually the custom.

By far the most interesting event of the closing hours of the session of Congress was the short humorous speech made in the House by "Private" John Allen, of Miss. After referring to the "universal criticism" of his silence during the session, he said: "I desire to say, however, that there has been little of this session of Congress to inspire a man to be loquacious. And I want to say further that I am not the only great statesman whose recent career has been destinguished by his silence. There are a good many of us leaders, Mr. Speaker, who have not been talking much lately. But I have not got anybody to go around and certify as to what my views are. I notice that a distinguished gentleman, who they say is about to be nominated for the Presidency of the United States, has a man in every ballwick giving a certificate of what his views on the financial question are, but we cannot hear anything from him. Now, I do submit that people are authorized to certify all sorts of ways for him, for he has certified all sorts of ways for himself in times gone by. I have an number of his speeches in my pocket. I do not know which one he stands on now, but he has stood on all sides of this question, and people are giving out certificates for him on all sides of the question. They say that an egg that goes around the country with a certificate that it is a good egg is not a safe egg to buy, because, they say that egg never starts out with a certificate until it gets under suspicion." Mr. Allen's speech was interrupted at every sentence with laughter and applause and it was evident that Speaker Reed enjoyed his whacks at McKinley.

Gov. Boies, of Iowa, who is himself a candidate for the democratic nomination doesnt take any stock in the idea that Senator Teller, or in fact anybody but a tried and true democrat, will head the ticket nominated by the Chicago convention. In a letter from Gov. Boies, received by a close friend in Washington this week, he says: "It would in my judgement, be absolutely impossible to unite any considerable number of the delegates to that convention in favor of nominating any one outside of the party, for the head of the ticket, at least."

The House and Senate split their differences on the battle ship question, and the bill as sent to the President provided for three battleships, one to be constructed on the Pacific coast, provided it can be done at a cost not exceeding 4 per cent in excess of the price paid for the others, and directs the Secretary of the navy to make no more contracts for armor plate until Congress acts on the subject.

Representative Stallings, of Ala., denounced the remarks made by Representative Linney, of N. C., in favor of the unseating of Representative Underwood, of Ala., which was accomplished by a vote of 116 to 107, as "the dirtiest abuse of his own section ever delivered by a white man".

Secretary Carlisle's answer to the Senate subcommitte which will investigate the bond issues, by direction of a Senate resolution, was given to the papers this week. It is a long document and goes quite fully into the details of the bond issues, giving the reasons for every act of the administration in connection therewith, and showing that the causes originated under Harrison's administration. It is expected that secretary Carlisle will be one of the first witnesses who will be heard when the investigation begins, which will probably be inside of ten days.

Senator Gallinger, of N. H., who has aspirations to help manage McKinley's campaign, was asked what sort of a platform the St. Louis convention would adopt. His reply was: "It will be the kind of a platform that will win." That tells the whole story. While there are a few republicans like Senator Hawley, who is a single standard gold man, and Senator Teller, who is a silver man, who put principle above everything else, the great majority of the party and of the delegates to St. Louis, are only intent upon framing a platform that will win, regardless of principles.

Nearly all the republican members of Congress have gone to St. Louis to help fix up that straddle to be used as the financial plank of the republican platform.

While it is generally believed that McKinley will get the republican nomination, his managers have got to keep wide-awake or they will see him get tricked out of it. There has been a heap of plotting here, and if an opportunity is given them the plotters will upset the McKinley machine.

GRADUATING ORATION.

BY MISS ESTELLA L. DAVIS, OF THE DELANO HIGH SCHOOL.

The Path to Fame.

It is the aspiration of every noble heart entering upon the broad area of life to become famous. In order to do this one must strive to crown every effort with success. Like money, fame must be neither despised nor worshipped, but that it may perpetuate the name of one who has gained it must be obtained by prudence, industry, and perseverance.

We see millions of toiling people struggling along the path of life, hoping at its terminous to enjoy peace, honor and renown.

But while thousands are reaching the lofty hights to which they aspire, thousands are slowly but surely descending to the dark valley of shame. While some may write their names upon the imperishable canvas of fame others will smk to the depths of misery. Which of these destinies will be the evening of each ones life, his labors and efforts must tell.

A firm mind is almost indispensible to success in life. In the life of Henry Clay one of those silver tongued statesmen who made the Senate chamber ring with eloquence we have a fine example of that indominable will and perseverance which makes men famous.

People who are easily persuaded are ill qualified to become famous. A little ridicule or obstacle hardly worth noticing will cause some to bury in the tomb what once was the lofty hight to which they aspired while others are as firm as an oak to stand against such obstacles.

Great achievements may be planned, but unless every effort is put forth to perform them they are in the end nothing more than at first; mere air-castles. A poor mariner it is who does not dare to brave a storm. Little we think of a hero who stands in the rear of battle for fear of death.

We would have sneered at our American heroine, Dr. Grace Kimball, had she left Armenia when the trouble began, but now that she has remained and had courage to stay and aid them we look to her as one of our truly famous women.

Our American poet, Holland, has said:

"Heaven is not reached by a single bound,
But we build the ladder on which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And mount its summit, round by round."

It is said that the painter West might have become great had he not been rewarded by too early success. This should be remembered, for how often others have given up in despair because the goal of their ambition was not reached as soon as desired. There must always be a bud before a blossom and both before the fruit. The acorn must grow for years before we have the sturdy oak. Our success does not go before us to light up our path but follows to make that path shine ever afterward. Lord Byron has said: "Though fame is smoke its fumes are frankincense to human thought." This is so only when our fame is true. For there is a false fame and this when gained by some impulsive act or brave deed done by chance lasts only long enough to make the world darker for its owner after it is gone. Patience and perseverence are the keys which unlock the gate which leads to success. Many of our greatest men and women have been nearly half of a century in attracting the admiring notice of mankind, but their star will never fade from the heavens, and their name will be handed down to remote generations.

A man possessing an irresistable faith and determination can be depressed by no misfortune. Under these principles great obstacles have been and will be surmounted. One of the greatest causes of failure in this life is discouragement.

Egotism and vanity only detract from fame. When we see a person who is vane enough to praise his own deeds, however great or small, do we not think he deserves to be punished by the silence of others. We often soil our brightest deeds by magnifying them. Likewise the praise and flattery of our friends, instead of being helps to aid us on our journey are difficulties which must be overcome.

If we would become famous, we must remember that the head which wears a crown will surely be the target of numerous weapons hurled against it by men who have not been powerful enough to gain the loft hight it has reached. But Envy and Persecution are darts hurled against true fame only to fall harmless at its feet and strengthen that which they cannot overthrow.

That a child has been born of humble parentage need not hinder him on his road to eminence. Many a boy and girl has started out in life from a lowly cottage and struggling against a sea of obstructions has cast a light upon the world which will never die.

As an example take the boy who was born in the little log cabin in Elizabeth town Ky., and although quick and eager to learn was forced to earn his own bread at an early age and consequently had to gain most of his education at spare moments.

Later he is found as a store keeper, a surveyor, studying law, in the legislature and at last President of the United States.

Does any American boy or girl need to be told his name? No. For we have learned to look to him with the greatest love and honor.

Success is rarely, and still more rarely safely gained at a bound. It requires no small effort of the will to struggle onward year after year to gain knowledge and experience for the use of which no opportunity seems to present itself, but remember:

"The hights, by great men reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward through the night."

ESTELLA L. DAVIS.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD NEWS.

There will be a grand celebration here on the 4th. of July, everybody come to Rockford and have a good time. There will be games and races of all kinds also a large dancing pavillion on the grounds. Howard's Picaninny Band of twenty pieces will furnish music for the day.

There is to be a game of base ball between the Montrose and Rockford teams, next Saturday, the 20th. Inst.

As the correspondence came too late we were not able to publish the rest.

McGary Again.

MR. EDITOR.—For sometime past, according to reports, it has been first class cyclone weather in many of our neighboring states, but with us at present we are having good corn weather, the first corn weather we have had this season.

On last Saturday morning the sweet song of the early bird awoke me from my slumber, and on getting out of bed I was reminded at that very moment there was an engagement due with a friend of mine to accompany him to Minneapolis over the vehicle route to attend a kind of peoples' convention, being in the interest of the tax payers of Hennepin county, outside of the city of Minneapolis. Our horse was true and sturdy and we arrived on schedule time.

The meeting was called for 1:30 P. M. to be in the criminal court room of the old court house. (you know it would not do for farmers to meet in the new court house). At the hour of the meeting there was quite a respectable number present and the business was begun. B. F. Shaver, of Long Lake, was elected chairman, and T. Baily, of Bloomington, Secretary. The first business in order was to find out whether or not it was to be a partisan organization or a free fight for all. This caused some little discussion pro and con, but it was finally decided that the organization must be political and of the republican variety, so this debarred your correspondent out, but many of the best men in the meeting opposed its being a partisan organization but it was very plain to be seen that there was some present who had an ax to grind and so it was declared a political organization. One of my friends in the meeting said in his speech he thought I would yet swear allegiance to the Republican party. I arose to my feet and said I would swear allegiance to nothing save my country and the flag. The money question was not brought up in the meeting but I found in private conversation that there was a good many free silver men in the crowd, also had a private talk with County Attorney Nye, found him a free silver man and well posted on the issues of the day.

Transacted some little business, looked over the new court house some, (That mammouth monument to Shylock and his bloody gang). In asking our County Commissioner if he could do anything for our town in the way of giving money for roads, said he would do what he could, that we would get some any way, but must first pay $86,000 interest on the new court house by the first of July, this he says goes to Wall Street.

Now if Wall street, New York, and Lombard Street, London, own us financially, it would seem that our case is almost hopeless.

But Mr. Editor I will take up no more space in your valuable paper, but would say I am just now reminded that the national republican convention at St. Louis is on and that the contention will be long and loud.

Through force of habit a good many Republican papers keep sneering at the Democrats for resolving for free silver. The time may come when they would like to steal the Democrats thunder in that respect. J. H. M.

McKinley and Hobert on the Golden Platform.

The Republican National Convention, at St. Louis, adopted the gold platform presented by ex-Goyerno Merriam, of Minnesota, and nominated William McKinley, of Ohio, for President, and Garret A. Hobart, of New Jersey, for Vice President Several of the prominent silver delegates withdrew from the convention, and have declared themselves as in favor of a silver movement in opposition to this.

Congressman C. A. Towne at the Sixth Minnesota district, has declared that whereas the Republican party has forsaken its beaten paths on the money question, which he considers the issue of the coming campaign he will run Independent for re-election to Congress.

A Minnesota teacher used a piece of rubber hose on a pupil in place of the regulation birch. It gave the boy a pneumatic tire.

The glass put out by the tornadoes has caused a greatly increased glass output by the glass factories. It was, in fact, a trade wind.

A man without money or standing in the community never has an expensive disease like appendicitis. His exit is via stomach trouble and heart failure.

People who have been picked up, thrown down and jumped on will be pleased to read that a tornado has three motions—an upward motion, a downward motion and a rotary motion.

Von Kotze, the German duelist, who was sentenced to prison for two or three years, has had his term commuted to a week. It is now in order for the other noblemen whom he has marked for slaughter to take to the woods.

The immense corn crop of last year is followed by an immense production of pork this year. One was the natural consequence of the other. With grain plentiful and cheap, hogs have been better fed than is ordinarily the case.

The Massachusetts legislature has passed a law defining the tramp. The class is held to include the persons who roam about the country with no visible means of support and who ask for food or other assistance. This gives the tramp a legal status, but the honor will be anything but satisfactory to him, since it makes more easy the application of the vagrancy penalties.

Sara Bernhardt has returned to Paris, and has taken an early occasion to pay a graceful tribute to the women of the United States, which conveys by indirection a similar compliment to its men. She says: "The one who makes law in America, gives tone, and invents fashion, is woman, and the American woman is intelligent, educated, and refined beyond anything imaginable."

Death in a horrible form accompanied the unexampled magnificence of the coronation fetes at Moscow. It was the grimmest of irony that an occasion designed especially to give delight to the peasants was turned into an awful tragedy, and that over 1,300 persons were killed in efforts to reach the food and other articles which the Russian czar's largess had provided.

In California a federal court has decided that the children of Chinese parents who were born in this country, can vote on attaining majority. This new voting element is getting quite large in California and an effort is making to have the supreme court decide on the question. The decision is obviously correct. The children of other aliens born in this country are American citizens without naturalization.

It is one of the privileges and duties of the mayor of even Greater New York to unite in marriage lovers who call upon him. The other day he performed this duty and neglected "to salute the bride" until she pursed up her lips and did not propose to move until the ceremony was completed. A leading paper plainly tells Mayor Strong that if he has got too old to salute the brides "he had better resign at once." The public will not sanction such official dereliction.

The very latest argument offered in favor of wheeling is that the bicycle is the means of drawing together husband and wife in the performance of a common exercise. The husband has no longer any reason for taking exercise alone when his wife can accompany him. The healthy development of strength, the purity of the open air, help to give joy and health, to create between man and woman that good fellowship of the road that will last through the journey of life, etc.

The execution of Mrs. Annie Dyer in Newgate prison in London removes one of the most remarkable criminals of the age. Children were her victims, and it is believed that the list of her murders will easily reach 60, and perhaps 100. She traded on the indiscretions of society, and an awful fact brought out in her trial was that many of the mothers knew in advance what would be the fate of their children. She cloaked her nefarious life in a show of piety, and it was only after repeated charges had been made against her that conviction could be obtained and just punishment meted out.

There are plans and plans to prevent disaster by tornado and flood, but before such floods as that of Johnstown, and before such tornadoes as that of St. Louis, all the works of man are as nothing. The strongest bridge, the most solidly built structures, foundations that should last under ordinary circumstances through ages, all are as playthings in the grasp of the hurricane. High buildings fare no worse than low ones. Great warehouses are crushed, while sky-scrapers stand. After he has done his best man stands in the earthquake, or the flood, or the hurricane as helpless as if he had made no effort.

The rivalry between two distinguished Arctic explorers for the possession of a few dozen tons of meteorite now imbedded in the soil of Greenland promises to furnish novel entertainment this summer. Prof. Peary says he saw the heavenly contribution first, and Prof. Dyche, of Kansas, says he will be satisfied if he can get it first, and each has given rush orders for an expedition to set out and gather in the coveted mass. It is to be hoped that one or both will bring some of the treasure back with them, as the public would relish the novelty of getting some more tangible substance from expeditions to that clime.

THE CONVENTION OPENS

Charles W. Fairbanks Chosen Temporary Chairman.

The Platform Will Declare For Gold, While the Radical Silver Men Will Prepare a Declaration that May Mean a Bolt.

St. Louis, June 16.—The national Republican convention was called to order promptly at 12 o'clock by National Committeeman Carter, in a few brief words.

He named Charles W. Fairbanks, of Indiana, as temporary president, who was chosen without opposition.

Mr. Fairbank's address dealing, as it did, with a review of the existing situation was not designed to fire the imagination. The telling points which Mr. Fairbanks made were, however, appreciated and applauded. When he reached that portion of his speech enunciating the Republican doctrine of the currency his first reference to the party's friendship for silver was marked by scattering applause over the western and middle states delegations which was increased perceptibly by the acquisition of the emphatic applause of the eastern delegates when he added that the party believed in the maintenance of the present standard. "Solid gold," shouted some of the enthusiastic Massachusetts delegation. The demonstration reached its climax when he announced the unalterable opposition of the party to a "fifty cent dollar." The silver people from the West, headed by Senator Teller, however, took no part in the demonstration. They sat perfectly silent. Senator Teller's lip curled with scorn. The magnetic name of Blaine as he attributed to the great Republican idol the authorship of reciprocity, carried hundreds of men to their feet and was the signal for cheers from all parts of the house. His expression of sympathy for struggling Cuba were also warmly greeted. As he closed with a declaration that the issue was protection and honest money against free trade and free silver the convention heartily cheered.

The committe on resolutions organized by electing Foraker of Ohio chairman over Dubois of Idaho by a vote of 35 to 4, the silver men voting for Dubois. There were twelve members absent. The test vote shows the feeling of the resolutions committee on the money question.

The sub-committee on resolutions have adopted the following financial plank:

The republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for resumption of specie payments in 1879, since then every dollar has been as good as gold.

"We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are, therefore, opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained, the existing gold standard must be preserved. All our silver and paper currency now in circulation must be maintained at a parity with gold, and we favor all measures designed to maintain inviolably the obligations of the United States and all our money, whether coin or paper, at the present standard, the standard of the most enlightened nations of the earth.

"We favor restoring the early American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine and the protection of our shipping in the foreign carrying trade, so that American shipping, the product of American labor, employed in American shipyards, sailing under the stars and stripes, and manned, officered and owned by Americans, may regain the carrying of our foreign commerce."

Civil service reform is approved and the extension of the principle wherever practicable. The use of public money for sectarian purposes, and the union of church and state are opposed. A declaration is made in favor of arbitration between employers and employes but no specific legislation is demanded.

A declaration is made in favor of liberal pensions, and the present administration is denounced for dropping from the rolls without examination deserving soldiers.

The building of the Nicaragua canal by the United States government is favored.

Minneapolis is well advertised by comparison with four years ago. The accoustic properties of the hall here are of the worst possible kind.

LITTLE FUNNIGRAPHS.

She—"When they hear you are going to be married, dear, won't they raise your salary?" He—"I am afraid not, darling; they have heard it so often before."—Truth.

"Mary, I hope you took good care of my animals while I was away." "Indeed I did; only once I forgot to feed the cat." "I hope she didn't suffer." "O, no! She ate the canary and the parrot."—Fliegende Blatter.

Bobrey—"Did Mr. Slimpley buy those tickets you expected to sell him for the concert in aid of the orphan asylum?" Gimbey—"No; but he promised to write a letter expressive of his sympathy for the glorious cause."—Roxbury Gazette.

"Standing committees in our club?" said the new woman. "Certainly. All formed of members who are in the habit of riding in the trolley cars." The man, in conscious guilt, blushed vociferously, as Mr. Stephen Crane might say.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE SESSION ENDS.

Both Branches of Congress Adjourn Sine Die.

Vice President Stevenson and Speaker Reed Receive Votes of Thanks—Their Remarks on Closing the Session.

Washington, June 12.—If the first session of the Fifty-fourth congress has been a "do-nothing session," as had been predicted, the closing day of the senate furnished a fitting culmination to the session. It was a day of inactive drifting, a laborious effort to kill time by doing nothing until four o'clock, when, according to the concurrent resolution agreed to Wednesday, the two houses were to adjourn. The senate was called to order at 11 o'clock, when the District of Columbia appropriation bill was received and immediately signed by the vice president, thus disposing of the last of the general appropriation bills, so far as the legislative branch was concerned. A bill was passed granting a pension to the widow of Gen. W. H. Gibson, of Ohio.

The Adjournment.

At 1:20 a recess was taken until three o'clock, when the usual resolutions of thanks to the vice president and president pro-tempore were offered by Senator Allison, of Iowa, and Harris, of Tennessee, respectively, and unanimously agreed to. Promptly at four o'clock the vice president arose and slowly and clearly delivered the following valedictory, at the close of which the gavel fell and the senate stood adjourned sine die:

"Senators: I am deeply touched by the resolutions personal to myself adopted by the senate. It has been my earnest endeavor impartially to execute the rules prescribed for the guidance of this body. For the aid you have so generously given me in the discharge of the duties that pertain to this office, as well as for the courtesy uniformly shown me, I am profoundly grateful. And now wishing each of you a safe return to homes and constituents, it only remains for me to declare the first session of the Fifty-fourth congress adjourned without day."

Last Session of the House.

Washington, June 12.—The first session of the Fifty-fourth congress gently and quietly, almost without incident, glided into history Thursday at four o'clock, the shortest "long" session of congress, with two exceptions, in the history of the government. In the course of the session a number of private pension and relief bills were passed, and Representatives Pitney (rep., N. J.), Blue (rep., Kan.) and Dockery (dem., Mo.) were appointed members on the part of the house of the commission to sit during the summer and investigate the charities of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Turner, the second democratic member of the committee on ways and means, acting for the minority in the absence of ex-Speaker Crisp, offered a resolution thanking Speaker Reed for the "ability, faithfulness and strict impartiality" with which he had discharged the duties of his difficult position; and at the suggestion of Mr. Dockery and other democrats there was a rising vote that the expression of heartiness back of the resolution might thereby be emphasized. As the hour for adjournment arrived Speaker Reed closed the session with the following remarks:

"Gentlemen of the house of representatives: Before pronouncing those words which close the session, I desire to offer to the house my grateful recognition of its kindness. The thanks of the house of representatives is always a high honor, but is especially so at the end of a session where the speaker has been forced to say "No" more times, perhaps, than in the history of any other congress. While thanking you for your kindness to me, I must congratulate the house on its conduct of the public business. Ordinarily, a majority of two and a half to one, a majority of 150, means disorganization, faction and discord. In this house 150 new members of both parties have behaved with the steadiness of veterans, and if our connection with other branches of government with different ideas has prevented us from serving the country as we might have done, we at least have behaved with dignity, fairness and credit. With the kindest personal wishes to you all, I again return thanks. By virtue of the concurrent resolution of both branches, I declare this house adjourned without day."

MEXICO MAKES A CONCESSION.

American Troops May Pursue Desperadoes Across the Border.

Washington, June 15.—The most important subject of diplomatic interest recently is the formal agreement and treaty between the United States and Mexico by which armed forces of either government are permitted to cross the Rio Grande in pursuit of renegade Indians or of criminals. It removes a barrier which has greatly hampered the border rangers and regular troops in their efforts to capture men who have committed depredations on American soil and were able to reach the river and cross into Mexico. The concession has been demanded by the United States for many years, but until the present time the request has always been refused.

Thief Kills Himself.

Chicago, June 12.—Confronted with the evidence of his guilt and closed in by his accusers, ready to take him into custody, a well-dressed thief, whose name the police have not learned, shot and instantly killed himself Thursday afternoon at the residence of George W. Chamberlin, second vice president of the Commercial Loan and Trust company, No. 4420 Greenwood avenue. The man had attempted to get away with a parcel which a delivery boy had left at the door of the house and was intercepted.

Programme for Warship Michigan.

Washington, June 13.—The designation of the war ships that will take out the several naval militia organizations was made by Secretary Herbert Friday. The Michigan will be at Detroit from July 6 to 11, at Saginaw from July 13 to 18 and at Chicago from July 27 to August 10.

Spring Catch of Seals.

Ottawa, Ont., June 16.—Returns to the fisheries department of the spring catch of seals by Canadian vessels taken off British Columbia and Washington coasts show a decrease of nearly a thousand skins.

Fate of an Assassin.

Constantinople, June 11. — An Armenian spy was assassinated in the vicinity of the Armenian patriarchiate in this city on Monday evening by a member of the Armenian revolutionary committee. The assassin ran away and was pursued by the police patrol, who, after an exciting chase, shot him dead.

Resume Work in Navy Yards.

Washington, June 13.—In view of the approval of the president of the naval appropriation bill orders were telegraphed by the secretary of the navy to commandants of all navy yards to resume work at once.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

Bike Race.

The greatest bicycle race of the year will be pulled off in Minneapolis, arrangements having been completed with Fairmon's manager for that rider to meet John Larson, the "Terrible Swede," in the Flour City. Negotiations have been pending for some time, but the powers behind the throne demanded a guarantee of $2,000 before they would consent to have the race take place in Minneapolie. Atlantic City and Nashville made bids for the event and offered that amount, but Minneapolis was prepared, if similar inducements could be offered. The guarantee has been raised and the race will take place.

A Dirty Thief.

The beautiful gavel made by the pupils of the sloyd training classes and given to the Commercial Club of Minneapolis, was stolen from the rooms of the courthouse, where the manual training exhibit was held. The gavel was not missed until just as the exhibit was closed. It was there early in the evening, and must have been stolen by some one during the evening. It was a fine specimen of the students' work, made of layers of maple, cherry and walnut woods, put together and then turned and polished. It had a letter "C" inlaid in each end.

Victim of a Scorcher.

Philip Rush, seven years of age, residing with his parents at 194 Sherburn street, St. Paul, was fatally injured in a peculiar manner recently. A scorching bicycle fiend ran into the little fellow and the force of the shock threw him under the wheels of an interurban car. The skull was fractured and the doctors had very little hope of saving him, as the nature of the injury necessitated the removal of a square inch of bone from the head.

Disturbed.

The coal companies that operate in the Northwest from the head of the lakes are decidedly disturbed over a threatened demoralization of their business. They have discovered that under the revision of freight rates, which may be adopted, Virginia coal can be delivered in the Twin Cities by all rail shipment at a less rate than the present lake and rail rate via Duluth. That is, for less than the combined rate from the Pennsylvania mines to the Twin Cities via Duluth.

In Doubt.

There seems to be a considerable doubt as to whether the annual eight-oared race between the crews of the Wisconsin 'varsity and the Minnesota Boat Club will be rowed over the Lafayette conrse this year. Usually the race has been rowed on June 22, but this season the Wisconsin crew is due to race the Yale freshman eight at New Haven on June 27, and this makes it necessary to put the Minnetonka event off until July 4.

A Suicide.

John Kuhule, of Rush City, after quarrelling with his wife about some property, left the house in a rage and shortly afterwards was found dead in the woods near his farm. A rope with a noose was lying near by but the post mortem examination showed no evidence of violence, and the supposition is that poison which he took did the work before he could adjust the noose. He was jealous.

PICTURING A SEA FIGHT.

How Instantaneous Photography Figures in the Modern Painter's Art.

Instantaneous photography has made it easy to-day for men with little knowledge of seamanship to place ships and boats under sail in a picture, but in early days, says Temple Bar, the power of doing so correctly was limited to a few men like Stanfield and Capt. Beechy, R. N.

The difficulty of obtaining anything like a reliable description of a sea fight, even from those who had taken part in it, was, according to Stanfield, very great, and he told us how, when planning his picture of "The Battle of Trafalgar," he applied to Capt. Hardy for advice as to the position of the Victory. Hardy's answer being that, owing to the smoke, it was impossible during the height of the action to see beyond the ships alongside, adding: "I am about the worst man you could come to, for some time before that which your picture represents the Victory's tiller ropes had been shot away, and I was below in the steerage attending to them and the helm, and down there we knew so little of what was going on that we continued to load and fire one of her stern guns until ordered from the deck to stop because we were firing into one of our own ships."

Like Loutherbourg, Stanfield had been at sea as a young man, while both owed much of their facility and power of composing a subject to their early training in the scene loft. But I think Loutherbourg greatly surpassed Stanfield as a draughtsman and in knowledge of naval architecture.

Government Lands.

Devils Lake, N. D., June 10.—Register Noble, of the United States land office, says more entries of government land have been made with him in the past 12 months than during any equal period in the history of the office. The splendid crop of 1895 shows the possibilities of the country. Free land, capable of yielding from 30 to 50 bushels of wheat, 18 to 25 of flax and other cereals in proportion to the acre ought not to remain vacant. There is no railroad land grant in the northern part of the state alternating with the government domain, so large parties of homeseekers can find locations near together. The Dunkards, or German Baptist Brethren, now have 16 settlements at various points along the Great Northern Railway.

THE VILLAGE.

The elms are old in the village,
A shelter from rain and sun,
The May winds make a murmur
As over the boughs they run.

'Tis a pleasant sound, but a sweeter
Is the anvil's merry ring,
And the tap, tap of the cobbler,
And the mill wheels, as they sing.

A long, long mile is the village,
When the oxen draw the wain;
And long to the feet of the children,
And long to the funeral train.

The wain is gone to the thicket
For the aromatic pine,
The children are off to the pastures
With the slowly-moving kine;

And the tongue in the belfry is tolling,
To many a hill and glen,
That a soul like the mist of a morning,
Will never come back again.

Oh, a merry time for the living,
With the high boughs overhead;
And down by the Lombardy poplars
Is a sunny home for the dead!
—James H. Morse, in N. Y. Independent.

THE RELIEF CASHIER.

A hansom pulled up at the door of the Westminster branch of the London and Suburbs Banking company. The fare was an elegatly-dressed man of a little over 30, wearing his silk hat just a degree or two out of the perpendicular, and sniffing the carnation in the lapel of his frock coat.

He entered the bank, passed through the private door leading behind the counters and had taken off his hat and coat, while the manager of the branch glanced at the letter he had brought. It was an ordinary letter of introduction from the general manager of the company, stating that the bearer was Arthur Gordon Durrant, whose signature would be found attached, and who had, in accordance with advices previously forwarded, been instructed to join the Westminster branch on temporary service as relief cashier.

The manager having watched this new member of his staff sign the book, mechanically compared the autograph with the firm, bold "Arthur G. Durrant" at the foot of the letter of introduction, handed the newcomer his supply of cash and retired into his own sanctum.

Arthur Gordon Durrant, who had now been with the London and Suburbs Banking company for some years, had long been eagerly anticipating the time when he should become attached to one of the London branches, for it had been Durrant's fate to spend a month or two at most of those branches which were at the greatest distance from the metropolis.

The specific hardship of this destiny will not be apparent until it is mentioned that it was in Kensington that Miss Florence Kendal abode, and that, therefore, Kensington was the center of the universe, according to Durrant's geography.

And, to be perhaps unwarrantably frank about the heart affairs of a lady, Miss Kendal had not heard the news of her admirer's transference to London without revealing a glow of pleasure.

Her father had arranged to call for Arthur at the bank and bring him home to tea; and as the hour of their anticipated arrival approached, the sprightly Florence's trills became merrier, and more critical became her inspections of the pretty dimpled face, framed with clusters of loose and wayward brown curls, which smiled saucily at her whenever she passed a mirror.

But Mr. Kendal came home alone, and a little cloud rapidly traveled over her face and obscured the sunshine which had hitherto played there.

"Where's Arthur?" she demanded, coming frankly to the point with a directness which made her parent avoid her gaze.

"Well," he replied, with marked hesitation, "I don't exactly know. He wasn't at the bank when I called, and I didn't wait."

Perplexity took undisputed possession of Miss Kendal's face, causing her eyes to dilate and her little mouth to open and expose the regular ivory teeth behind her coral lips.

"Why, father," she exclaimed, "you are strange!"

"Can you stand a piece of most unpleasant news, dear?" asked Mr. Kendal, very gravely.

"Tell me, father."

"When I called at the bank Mr. Scotland, the manager, informed me that Arthur Durant had duly arrived at the bank in the morning, had gone out at lunch time and had not returned. His cash was then overhauled, and—shall I go on, Flo?"

The girl would not trust her voice. She nodded a pained assent.

"There was found to be missing $5,000 in gold and a smaller amount in notes. Of course, there was only one inference to be drawn."

"Not that Arthur—" Poor Florence could not frame the sentence. Her father interrupted the attempt.

"Well, my child, there can be no other possible explanation. The young man is now being hunted for all over the country, and the manager told me he had wired to the head office for instructions about issuing a reward."

Had the door opened a second later Florence would have been in hysterics. But her father had involuntarily called: "Come in!" in response to the knock, and the parlor maid tripped over to Mr. Kendal with a card upon the salver.

Had it been a message from a mahatma, precipitated through the substantial ceiling under which he sat, he could not have been more astounded. Suddenly he jumped up, and, without a word, darted through the door.

There in the hall, looking ill and pale, but obviously in the highest spirits his feebleness permitted, stood Arthur Durrant.

It was with a mingling of blank astonishment and distant constraint that Mr. Kendal met the young man's cordial greeting.

But Florence, with a little scream, ran at him, and was caught in an embrace which she returned with an interest which Arthur willingly set off against the father's chilliness.

"My word! it was an adventure, wasn't it?" said Arthur, reluctantly disengaging himself from the fetters around his neck.

Mr. Kendal preserved a noncommittal silence.

"Haven't you heard?" pursued Arthur, correctly divining the meaning of this strange reception. "They've got the couple, and, so far as is at present known, they've recovered every farthing of the money."

"Begin at the commencement, Arthur," said Mr. Kendal, as soon as the house had finished the spinning motion which the rapid succession of startling events had given to it in his distorted impressions.

"It has been done by people who have a good acquaintance with banking practices," he commenced, "as you will see as I proceed. It will turn out to be some former employe of one of our branches, I should think.

"Well, last night—to-day's Monday, isn't it? I'm not myself yet, by any means. Yes, last night, before I had been in my lodgings an hour—I had arrived at Euston at 7:35—I received a note brought by hand, stating that Cecil Horsham, whose name I knew as that of one of our directors, would like to see me immediately on urgent business admitting of no delay, if I would favor him by forgetting for the moment that it was Sunday evening.

"No. 18 Grantham square was the address at the head of the note, and I took a cab there immediately. Of course, being unaware of the exact nature of the business, I thought I would let Mr. Horsham see, at all events, that I was not without intelligence, and I therefore took my bank papers, not dreaming that it could be anything outside of bank affairs.

"You know what fine houses they are in Grantham square? Well, 18 was a handsome place, and I have rarely seen a grander room than that into which I was shown. The pictures were—"

"Yes; leave out the description for the present, Arthur, dear, and you can tell us that afterward."

"Well, it was a place which would have impressed anyone, and that's how it affected me. I had just had time to take in my surroundings when a lady, young-middle-aged, of very stately bearing, richly dressed, came in. Her husband, Mr. Horsham, would not be long. He had taken a cab to the residence of one of the other directors. There was something of vital importance pending, and she hoped I would be worthy of the trust Mr. Horsham had decided to place in me.

"In her grand and yet very pleasing manner she invited me to take a glass of wine while waiting for Mr. Horsham, and she so took it for granted that I would accept her hospitality I did not dream of declining. I drank a glass of claret.

"It was drugged. I must have been overcome by it in a few moments, for I recollect nothing more at this time."

"Oh, how terrible!" ejaculated Florence, in the deepest concern.

"Yes; it's getting quite melodramatic," was Mr. Kendal's comment.

"Don't mind father's interruptions, Arthur. Go on."

"My first sensation on coming round was a most awful racking pain in the head, a feeling such as that left by too much whisky over night—according to all the descriptions I have heard," added Arthur, hastily.

"I involuntarily groaned and was about to turn over on my side, when either a sponge or a handkerchief, saturated, I presume, with chloroform, was clasped over my mouth and nose. I had neither the wit nor the energy to resist, and again I lost consciousness.

"The next time I came round there was, fortunately, nobody in the room, and I had time to regain my presence of mind partially before a man and a woman reentered. I simply pretended to be still under the power of the soporific. The woman—I recognized the tones of the pseudo Mrs. Horsham—suggested that I ought to have a little more chloroform in case I awoke, but the man replied to her that they didn't want to corpse me, and that chloroform was too dangerous to use any more than necessary, as it was sometimes fatal even when administered by skilled doctors.

"However, he was kind enough to add that, when he was gone, the woman was to be sure and send me off again the moment I showed signs of wakefulness.

"Gradually their scraps of conversation revealed to me the nature of the plot, which, I suppose, has been pretty clear to you all along, with your brains free from narcotic control.

"It was about three hours after the man's departure, I should imagine that the woman left, after bending over me and deceiving herself that I was still unconscious.

"Reflection showed me that, as ultimately proved to be the case, these two people had taken these grand apartments and paid a handsome sum in advance, merely with the object of obtaining a place to which to decoy me.

"I rang the bell, got the people of the house to wire to Scotland yard and, then, apparently, relapsed into stupidity, for I remember a doctor attending me before I could make myself intelligible to the police inspector.

"I was able to tell him, thanks to the scraps of conversation I had overheard, that Newhaven, for Dieppe, was the destination of the thieves; and, sure enough, the local police, acting upon instructions, telegraphed to them, met the couple as they detrained and bagged them effectually."

Florence was still looking puzzled, and Arthur had to supply a few more details.

"Don't you see that while they had me there hors du combat in Grantham square the man, armed with my letter of introduction, marched down to the bank and calmly impersonated me? That he could easily do, because there isn't a soul there who had ever seen me. Of course they know the explanation of it all at the bank by now?"

"No," replied Mr. Kendal; "the local inspector who saw the manager doubtless did not known himself at that time, and Mr. Scotland is applying for authority to offer a reward for Arthur Gordon Durrant. But I see he is captured. Flo seems to have him pretty securely, and for a young man with a price upon his head he seems to be fairly happy."—Sketch.

GROWTH OF INSECTS.

Influence of Heredity and of Environment Considered.

Possibly few branches of scientific thought are more active at this time than that which is considering the influence which environment has in governing form and general character. A recent author who objects to the extent to which environment has been carried in forming theories of evolution well remarks that it must have some influence or it could not have captivated so many leaders in scientific philosophy. But he contends that it is a weak and not a strong agent, and is limited in its powers. He illustrates by the common housefly. When an insect emerges from the pupa stage, it has reached its full size.

But there are small houseflies as well as larger ones—these do not grow larger or smaller after being once formed. It must have some "condition of environment" that led to these variations in size. Possibly some inability in one case to make available nutrition at a certain period of growth, made the dwarf, and opposite conditions favored the giant. But heredity is also a potent factor, and is able to hold what has been brought into existence. If the small flies could be so isolated that they would mate with each other only, heredity might result in bringing about a race of small houseflies. Such a race might, under some conditions, be regarded as a species—yet it would be due rather to heredity than to conditions of environment. The great probability would be that when "environment" again acted on some one member of the small race so as to change its puny character, it would be to remand it to the race of giants again, and thus make it again larger.—Meehan's Monthly.

BUILDINGS THAT PUZZLE.

Their Origin and Uses Have Been a Mystery for Centuries.

For centuries past the ingenuity of learned men has been exercised on the Noraghe of Sardinia, but to this day they have no more been able to discover that origin of these famous buildings than had the Romans before them. They were unable to say whether they were used for tombs or fire temples, for trophies of victory, for observatories or merely for human dwelling places.

More than 3,000 of them have been counted in Sardinia, standing on artificial mounds 30 or 60 feet high, and measuring at the base 100 to 300 feet in circumference. They are usually in the shape of towers, built with immense blocks of stone, roughly hewn with hammers. No cement is used in their structure, nor is there any inscription to indicate their origin.

A low entrance at one side leads into a long and lofty passage, communicating by a very low door with a domed chamber beyond. On either side of this small cells have been formed in the walls, a spiral staircase rising steeply from the dome, leads to another, but somewhat smaller chamber above, and again beyond this to be broken top of the Noraghe.

Nothing has been found within these buildings, and to this day their existence is a mystery.

In the same vicinity other buildings have been discovered which are no less puzzling to antiquaries. The general opinion is that they were built for the purpose of burying giants. — London Tit-Bits.

Around the World in Thirty Days.

In connection with the new train de luxe between Ostend and St. Petersburg, the Independence Belge points out that with the completion of the Trans-Siberian railway in 1900 the tour of the world in 30 days will become an accomplished fact. The time of the transit from London to St. Petersburg will be 45 hours, the journey to Port Arthur being performed in 250 hours. From here the steamers of the Russo-American company, now in course of formation, will convey the travelers to San Francisco in seven days, hence ten days will suffice for the return to London. The entire fare is calculated to cost $250 to $400.—N. Y. Sun.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

Let the Dear Girl Hunt Hens Rather Than a Husband.

Much has been said and written on "keeping the boys on the farm," and many pleas have been made urging farmers to give their boys an interest in some kind of stock or crop, and thus make their labor of some pecuniary value to themselves. Every boy likes to have a little money that he may call his own, and that he can spend as he likes. But how is it in regard to the girls? Have you ever seen anything written in regard to "keeping the girls on the farm?" Or are they of so little account that the only thought is to get them married off as quickly as possible, so that some other fellow can support them, and so save that item of expense? I say to farmers, give your girls a chance, and they will beat the boys all "hollow," not only in the thoroughness of their work, but in their enthusiasm for results, and in the results themselves.

But you ask: Shall I set my daughter to planting potatoes or hoeing corn? Or would it be better to start her in business by breaking the two-year-old colt, or the brindle steers, or feeding and caring for the hogs? No, my dear sir; while I have no doubt she would be successful if she undertook to do any of these things, and would surprise you by the results obtained, still it is not necessary for her to engage in any such masculine labor.

Again you ask: What, then, would you have her do? Let me whisper in your ear, the one little word, poultry. Now don't shrug your shoulders and exclaim: "Bosh!" for if you knew it there is more profit in the "hen business," for the amount invested, than in any other stock. And who is more fitted to attend to such "stock" than the daughters of the family? Just try it, if you have one or more daughters that have nothing to do, and are just eating their heads off; invest $150 in poultry, and a house to put it in (the interest on this will be but nine dollars a year); or perhaps you already have some building that, with a few dollars expended for repairs, would answer. Let her keep strict account of all eggs used in the family, sold, or used for setting, all young chickens raised, either for home consumption or market, figuring the value of droppings as worth 25 cents for each mature fowl for the year. Also keep a strict account of all feed used, whether bought or raised on the farm. If you are not surprised at the result, then I would consider you beyond all hope of redemption, and be willing you should jog along in the "good old way," letting the hens spend the winters in idleness, and the girls hunting husbands.

The cuts show pictures of a convenient henhouse, which will accommodate 100 hens, and at the same time is not expensive. It may be constructed of matched boards, or of unmatched, and lined with tarred paper, the smell of which is not offensive, and tends to keep away vermin. If your daughter is not well posted on the "hen business," get for her some good book on poultry. Give her what help you can by advice, etc., and then let her go ahead. By the time she is ready to buy her wedding outfit, she will have the money to pay for it, and thus save you the expense.—Rural New Yorker.

Pests of the Poultry Yard.

This is the season for lice, and it is only the well-kept coops and yards that are free from the vermin. Lice will drive the sitting hens off the nest, will force others to lay on the ground outside, will cause the chicks to droop and die without apparent disease affecting them, will invite disease by debilitating the fowls, and will cause loss where profit should be the result. Do not wait for lice to come, but keep the pests away. Frequent whitewashing of the coops, the rubbing of kerosene oil on the roosts, the sprinkling of tobacco refuse over the nests, and the liberal use of Persian insect powder well dusted into every crack and crevice as well as over the floor, the nests, and everywhere else, will be the only safeguard.

When to Use Soft Food.

One meal of soft food is sufficient, and it should be given early in the morning, warm. No meals are necessary at noon, as it is better to allow the hens to be hungry so as to compel them to scratch than to keep their crops full, in which case they become very fat. At night scatter the grains so that the hens will have a job searching for them. Should any be left over they will be found by the hens the next morning. Soft food may consist of anything that can be fed in that condition. It is the meal to which all the extra foods are added. It should never be very soft, but of a consistancy to allow it to be crumbled.—Prairie Farmer.

What Subirrigation Means.

Subirrigation is understood to mean any system whereby water is applied to the subsoil of field, garden or orchard for the purpose of furnishing the crops growing upon the surface with the proper amount of water for their growth and perfection. This is generally done by means of lines of disjointed tile pipes laid about 20 feet in depth so as to be beyond the reach of a plow or other means of cultivation. Other plans have been tried and all have been failures as far as reported to this office.—C. W. Irish, Chief Irrigation Inquiry, U. S. Dept. of Agr.

SWEET CORN FODDER.

It Has Been Fed with Excellent Results Down in Maine.

Mr. Walker McKeen, secretary of Maine state board of agriculture, says: "Previous to having a silo we fed quite large quantities of sweet corn fodder cured, with excellent results. The best way to manage this after it is cut is to shock carefully and allow it to dry thoroughly, then dray to the barn and pack, preferably in a bay, in alternate layers with oats, wheat or barley straw. Make each layer not more than one foot thick. The straw takes up the moisture, prevents molding, and is made better for feed by contact with the corn fodder. We never packed corn with ears on in this way, but see no reason why it would not work equally well, the only objection we can think of would be the danger from mice. If well packed, however, and fed from every day with plenty of oats about the premises we should not fear much damage from this source. If you do not care to try this plan stand as closely as you can in some sheltered place, being sure to have it placed in such a manner that it will remain standing. When feeding if you have a large proportion of corn you will probably get better results by cutting or shredding before feeding. If you have but a small proportion you will have no trouble in feeding it by using a small amount each day along with other fodders. Animals will do well on this fodder. One of the finest and largest herds I know of kept for selling milk in a city is fed largely in winter on this dried corn with ears on, their owner using a large cutter, and two-horse power, cutting a week's feed ahead and allowing it to heat slightly. For our own use, however, we should prefer the silo, as there will be a saving of labor and succulent food."

PRETTY ROOF WINDOWS.

The Illustration Tells the Whole Story of Their Construction.

The chambers of many old-fashioned houses are dark and stuffy. They need light and air, which can be secured by letting windows into the roof. Double-roofed dormer windows are not particularly attractive, are quite expensive to build, and frequently leak. Besides they do not give the proper amount of room inside that is needed. A much better plan for roof windows is shown in the accompanying illustration, which tells its own story of construction. Here we have graceful lines and the maximum of room inside, the ceiling of the room finishing flush right out into the addition. In front of the window, if desired, can be constructed a window box for flowers, as shown. In this case a gutter must be placed above the window to catch the drip. The rafters for such a dormer window can be cut from seven-eighths-inch boards, these being perfectly strong to support the weight of the dormer roof, which is, of course, very light. Cut from boards it is very easy to get the curved roof. Such windows can be added to a roof very cheaply and will give the greatest satisfaction, as the writer knows by experience. —Orange Judd Farmer.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

To plow manure deep is to lose a good part of the possible benefit.

Very few animals are as dainty or as choice in their food as sheep.

The health of the animal affects the quality and quantity of the wool.

The first gait to teach the young colt is a good, strong smart walk.

Feed the lambs as soon as they are able to eat, and keep them growing.

Mixed husbandry in gardening and fruit growing is essential to success.

A little boiled linseed meal given in the milk will be found good for colts.

In selecting and breeding horses look for three things, size, action and sense.

Both the fertility and moisture needed by growing crops is taken up by the weeds.

It does not pay to keep all kinds of and all sizes of hogs in the same pen and on the same feed.

A careless hand will often cause more loss than he is worth. Pay a fair price and secure good help.

Under present conditions it does not pay to raise mongrel cattle, as they cost as much as good grades and sell for less.—Farmers' Review.

Hogs on Grass and Clover.

Swine growing can best be made satisfactory by the use of grass and clover fields. This kind of food is for growth and development, which are essential to good size and vitality. Therefore, the ground devoted to grass and clover for this purpose is as profitable as any of the farm. The hog must be grown before he is ready to fatten, and when so grown he is ready to receive the more concentrated foods of corn, linseed meal, etc., for a quick finish for market. It cannot be too strongly urged that the clover field is a large element of profit in the swine economy. On corn diet alone, from start to finish, a 150-pound hog can't be grown in a year, just for the same reason that cider can't be made out of turnips. The muscle-forming element is not in corn sufficiently to do it. The experiment has been made over and over.—Rural World.

Reseeding Clover Meadows.

The Ohio Experiment station is now planning some experiments in attempting to get a stand of clover on fields sown last spring, but which failed to make a perfect stand, owing to the drought. The bare spots in these fields will first be gone over with a sharp spike harrow, or with a disk harrow; crimson clover and common clover will then be sown side by side, and lightly covered in with smoothing harrow. A light seeding of oats as a nurse crop may be added on part of the land, for comparison, but we expect the best results from seeding the clover alone. Last season's experience demonstrated that the nurse crop may prove a robber instead of a nurse, by taking all the water from the soil and leaving none for the clover.

The Steamer Rustler.

Jennings, Mont., June 11. — The steamer Rustler left today on her first trip of 125 miles north to the Fort Steele mining district. She is 140 tons burden, with ample accommodation for passengers, and is the third steamboat now operated on the upper Kootenai river between this point and the mines. The North Star mine has a contract to deliver 7,000 tons of ore this season to the Great Falls smelter. Four Great Northern cars were loaded yesterday and seven today. The East Kootenai mining country is exceedingly rich in placer and quartz, and the indications point to a large development this year. The river and harbor bill just passed by congress over the president's veto gives us $5,000 for the improvement of the river. This will remove several obstructions and materially improve the channel.

—We have got a good Photograph Gallery in town.

—Binder twine is beginning to move. People expect a crop to be tied up.

—Read the notice for bids for a bell and hose tower by the City Council.

—The Watertown mill shipped a car load of flower via Delano this week.

—Junior Epworth League will meet in the M. E. Church Sunday. 3. P. M. A full attendance is desired.

—The new watering fountain for R. R. Ave., has arrived, and it is expected to have it in position and ready for use in a few days.

—Two saloonkeepers have made application for license to sell intoxicating liquors. Read the applications in another column.

—Our band and many of the citizens expect to attend the feast at St. Michels July 2. Everybody says they always have a good time there.

—Delano is getting up an old time Fourth of July Celebration. Everybody and all their friends are invited to participate in the enjoyments of the day.

—Mrs. Maggie Anderson has her house nicely papered and put in repair generally, and intends taking life as easy as possible the the balance of her days.

—The Ladies of the M. E. Church will give a social on the lawn in the Church yard Friday eyening. Ice-cream and cake will be served. Every-body invited.

—Delano has long been noted for her first class Fourth of July celebrations. The committees and citizens generally dont intend this year's celebration shall fall below par. All that is on the programme, is Delano's Motto.

--The Wright County Bank had its doors closed Monday and a sign up conveying to parties interested the intelligence that the officials had gone to Buffalo to attend court. The doors were open again next morning all right.

-The Crickets visited the County seat on Saturday last engaged in three innings of base ball with Buffalo boy's nine. Score 16 to 0. They then gave up the grounds to the Mens clubs of Waverly and Buffalo. This game is reported to have been 9 to 9.

—Notices have been posted that the Village Council will meet at the Recorders office on Monday, June 22, to readjust the assessments of any one who feels himself agrieved on account of his assessment. If you are not satisfied be there and make it known.

—I. Gutzwiller, Jr. has put down a cement sidewalk around the Eagle Office this week. Although not exactly on the grade, it is more in conformity with the ground and the neighbors ideas of grading than the grade established by the surveyor and the then City Council of a few years ago.

—Quite an excitement was occasioned on lower River Street Saturday evening by a heated debate over the subject of riding logs in the water. J. P. Berneck and Henry and John Leudasher, were chief disputants. After the discussion, John Leudasher showed the large assembly how to berl a log, and he didn't get wet either. The water in the river is at a fair stage for such fun now and a log riding contest could easily form one of the chief attractions among the sports of the 4th of July. The sports committee should include this and a tub race in the after supper fun.

—The Delano Cemetary Association held a meeting last Saturday evening, at the office of R. M. Water. Dr. Catlin was chosen chairman, and R. M. Walter acted as Secretary. The resignation of Ole Erwig from the board was accepted. Joseph Van Eman having moved away from town, his place on the board was declared vacant. T. M. Shaw and W. D. Freeman were elected to fill vacancies. The board then elected T. J. Catlin President of the board for the ensuing term. The Secretary was instructed to dun up delinquents. A committee of two, R. M. Walter and W. C. Lewis, was appointed to make estimates for setting out hitching posts and restaking the cemetery lots. The meeting adjourned to meet on Saturday, June 27, at 8 P. M.

—The annual camp meeting of the German M. E. church was held at the beautiful grove on Capt. Seibels farm west of town, commencing on Thursday of last week and closing last Monday night. It was well attended and many old friends shook hands with each other once again. Revs. Reihle and Leihnert well known in this community took part. Through the kindness of the former we are enabled to give our readers a list of the ministers present as follows:

Rev. W. F. Fritz, Pres. Elder, 1018, 13th Ave. S. Minneapolis. Rev. E. J. Blume. 1020, 13th Ave. S. Minneapolis. Rev. J. G. Bauer, 703, 18th Ave. N. Minneapolis. Rev. J. F. Steiner, 208 10th Ave. N. Prof. C. Hertzler, Pres. College, St. Paul Park.

—Roads are fine for bicycles.

—A splendid rain fell last night refreshing nature generally, and making people feel better.

—Quite a numbea of bicyclists ride up from MinneapolisSunday mornings and return in the afternoon.

—Read the graduating oration by Miss. Estella Davis, in this weeks issue. Subject, "Path to Fame."

—Residents of lower River Street complain that the Swine ordinance is not being passed as it was expected it would be.

—A little lime sprinkled about privies and where rubbish has been removed and in the cellar after it is cleaned helps to purify things. Try it.

—Births and deaths must be reported to the Health Officer within ten days after their occurence. Persons neglecting to report are liable to a fine.

--The city council has ordered the poles, and wire for the extension of the electric light system on west side, and also one light at the corner of R. R. Ave. and Fourth Street.

—The Alumni Association of the Delano High School has been organized and officers elected as follows: President Edward Freeman. Secretary and Treasurer Francis Bauman.

—Our school board is quibbling again over hiring teachers. The school must have good teachers and enough of them in order to keep up the high grade established. There are other things that could be retrenched on to much better advantage than teachers salaries, printing for instance, and the furnishing of supplies by members of the board. Retrenchment is all right, but not at the expense of the effeciency of the school.

—The village council met Monday evening; the full board was present.

The usual number of bills were allowed.

The bill of the Eagle Printing Company which was allowed at the last session of the board was reconsidered, and referred to the Company for correction.

Simon Weldelee made application for license to sell intoxicating liquors.

Bids were opened for printing. The bid of the Buffalo Gazette being found the lowest it was elected as the official paper of the Village for the ensuing year.

Bids for painting the Band stand were opened. The Delano Furniture Co. haying bid lowest, takes the job for $13. Committes were instructed to report at the next meeting the probable cost of extending the water and light system to Minneapolis Street on the South side of the track. Also to bring plans and specifications before the board for a tower for drying hose.

County Cullings.

The North Rockford Fourth of July Celebration has been declared off and Rockford is taking steps to get up a good time for all.

John Belden, of Montrose, and Editor Dare, of Elk River, are in the field as Republicans, trying to capture the nomination for the legislature.

It is generally presumed that John Nugent will head the Democratic county ticket as Sheriff this campaign. That would ensure a lively time.

Wright County, it is claimed, will have the expense to stand of the trials set for her court, even though a change of venue is had to another county.

District Court continues to drag along. Some think things might be hustled a little more if witnesses and others were always promptly on hand.

Theodore Petitt and Loxley Culp plead guilty and Petitt was fined $125 or a year in jail. Culp was sentenced to the St. Cloud Reformatory until discharged by law.

Attorney Tarbox, of Monticello, appears to be having clear sailing for the nomination, on the Republican ticket for Judge of the 4th Judicial District. The country is certainly entitled to some recognition on the bench and Mr. Tarbox is said by good authority to be eminently fitted for the position. Of course if the Democrats have up a good man it would be in order to vote for the Democrat, as out of six the Democrats ought to have two counting on the re-election of Judge Seagrave Smith as a foregone conclusion.

Teachers' Training School.

The Teachers' Training School for Wright County will be held at Buffalo, commencing at one o'clock, July 20th and continuing four weeks. E. J. Donaldson, assisted by Misses Hattie Dunton and Rebecca Mattson will have charge of the school. E. O. McFadon will have charge of the class in music during the first week. It will be for the interest of all progressive teachers to be present at the opening and remain during the entire session.

It will not long be possible for those who neglect the opportunities offered by the state for the improvement of teachers to keep up to the standard required by the state It is the duty of the County Superintendent of Schools to select the best material that is offered in candidates for teachers, and among other things considered will be the work done at the training school.

Entered as Second-Class Mail Matter, at the Post Office in Delano, Minn

IT looks reasonable for a Democrat, in favor of free speech, free press, free schools, free trade, and a free country to advocate money good in any country. Both gold and silver as of yore. But how a high protective tariff man can so strenuously stand out for a gold standard to do business with other countries beats all for inconsistency.

IF the Democratic Convention at Chicago makes a platform after the good old fashion; after the pattern adopted when Samuel J. Tilden was elected President; or after the model on which Grover Cleveland was elected there is a good fighting chance for another victory by placing on such a platform a candidate who is known as a genuine, thorough going Democrat. But if they declare for free silver and stick up a high protective tariff man for an opponent to McKinley, it is more than likely they will succeed in doing what they have on several former occasions done, driving to the Republican party a sufficient number of independent voters to elect their man.

THE free silver republicans, if they are in earnest in electing a free silver candidate for President did the right thing in not nominating Teller at once at St. Louis. This would have smacked loudly of trying to capture the plume of office rather than the principle of free silver. The Democrats have had such doses fixed up for them too many times; and they never have worked and are not apt to now. Republicans wouldn't even help to elect old Horace Greeley whose New York Tribune some of them had called their law and Gospel, and Democrats are no more anxious to have a Republican head both tickets now than they were then. If people are in earnest why don't they wait until the Democrats nominate a first class Democrat who favors their principles, then all join in and support him. As for Populists they want low tariff or free trade, so do Democrats, and not anxious to support high protective tariff men for the sake of getting a free silver President. Let Democrats declare their principles, if they have any, and stand by their guns till the ship goes down or until they ride triumphantly into power on their merits and not on their trades and intrigues and alliances. Honesty is the best policy, even in politics.

A Plank Without a Straddle

It seems as if the committee on resolutions at the Republican national convention in St. Louis this week ought to have submitted the following plank for the platform, as embodying the present position of the party on protection and the monetary standard.

We reaffirm the American doctrine of protection, for the purpose of discouraging the purchase of products in foreign markets, and promoting profitable industry in our own country. We favor the gold standard of value, and demand that the currency of the country be made of gold value in foreign markets, for the purpose of encouraging the purchase of products abroad, and pleasing the goldbugs of Europe. We denounce the inconsistency of all political parties but our own, and point with pride to the beautiful harmony of the principles set forth herein.—Brainerd Journal.

Golden Clouds with a Silver Lining.

"All is not gold that glitters." Neither are all the arguments advanced by gold standard advocates unanswerable.

It is claimed that if we have a double standard that silver being the cheaper metal will drive all the gold out of the country. This country for about a century had a standard of both metals. why did not silver drive gold out then?

Gold standard advocates claim to be in favor of bimetallism; to want both gold and silver, equal as money. Why don't they vote for both if they are in favor of both?

How foolish it looks to buy silver and pay 50cts for enough to make a dollar, and try to keep it at par. Why not remonetize it and have it as it always was, a silver dollar as good as a gold dollar anywhere in this country at least?

A great big fuss is made about the endless chain of greenbacks requiring bonds to be sold every little while to redeem them in gold. How much heavier a chain will the people of the United States have forged about their necks when they have established the bimetallism advocated by the gold standard advocates. Want these dollars made out of 50cts. worth of silver all have to be redeemed in gold every time anybody asks for it? Why not remonetize silver when a silver dollar would be worth just as much as a gold dollar in the U. S. at least.

Globe gets a Glimmer.

The St. Paul Globe appears to be as badly at sea on the money question as the veriest tyro in the back woods, and ought not to be so severe in criticising some of its correspondent's articles. This money question, at present, deserves at least an intelligent and fair discussion. Only last week the Globe said: "The government has just completed an immense steel vault in which to store away the $50,000,000 free coinage dollars that can't be forced into circulation." This week, Monday, the Globe, in replying to Mr. C. C. Sylvester, of Madelia, among other things says: "He can not be aware that there is not an ounce of silver bullion belonging to the government in its possession. For all the bullion received under the Sherman act treasury notes were issued, and the bullion is kept as security for their redemption. That is to say every dollar's worth of this silver is already in circulation by means of its paper representative, and the government has no more right to lay hands upon the smallest fraction of it than a banker has to use for his personal expenses the funds of his depositors."

The Globe editor may have taken Sunday to look up the question a little, and has certainly learned something on the money question. There is quite a difference in the Government building a steel vault to hold "free coinage dollars that can't be forced into circulation" and building it to hold dollars "already in circulation by means of its paper representative." Most reading men in this country long since understood the latter explanation to be the fact of the matter; and most of them still insist that there is even now, a seinorage which Congress tried to pass a law to com and which should become a part of the standard money.

We are pleased to learn that the Globe has concluded to base its money arguments more on the condition of things and not on the fine spun golden theories of the Bill Merriam stripe.

The Globe has quite evidently cought a glimmer of light and may yet conclude that the white metal has a place along with gold as it has had before 1873.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19, 1896.

President Cleveland's letter stating that he, "as an unflinching democrat who has been honored by his party and who desires hereafter no greater political privilege than to occupy the place of private in its ranks," could not have been surprising to readers of this correspondence, in which it was positively stated, by authority, many months ago that President Cleveland was not and would not be a candidate before the Chicago convention, and that he would whenever he deemed such action desireable write a letter to that effect. What was stated then has now come to pass. That letter has been written. It was not surprising, either, in view of Mr. Cleveland's consistent opposition to silver, that he should have used that letter to make a fresh attack upon the free coinage of silver. There is a very decided difference of opinion among democrats as to what, if any, effect the President's letter will have upon the Chicago convention, and only time will tell which are right. Republicans say they will use the letter as a campaign document if the Chicago convention adopts a free silver platform.

Secretary Lamont probably talks as little to the public ear as any man in public life, but he has a way of accomplishing what he starts out to do that many more talkative men lack. When Secretary Lamont wrote a letter opposing the bill to revive the grade of Lt. General of the army in order that Gen. Miles might be promoted thereto, and giving the reason for his opposition, many supposing that Congress being anti-administration in both branches would pass the bill just because the administration didn't want it passed, but your Uncle Daniel knew better. If anybody will take the trouble to hunt it down that Miles bill will be found in a committe pigeon hole, nicely covered with dust and cobwebs, and there it will probably remain. You couldn't persuade Sec. Lamont to say a word about it now. He got what he wanted and that ends it with him.

Representative Amos Cumming is admittedly an authority on N. Y. politics. While in Washington this week he said; "I am sanguine that New York will go democratic this year, it matters not what the Chicago convention does on the financial question. The people of New York state are thoroughly disgusted with the reform administration that have produced the Raines bill and other monstrosities of legislation. They are mad all the way through and 90 per cent of them are more interested in turning down a party that encroaches on their liberties and brings back an era of blue law and puritanism than in the platform of a National Convention."

Mr. W. G. Conrad, a banker and cattleman of Montana, and a good democrat, says of the political situation in that state: "The democrats can carry the State for a silver candidate for the Presidency, and if they combine with the populists, which they probably will, they can elect the Govenor easily.

They might carry the legislature, too, but that would not be of supreme importance seeing that no U. S. Senator is to be chosen by that body. Gov. Boies seems to be the favorite Presidential candidates out our way; at least we hear more about him than of the rest. If he gets the nomination there is no doubt of his getting Montana's electoral vote.

Never was the result of a National Convention received in Washington with more apathy than that of the one which has just been held at St. Louis. Of course, when one stops to think, that is not difficult to account for. People do not enthuse over the announcement of a cut and dried affair, and the only thing that was ever for a moment in doubt about that convention was who would be the candidate for Vice President. Czar Reed remained in Washington to hear the news, and if he would only tell what he thinks about it - but he won't. Democrats do not regard the ticket nominated at St. Louis as a strong one. On the contrary, they think it would have been difficult for the convention to have picked out one that would have been weaker. Aside from the enmity of many of the republican leaders because of the methods adopted by Mark Hanna McKinley will fail to get the votes of many republicans who regard him as a one-idea man. The bolt of silver republicans because of the financial plank of the platform makes it doubtful whether McKinley can carry a single western state. In short, it is the opinion of the best informed democrats that if the democrats can't beat McKinley they could not beat anybody, and that the republicans have added very largely to the chances for democratic success.

GRADUATING ORATION.

Woman in Law.

BY MISS ERMA WILDER, OF THE DELANO HIGH SCHOOL.

The point of view changes from time to time according to the instincts and opinions of a generation.

Up to the middle of the present century, refined and educated people, with ages of culture at their backs, hesitated at allowing a woman to work for money. She might of course labor under the home roof without any compensation, but she must not seek employment nor accept a salary. To do this seemed, in the eyes of the people, to be little short of disgrace. Then, a woman's husband worked for her support, or, if she were a spinster, she had her natural protectors, a father or brother on whom she could depend.

Until a very recent date, women constituted, at least nominally, the only recognized aristocracy. From one part of the land to another, one had but to need it, and the uttermost resources of man, in strength, civilty, and kindness were laid at woman's feet. But, in the hot competition of the "new woman period" we have lost something very precious and beautiful in the decline of reverance of woman and yet have gained a counterbalancing good with which we would be reluctant to part.

In days dream-like and mist to you who are older, and almost undreamed of by recent graduates, the woman who had to gain her own livelihood might choose between several lines of employment. She might sew, teach, or in some cases, the art of skillful housekeeping kept the wolf from the door. These three professions, teacher, seamstress, and housekeeper, limited the opportunity for women, while yet there was the dawn of a day quick ening with splendid possibilities. The hedges are now broken down and the paths, for which women long, are open to her, pioneered by brave spirits who went before, dared ridicule, breasted antagonism, defied repulse and could well exclaim in the words of Caesar, "they came, they saw, they conquered."

Ours is another era and with it the point of view is changed. The single woman today, young, strong, and educated, doing nothing for herself is justly regarded with contempt by other women.

Nearly all the professions formerly embraced by men are now open to women.

Law presents a most inviting opportunity to the woman who dares to undertake its duties and fulfil its arduous work. Invincible patience, continual attention to details, power of synthesis, power of analysis, a habit of noticing both sides of a question, are very necessary parts of a woman lawyer's outfit. Why should women study law as a means of gaining a livelihood? For the very same reason that men embrace the profession; for the same reason that has induced women to adopt other professions; and another very good reason is because civilization has arrived at that point where women are no longer conceived as being mentally subordinate to men.

Why should women not study law? One reason why women have so long become debarred from entering this profession is because precedent more than anything else aids the judges in rendering decisions. It may also be partly explained through misinterpretation, on the part of the public of the character of the profession, especially among the clergy is a lawyer looked upon as a person who must frequent courts where trials of all descriptions and natures are held and perhaps be an attorney in some of them. But members of the bar declare such an idea to be very remote from the true state of affairs. The main and important business of a lawyer in regard to a case is, or at least, should be, generally spent in his own private office looking up the details of the case, and the law bearing upon it.

In this profession it seems to be a question of intellectual training rather than sex which should qualify a woman to become a lawyer.

One of our best lawyers, Mrs. Sutro, in one of her essays says "actual experience has proved that in the classes which have been opened to women for the study of law (as since time immemorial they have been to men) women take as high a rank if not higher than men." And are there not a great many avenues of this profession outside of real court practice, where women equal and surpass men in result obtained?

There are also certain fields to which women are particularly adopted by nature. For instance, where the legal interests of women and children are concerned, women lawyers are far more successful than men.

The colleges for the study of law require a thorough educational training before admitting any candidates for the profession and a so-called Regents examination must be taken by all applicants for admission.

Thus we see that women have a great many difficulties to contend with in taking up the study of law, but they can and will succeed.

Shakespear's Portia is not without her parallel in actual life.

There was Deborah in Israel, Aspasia in Greece, and Hortensia in Rome.

Cassandra Fidelis, born in 1465 made her mark as a jurist.

Ages ago Aristotle said "Jurisprudence is the most perfect branch of ethics." Blackstone calls it "a science which distinguishes the criterion of right and wrong; which tends to employ the one and punish or redress the other; which employs in its theory the noblest faculties of the soul and exercises in its practice the cardinal virtues of the heart, a science which is universal in its use and extent, accomodated to each individual, yet comprehending the whole community.

Let women take courage! Let them not underate the difficulties which they will have to surmount in entering upon this profession, but let them go out "from school life into life's school" with a generous independent spirit and lying before them is a glorious future full of golden opportunities furthering the advancement of woman in the profession of law.

LATEST NEWS

Desperate men claiming to hail from Missouri, Texas and Kentucky have comitted murder in our usually quiet State the past week. Last Saturday at Wyoming three men attempted robbery of Dr. Foster of St. Paul and shot Edward Paul, and Jacob Hayes at Wyoming. The murderers were followed by enraged citizens until surrouded where one was shot and the other taken and placed in the Stillwater jail.

On Wednesday two men got into a quarrel with a farmer near Glencoe about a dog which they shot. The farmer sought to have them arrested and when Sheriff Rogers in company with an assistant came up to them and informed them they were under arrest one of them shot the Sheriff. His associate procured help and carried the dead body back to Glencoe when fire bells were rang and about 400 men and boys, from there and other places, joined in the persuit. The two men were captured about twelve miles away and brought back to Glencoe, where Capt. Bean of St. Paul with a company of Militia has been statsoned to prevent a lynching. Minnesota has proven before to be an unsafe State for people to go about shooting at her citizen. Lynch law is wrong but so are the long drawn out trials granted some of the quibbling lawyers over such cases.

A NEW HAVEN inventor has designed a triangular shaped pneumatic bicycle tire. It has all the merits of the ordinary pneumatic tire, and is proof against damage by puncture. If a hole is made, the tire simply becomes a cushion tire, and serves all the purposes of a tire.

PHILADELPHIA is seriously discussing a proposition to appropriate $250,000 with which to filter the water for one district of 100,000 inhabitants as an experiment. In case this should prove satisfactory then arrangements will be made to filter the water supply for the whole city at a much greater outlay and permanently.

THERE are under the ocean, spreading to almost every civilized part of the world, no fewer than 1,167 submarine telegraph cables, having a total length of 142,780 nautical miles, and representing a capital of nearly £40,000,000. To keep these cables in repair requires the exclusive service of 37 specially constructed and equipped telegraph steamers.

AT the public library at Macon there is a barometer made simply of a thin strip of cedar and a thin strip of white pine, placed together and stuck perpendicularly in a base rest of wood. When it is going to rain the strips bend dowa, and when it is to be dry they stand rigidly stiff and straight. It is said to indicate coming storms unfailingly.

A SURVEY of the hills around Dow Center, Col., shows numerous prospects with silver ore assaying from $8 to $100 per ton. On the slope of Dow mountain is the Favorite mine, which gave assays of over $4,000 to the ton at a depth of fifteen feet. The White mine, owned by Denver parties, an assay of $1,200 and a mill run of $68. The Stone mine is down seventy feet and has struck $100 ore.

THE survey of the volcano Popocatepetl, Mexico, for the purpose of determining the best location for an aerial cable railway to the summit, has just been completed. The new railway will be a great attraction to tourists, who will now be able to make the ascent to the summit 18,000 feet above the sea, and also to descend to the crater, where the process of extracting sulphur is now being carried out.

A POTATO tercentenary is proposed in England. In 1596 the first potato was planted in England, in Holborn, about the time that Sir Walter Raleigh was planting the first Irish potato at Youghal, near Cork. For two centuries the potato continued as a botanical curiosity. When first eaten it was a delicacy, sometimes roasted and steeped in sack, or baked with marrow and spice, or preserved and candied.

THE death of Mrs. Robert J. Niven in Paris is expected to bring to another American girl a fortune which will entitle her to be ranked among the richest young women in this country. Miss Edith Collins, the ward of Chauncey M. Depew, is Mrs. Niven's granddaughter, and, as there are no other heirs, it is believed she will inherit her grandmother's estate, which has been estimated at about $7,000,000.

YOSEMITE tourists will thank Gov. Budd, of California, for his efforts to reduce the many overcharges in the famous valley. What he proposes to do is to break up the combine between the railroad and the stage line so as to reduce the fare to $13, to make the hotels give rates graded according to rooms, to furnish greater facilities to camping parties, and to abolish the tolls on certain roads.

THE Buffalo wheelmen are in for a hard time, if the new city bicycle ordinance is enforced to the letter. It prescribes that every person "by means of a bell or whistle shall give proper and sufficient warning upon approaching a pedestrian," so as to enable such pedestrian to avoid a collision. Another part of the ordinance prescribes a penalty of $25 for "any such person who shall fail or neglect to give such warning."

A PLAN is on foot in Philadelphia to prevent any street music—including of course strawberry and potato howling—before nine o'clock in the morning, and after ten o'clock at night. A similar law has gone into effect at Asbury Park. In New York street musicians are forbidden to approach nearer than 500 feet any school house or church, and if warned they must not get nearer than 250 feet to any private dwelling.

IT is announced that England's famous Westminster hall, the home of the two great deliberative and legislative bodies of the British empire, can not last many years longer. The structure, with its beautiful river front, was originally built upon a bog, and the dampness has seriously affected the magnificent building. The floors of the vaults are covered with slime, and the limestone used in the construction is rapidly disintegrating, and all efforts to stop this ravage have ended in failure.

IT is expected that within a year the monument of Gen. George Washington which the Pennsylvania branch of the Society of the Cincinnati is erecting at the Green entrance to Fairmount park, Philadelphia, will be completed. From the top of Washington's hat the monument will measure forty-five feet, while the base is to be ninety-one feet three inches by seventy-seven feet nine inches. It has cost $250,000, and an additional $47,000 will be required to put it in its place. When it is finished the monument will be one of the finest of the many fine ones in the United States.

A MAINE minister recently received a visit from a woman whom he thought "not quite up" in point of intellect. She informed him that she was going to be married, and had come to secure his services in advance. He did not want to be a party to the contract, and politely informed her that she must get some one else. She "flared" in an instant. "You are going to be sorry for this, sir," she said. "Perhaps you didn't know that I attend your church sometimes, and sometimes I talk in meeting." She got married elsewhere, and the parson has scarcely recovered from the rebuff.

M'KINLEY NOMINATED.

Republican Convention Presents His Name for President.

Proceedings of the Big Assembly at St. Louis—Leading Silverites Bolt the Party—Platform Adopted—McKinley and Hobart.

St. Louis, June 19.—At 10:35 Thursday morning the president, Senator Thurston, announced that the divine blessing would be invoked by Rev. John R. Scott, of Florida.

The chairman said the first order of business was the reception of the report of the committee on resolutions, and the chair recognized for that purpose Senator-elect Foraker, of Ohio.

As Mr. Foraker approached the financial plank Mr. Teller left his seat with the Colorado delegation and moved up to the platform where he seated himself at the end of the second row of seats to the right of the chairman. With the opening sentence "the republican party is unreservedly for sound money," which Mr. Foraker read slowly and very emphatically, a burst of cheering occurred, and the applause was repeated with redoubled volume when the pledge to promote international agreement for free coinage was read. The cheering at this point was so prolonged that it interrupted the proceedings for some time and compelled the chairman to rap for order.

Teller Presents Minority Report.

Then the chair, amid the breathless attention of the convention, recognized Senator Teller, who sent to the secretary's desk and had read the following minority report:

"We, the undersigned members of the committee on resolutions, being unable to agree with that portion of the majority report which treats of the subjects of coinage and finance, respectfully submit the following paragraph as a substitute therefor:

"The republican party favors the use of both gold and silver as equal standard money, and pledges its power to secure the free, unrestricted and independent coinage of gold and silver at our mints at the ratio of sixteen parts of silver to one of gold."

Teller Addresses the Convention.

Mr. Teller then advanced to the front and in earnest tones addressed the convention in explanation of his course. He disclaimed that his advocacy of free silver was in any manner controlled by the fact that he represented a state which produced silver. He contended for it because he believed that no country could prosper without it, and because he believed that it was the great weight which was now weighing down the country. Professing tolerance for those who differed from him, he said his decision had been arrived at after many years of deliberate thought. The great contest whether there should be one flag or two in this country was not more important than this. Confronted for the first time in the history of this glorious party of ours with the danger of a financial system which in our judgment would be destructive to the country, they were called upon to decide whether to adhere to it or reject it.

Teller's Substitute Tabled.

Mr. Foraker, of Ohio, chairman of the committee on resolutions, moved to lay Teller's substitute on the table.

Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, seconded the motion.

The yeas and nays were demanded by the states of Colorado, Montana and Idaho and the vote was taken.

The result of the roll call was announced: Yeas, 818½; nays, 105½.

So the motion to lay Senator Teller's substitute free silver plank on the table was carried.

Mr. Foraker was recognized to move the previous question on the passage of the resolutions.

Financial Plank Adopted.

Mr. Dubois demanded a roll call of states on the passage of the financial plank, and Colorado and Montana seconded the call.

The roll call proceeded amid so much confusion that the chairman had to suspend it until order was restored.

The result of the roll call on the question of the adoption of the financial plank was announced: Ayes, 812½; nays, 110½. "And the financial plank is adopted," added the chairman amid cheers.

The rest of the platform was adopted with a ringing chorus of ayes, there being but one solitary "No."

Silver Men's Declaration of Withdrawal.

Mr. Frank Cannon, the youthful senator from Utah, advanced to the platform and with Senator Teller sitting by his side, read in ringing tones and with many gestures the following protest:

"We hold that this convention has seceded from the truth; that the triumph of such secession would be the eventual destruction of our freedom and our civilization. To that end the people will not knowingly follow any political party; and we choose to take our place in the ranks of the great mass of citizens who realize that the hour has come for justice. Did we deem this issue less important to humanity we would yield, since the associations of all our political lives have been intertwined with the men and the measures of this party of past mighty achievements.

Withdrawal from the Party.

"Accepting the flat of this convention as the present purpose of the party, we withdraw from this convention to return to our constituents the authority with which they invested us, believing that we have better discharged their trust by this action which restores to them authority unsullied than by giving cowardly and insincere indorsement to the greatest wrong ever willfully attempted within the republican party—once redeemer of the people, but now about to become their oppressor, unless providentially restrained by the votes of free men."

A Wild Scene.

At Mr. Cannon's closing words, declaring that the republican party, once the redeemer of the people, was now about to become its oppressor, a storm of hisses and groans was raised from all parts of the hall and cries of "Down" were raised.

The chair, with his resonant voice rising above the tumult, said: "The chair suggests to this convention that the republican party in convention assembled need not fear any declaration." Here an outburst of cheers, which lasted several seconds, interrupted the chairman.

"Good-By, My Lovers, Good-By."

The names of the signers to the protest as read by the secretary were treated with hisses, and a voice in the rear called out: "Good-by, My Lovers Good-by," as Senator Teller and his associates then filed out of the hall, marching down the main aisle. The whole convention rose and yelled and waved flags, hats and fans while the band played patriotic airs, the assemblage singing the chorus: "Three Cheers for the Red, White and Blue" to the accompaniment of the band, and shouting till they were hoarse.

Senators Mantle, of Montana, and Brown, of Utah, were recognized. Both protested against the adoption of a gold plank by the convention, but declared they would remain in the party.

THE NOMINATIONS.

McKinley and Hobart Selected as Candidates for President and Vice President.

St. Louis, June 19.—After a ten hours' session in torrid heat and distressing noise the 11th national republican convention named William McKinley, of Ohio, and Garrett A. Hobart, of New Jersey, for president and vice-president, respectively, of the United States. No effort was put forth to carry out the much-talked-of purpose of conferring the second place upon Gov. Levi P. Morton. Mr. Hobart went through on the first ballot with many votes to spare. The chief supporters of the four unsuccessful other candidates for the presidency, Senator Lodge, for Reed; Mr. Hepburn, for Allison; Gov. Hastings, for Quay, and Mr. Depew and Mr. Platt, for Morton, came out in ringing little speeches moving to make McKinley's nomination unanimous and pledging him the loyal support of their respective states. Whatever enthusiasm was lacking in the early days of the convention was supplied when the nominations were made. A more boisterous scene of yelling, plume and banner waving and other manifestations of joy has seldom been heard or seen than that which for nearly half an hour occupied the convention after the nomination of William McKinley. The silver bolt was largely discounted and its effect was to a great extent neutralized by the speeches which Senators Mantle, of Montana, and Brown, of Utah, and others made, declaring their continued allegiance to the republican party, notwithstanding their disappointment on the silver plank.

After the adoption of the platform Chairman Thurston directed the call of states for nominations for the presidency.

Depew Presents Morton.

When the state of New York was called Mr. Sutherland, of Rochester, rose and said that the name of New York's favorite son would be presented by another "favorite son of that state and of all the states, Chauncey M. Depew." Mr. Depew then, in a most eloquent address, nominated Gov. Morton.

As Ohio was called and Gov. Foraker came to the front there was such cheering as had not marked the proceedings of the convention at any previous time. He characterized the four years of democratic administration as one stupendous disaster which had fallen on all alike, the just and the unjust. But this affliction had one compensating advantage, it had destroyed the democratic party. Their approaching national convention was an approaching national nightmare.

No one knew what they were going to do, and no one was seeking the nomination except a limited few who had proclaimed their unfitness by announcing a willingness to stand on any kind of platform. If the republican party made no mistake here, it would be reestablished in control of the government to hold it till Providence in His infinite mercy chose again to chasten the nation. [Laughter and applause.] The people wanted something more than a good business man, a fearless leader, a wise statesman, one who, in addition to all these, presented qualifications which were exactly the opposite of this free-trade, deficit-making, bond-issuing, democratic administration.

"I present to you such a man," said Gov. Foraker, "in William McKinley."

Senator Thurston, of Nebraska, was recognized by Temporary Chairman Hepburn, and seconded the nomination of McKinley.

At the close of Mr. Thurston's effective speech, cries of "Vote" were raised, interspersed with cries for "Quay." In the midst of this Gov. Hastings took the stand and placed in nomination the name of Matthew Stanley Quay.

A Memorable Scene.

All of the states having been called, the president proceeded to state the result of the vote. When he announced that William McKinley had received 661½ votes the scene of an hour ago, during Foraker's address, was repeated. Delegates and spectators arose and cheered and waved flags and banners and the pampas plumes of California; the band struck up "My Country 'Tis of Thee" and cheers and huzzas rent the air.

There was not a single one of the 15,000 or 16,000 people in the great hall who did not do his or her best to swell the sounds of jubilee and to join in the grand popular demonstration in favor of the successful candidate. The women were as enthusiastic as the men. It seemed as if no one would be seated again, and as if orderly proceedings would never more be attempted. One young man on the platform waved on the point of the national banner a laced cocked hat such as the conquerer of Marengo is represented as wearing. This symbol of victory added, if possible, to the enthusiasm, and the noise was swelled by the booming of artillery outside.

At last the president got a chance to continue his announcement of the vote. Thomas B. Reed, he said, had received 54½ votes; Senator Quay, 61½; Levi P. Morton, 58; Senator Allison, 35½, and Don Cameron, 1.

Made It Unanimous.

After quiet had again been restored Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, on behalf of the friends of Mr. Reed offered a motion to make the nomination of Mr. McKinley unanimous. Another wild scene followed his short speech. Gen. Henderson, of Iowa, seconded the motion on behalf of the adherents of Mr. Allison. Thomas C. Platt, on behalf of Mr. Morton's friends, also seconded the motion, and in doing so pledged the state of New York for a mighty majority for the nominee. Gov. Hastings, of Pennsylvania, seconded it for the supporters of Mr. Quay.

Cries of "Mark Hanna" were raised. Mr. Hanna, from the body of the hall, responded in a few words which were almost inaudible in the confusion, pledging himself to take his place in the ranks and work for the election of McKinley.

The chair put the question: "Shall the nomination be made unanimous?" and by a rising vote it was so ordered, and the chair announced that William McKinley, of Ohio, was the candidate of the republican party for president of the United States.

TICKET COMPLETED.

Garrett A. Hobart Named for Vice President on the First Ballot.

Senator Lodge then offered a motion to proceed to the nomination of a candidate for vice-president, and that nominating speeches be limited to five minutes. Notwithstanding many expressions of dissent and cries to adjourn this motion was declared carried, and at 6:20 p. m., the convention having now been in continuous session nearly eight hours and a half, the roll of states was called for nominations for vice-president. When Connecticut was reached Samuel J. Fessenden took the stand and placed in nomination ex-Gov. Morgan C. Bulkeley, of Connecticut.

When New Jersey was reached on the roll Hon. J. Franklin Fort, of that state, arose and said:

"I rise to present to this convention the claims of New Jersey for the vice-presidency. We come because we feel that we can for the first time in our history bring to you a promise that our electoral vote will be cast for your nominees. If you comply with our request this promise will surely be redeemed. We believe that the vice-presidency in 1896 should be given to New Jersey. We have reasons for our opinion. We have ten electoral votes; we have carried the state in the elections of 93, '94 and '95. We hope and believe we can keep the state in the republican column for all time. By your action to-day you can greatly aid us.

"Not for himself, but for our state; not for his ambition, but to give to the nation the highest type of public official, do we come to this convention by the command of our state, and in the name of the republican party of New Jersey—unconquered and unconquerable, undivided and indivisible—with one united voice speaking for all that counts for good citizenship in our state, and nominate to you for the office of vice-president of this republic Garrett A. Hobart, of New Jersey."

The roll call of states was resumed, and New York made no nomination. When the state of Rhode Island was called, Mr. Allen, of Rhode Island, came to the stand and nominated for the vice-presidency Charles Warren Lippitt. When the state of Tennessee was called, Mr. Randolph, a delegate from that state, nominated for the vice-presidency Henry Clay Evans, of Tennessee. The nomination of Mr. Evans was seconded by Mr. Smith, of Kentucky (a colored delegate). Mr. I. C. Walker, of Virginia (colored), put in nomination his fellow delegate, James A. Walker.

The balloting for vice-president then began. The call had only proceeded as far as South Dakota when it became evident that Hobart had been nominated on the first ballot, and the delegates and the crowd in the galleries began to leave.

For Vice President.

The following is the detailed vote for vice president:

Total vote, 895.

Necessary to choice, 448.

The chair then formally declared Garrett A. Hobart, of New Jersey, the nominee of the convention for vice-president of the United States.

The Convention Ends.

The chair informed the convention that it would be necessary to appoint two committees to wait upon the nominees for president and vice-president and notify them of their nomination, and he requested the delegations from the various states to choose two of its members to act on these committees, which, he said, would meet this morning at the Southern hotel. Resolutions were offered and agreed to appointing the chairman (Mr. Thurston) and the temporary chairman (Mr. Fairbanks) chairmen, respectively, of the two committees to notify the nominees for president and vice-president.

The roll call for the committees being completed, the convention at 7:51 p. m. adjourned sine die.

ITS CREED.

Text of the Platform Adopted by the Republican Party.

St. Louis, June 19.—Following is the full text of the platform adopted Thursday by the national republican convention:

"The republicans of the United States, assembled by their representatives in national convention, appealing to the popular and historical justification of their claims to the matchless achievements of 30 years of republican rule, earnestly and confidently address themselves to the awakened intelligence, experience and conscience of their countrymen in the following declaration of facts and principles:

"For the first time since the civil war the American people have witnessed the calamitous consequences of full and unrestricted democratic control of the government. It has been a record of unparalleled incapacity, dishonor and disaster. In administrative management it has ruthlessly sacrificed indispensable revenue, entailed an unceasing deficit, eked out ordinary current expenses with borrowed money, piled up the public debt by $262,000,000 in time of peace, forced an adverse balance of trade, kept a perpetual menace hanging over the redemption fund, pawned American credit to alien syndicates, and reversed all the measures and results of successful republican rule. In the broad effect of its policy it has precipitated panic, blighted industry and trade with prolonged depression, closed factories, reduced work and wages, halted enterprise, and crippled American production while stimulating foreign production for the American market.

"Every consideration of public safety and individual interest demands that the government shall be rescued from the hands of those who have shown themselves incapable to conduct it without disaster at home and dishonor abroad, and shall be restored to the party which for 30 years administered it with unequaled success and prosperity. And in this connection we heartily indorse the wisdom, the patriotism and the success of the administration of President Harrison.

Tariff.

"We renew and emphasize our allegiance to the policy of protection as the bulwark of American industrial independence and the foundation of American development and prosperity. This true American policy taxes foreign products and encourages home industry; it puts the burden of revenue on foreign goods; it secures the American market for the American producer; it upholds the American standard of wages for the American workingman; it puts the factory by the side of the farm, and makes the American farmer less dependent on foreign demand and price; it diffuses general thrift, and founds the strength of all on the strength of each. In its reasonable application it is just, fair and impartial, equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly, to sectional discrimination and individual favoritism.

"We denounce the present democratic tariff as sectional, injurious to the public credit, and destructive to business enterprise. We demand such an equitable tariff on foreign imports which come into competition with American products as will not only furnish adequate revenue for the necessary expenses of the government, but will protect American labor from degradation to the wage level of other lands.

"We are not pledged to any particular schedules. The question of rates is a practical question, to be governed by the conditions of the time and of production; the ruling and uncompromising principle is the protection and development of American labor and industry. The country demands a right settlement and then it wants rest.

Reciprocity.

"We believe the repeal of the reciprocity arrangements negotiated by the last republican administration was a national calamity, and we demand their renewal and extension on such terms as will equalize our trade with other nations, remove the restrictions which now obstruct the sale of American products in the ports of other countries, and secure enlarged markets for the products of our farms, forests and factories.

"Protection and reciprocity are twin measures of republican policy and go hand in hand. Democratic rule has recklessly struck down both and both must be reestablished. Protection for what we produce; free admission for the necessaries of life which we do not produce; reciprocal agreements of mutual interests which gain open markets for us in return for our open market to others. Protection builds up domestic industry and trade, and secures our own market for ourselves, reciprocity builds up foreign trade and finds an outlet for our surplus.

Sugar.

"We condemn the present administration for not keeping faith with the sugar producers of this country. The republican party favors such protection as will lead to the production on American soil of all the sugar which the American people use, and for which they pay other countries more than $100,000,000 annually.

Wool and Woolens.

"To all our products—to those of the mine and the field as well as to those of the shop and the factory—to hemp, to wool, the product of the great industry of sheep husbandry, as well as to the finished woolens of the mill—we promise the most ample protection.

Merchant Marine.

"We favor restoring the early American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine and the protection of our shipping in the foreign-carrying trade, so that American ships—the product of American labor, employed in American shipyards, sailing under the stars and stripes, and manned, officered and owned by American citizens, may regain the carrying of our foreign commerce.

Money.

"The republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1879; since then every dollar has been as good as gold.

"We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved.

"All our silver and paper currency must be maintained at parity with gold, and we favor all measures designed to maintain inviolably the obligations of the United States and all our money, whether coin or paper, at the present standard, the standard of the most enlightened nations of the earth.

Pensions.

"The veterans of the union army deserve and should receive fair treatment and generous recognition. Whenever practicable they should be given the preference in the matter of employment, and they are entitled to the enactment of such laws as are best calculated to secure the fulfillment of the pledges made to them in the dark days of the country's peril.

"We denounce the practice in the pension bureau, so recklessly and unjustly carried on by the present administration, of reducing pensions and arbitrarily dropping names from the rolls, as deserving the severest condemnation of the American people.

Foreign Relations.

"Our foreign policy should be at all times firm, vigorous and dignified, and all our interests in the western hemisphere carefully watched and guarded.

"The Hawaiian islands should be controlled by the United States, and no foreign power should be permitted to interfere with them.

"The Nicaraguan canal should be built, owned and operated by the United States; and by the purchase of the Danish islands we should secure a proper and much needed naval station in the West Indies.

Armenian Massacres.

"The massacres in Armenia have aroused the deep sympathy and just indignation of the American people, and we believe that the United States should exercise all the influence it can properly exert to bring these atrocities to an end. In Turkey American residents have been exposed to the gravest dangers and American property destroyed. There and everywhere American citizens and American property must be absolutely protected at all hazards, and at any cost.

Monroe Doctrine.

"We reassert the Monroe doctrine in its full extent, and we reaffirm the right of the United States to give the doctrine effect by responding to the appeals of any American state for friendly intervention in case of European encroachment. We have not interfered and shall not interfere with the existing possessions of any European power in this hemisphere, but those possessions must not on any pretext be extended.

"We hopefully look forward to the eventual withdrawal of the European powers from this hemisphere, and to the ultimate union of all the English-speaking part of the continent by the free consent of its inhabitants.

Cuba.

"From the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American peoples to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

"The government of Spain, having lost control of Cuba, and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens, or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

The Navy.

"The peace and security of the republic, and the maintenance of its rightful influence among the nations of the earth, demand a naval power commensurate with its position and responsibility. We, therefore, favor the continued enlargement of the navy and a complete system of harbor and seacoast defenses.

Foreign Immigration.

"For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced, and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

Civil Service.

"The civil-service law was placed on the statute book by the republican party, which has always sustained it, and we renew our repeated declarations that it shall be thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable.

Free Ballot.

"We demand that every citizen of the United States shall be allowed to cast one free and unrestricted ballot, and that such ballot shall be counted and returned as cast.

Lynchings.

"We proclaim our unqualified condemnation of the uncivilized and barbarious practice well known as lynching, or killing of human beings, suspected or charged with crime, without process of law.

National Arbitration.

"We favor the creation of a national board of arbitration to settle and adjust differences which may arise between employers and employed engaged in interstate commerce.

Conclusion.

"We believe in an immediate return to the free homestead policy of the republican party, and urge the passage by congress of the satisfactory free homestead measure which has already passed the house and is now pending in the senate.

"We favor the admission of the remaining territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the territories and of the United States. All the federal officers appointed for the territories should be elected from bona fide residents thereof, and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

"We believe the citizens of Alaska should have representation in the congress of the United States, to the end that needful legislation may be intelligently enacted.

"We sympathize with all wise and legitimate efforts to lessen and prevent the evils of intemperance and promote morality.

"The republican party is mindful of the rights and interests of women. Protection of American industries includes equal opportunities, equal pay for equal work, and protection to the home. We favor the admission of women to wider spheres of usefulness and welcome their cooperation in rescuing the country from democratic and populistic mismanagement and misrule.

"Such are the principles and policies of the republican party. By these principles we will abide and these policies we will put into execution. We ask for them the considerate judgment of the American people. Confident alike in the history of our great party and in the justice of our cause, we present our platform and our candidates in the full assurance that the election will bring victory to the republican party and prosperity to the people of the United States."

SHOT THEM DOWN.

A Chicago Thief Killed and His Pal Badly Wounded.

Chicago, June 23.—Birdie Maroney, a well-known Chicago thief, was instantly killed Monday night while trying to hold up a saloon at the corner of Clark and Taylor streets, and his partner, James Bartley, who was with him at the time, was seriously wounded and sent to the county hospital. The two men went into John Clark's saloon Monday morning, and with drawn revolvers took a valuable ring from the finger of the bartender, Jim Harris. No money was secured, as the cash was in a pocket in the skirt of Mrs. Clark. The robbers went away, threatening to return later in the day and find some money. Clark immediately went out and purchased two revolvers. He claims that he stationed himself in a dark place across the street and was on the lookout for the robbers when they returned at night. Maroney had commenced operations by striking the bartender in the face, when Clark entered and commenced firing. Maroney was killed instantly, but Bartley, the other thief, may recover. The place was filled with people of bad character and a panic ensued.

Cheated the Gallows.

Columbia, S. C., June 20.—The sheriff of Aiken county had a trying experience Friday. Some time ago Dan Robertson was convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged Friday. While preparations were being made for the execution about 1:30 o'clock the doomed man suddenly drew a knife which he had in some way secured, and slashed his throat, severing the jugular vein. Sheriff Alderman wired these facts hastily to Gov. Evans asking what he must do. The governor granted a respite of a week, but Robertson has since died.

Arrested the Wrong Man.

London, June 23.—William R. Brown, who was arrested in Liverpool last week as he was landing from the steamer Aurania, upon the strength of a warrant cabled from New York asking the authorities to arrest W. W. Damon, alias W. R. Brown, was arraigned in the Bow street police court Monday morning and discharged, he having proved that the police had arrested the wrong man. Brown claimed to be a director of a bank at Fort Valley, Ga.

Don't Like American Laws.

Catherines, Ont., June 23. — Sir Charles Tupper, premier of Canada, in a political speech here Sunday said he regretted the alien labor legislation of the United States congress and added: "If the Americans persist in carrying out a method so unfair, it will compel the government and parliament of Canada to take up the subject at no distant date with a view to protecting the industries and the people of Canada."

Select San Francisco.

Louisville, Ky., June 23.—The North American Turnerbund Monday selected San Francisco as the city in which to hold the next biennial convention. St. Louis will continue to be headquarters.

WISHING ON HAY.

A Motorman Says It Is Wonderfully Effective in Love Matters.

She was a very nice looking girl, and evidently belonged to what may be called the smart set. She was riding on a Brightwood car, and was well out on Seventh street road, says the Washington Star, when she spoke to the motorman. "I am nearly dying to get something," she remarked, "and I want to wish for it on a load of hay. I was told that if I rode out on this line I could meet any number of wagons full of hay coming to the city."

"Right you are, miss," answered the motorman, "and here come five loads down the road. You can wish all you want now."

It is presumed that the necessary wish or wishes were made, for as soon as the loads of hay passed the young lady got off and took a car back to the city. Then, turning to the Star writer, the motorman said: "You heard that, didn't you? Well, sir, I have had a similar experience on this car several times. There are a certain number of ladies, young and otherwise, who ride out with us for no other reason than to meet a load of hay, so that they can wish on it. There is very little trouble meeting hay wagons on the Seventh street road, for there is scarcely a trip of a car that we do not meet from one to six, especially in the morning hours and in dry weather. There is a great deal in it, too. My wife tells me she never meets a load of hay without making a wish. She wished for me before she got me, she told me. Well, you see, she got a prize, though there never has been a time since we were married when I have had money enough saved to buy a load of hay half the size of that the young lady wished on. I hope her better luck, though. In love matters wishing on a load of hay is wonderfully effective."

WHITNEY SPEAKS.

Refuses to Be Considered as a Candidate for Nomination.

Russell Backs Out of the Race—Democrats Disclaim Any Fear of a Bolt—The Boies and Bland Booms.

New York, June 22.—Hon. William C. Whitney, who has been named as a candidate for the democratic presidential nomination, has given a statement to the press. He says far too great importance has been attached to his decision to go to the Chicago convention. He says he will not assume any position of leadership. His decision to stay was simply based on the duty of every person who believes in the party for its principles, to stand by and lend his aid and take his chances when a great crisis is upon it. Mr. Whitney says a crisis is upon the democratic party now. Fundamental differences of principle exist inside the party, marked almost by sectional lines. For the past 15 years leaders of public opinion in the south and west have been advocating as the great remedy for existing ills the free coniage of silver at the ratio of sixteen to one, with or without the cooperation of other nations.

"It cannot be denied," he continues, "that the feeling among our people is that this free coinage by the United States alone will not give us the gold and silver money at a parity with each other (which is the assumption upon which it is undertaken), but will bring to us silver monometallism and a change in the standard of values. And that change, it is believed, means immediate ruin to our industries and no permanent good to anyone."

Mr. Whitney goes on to say that if the democratic party goes on to a silver platform this time they will meet the most disastrous defeat that any party has ever had in this country.

The statement is concluded by an emphatic refusal to be a candidate for president. He says he has no personal motive whatever for entering the fight.

Still a Fighting Chance.

New York, June 23.—William C. Whitney was seen Monday before he left for Albany to attend a conference of democratic leaders. He said:

"The report that I said that the eastern democrats were discouraged by the overwhelming majority of silver men that will be delegates in the democratic national convention is untrue. We are by no means discouraged and propose to put forth our most persuasive powers to induce the national convention to adopt a gold plank. We are willing to admit that the silver men will have almost a two-thirds' majority in the convention. We rely, however, on our arguments, and hope for a victory. We are inclined to believe that we may induce the silver men to recognize the importance of having a gold plank in the platform. Despite the reports that we are discouraged, we are more strongly than ever convinced that we have a fighting chance. Gold men in the east are just getting keyed up on the subject, and every day more interest is expressed in the situation by men of importance."

Not a Candidate.

Boston, June 23.—When seen Monday in regard to the report that he was going to Chicago with ex-Secretary Whitney, ex-Gov. William E. Russell, said:

"At the earnest request of Mr. Whitney and others I am going to Chicago to give him whatever help I can in the struggle in the democratic party for sound money against free silver. My own views on the subject are well known, and have been often stated. Believing the issue to be of the gravest importance, not only to the country, but to the present and future of the democratic party, I cannot remain inactive if it is thought I can be of any service at Chicago. I cannot, however, go to Chicago under the least suspicion that I am there for any personal reasons, nor can I take part in this fight embarrassed by any personal interest in the result. I shall, therefore, decline to have my name presented to the convention as a candidate."

Don't Fear a Bolt.

Hamilton, O., June 23.—Ex-Gov. James E. Campbell returned from the east Monday morning. Regarding the threatened bolt at the Chicago convention he had this to say:

"If the democratic party should favor the free coinage of silver at the national convention the party may drive a few gold men from our ranks. The platform of the party will be carefully planned and each plank considered and weighed. There will be no bolt, but a thorough understanding before the convention acts. It is true that several democratic states in the east favor a gold basis, and there is some trouble anticipated should the convention declare for silver, but this trouble is only apprehended by the action that New York, New Jersey and Connecticut may take in the event of a silver platform."

Philadelphia, June 23.—National Chairman Harrity was asked if he anticipated any such bolt at the democratic convention as took place in St. Louis. In answer he said: "None of any consequence. Should the gold standard men be in the majority, Tillman, of South Carolina, and the Colorado delegates might walk out. If the silver men should be in control, probably a few gold men would withdraw; but I do not anticipate a bolt like that at St. Louis."

Attack on Boies.

Waterloo, Ia., June 23.—Gov. Boies was interviewed Monday afternoon in regard to the report that his candidacy for president was being opposed by certain parties in the Illinois democratic convention on the ground that he spoke in defense of Cleveland's action in sending troops to quell the A. R. U. strike in Chicago. The speech in question was one which he delivered as permanent chairman of the democratic state convention held at Des Moines August 1, 1894. In this speech he took strong grounds against the exhibition of mob violence which had taken place at Chicago and elsewhere during this period. In speaking of the matter, Gov. Boies said that he had understood that an attack of this kind was to be made upon him at the Peoria convention, and he expressed himself as being perfectly willing to meet it. He said:

"If the whole of the speech was published I do not think there would be any cause of complaint. It will be found that I made very prominent the fact that the tariff, by its effect in fostering trusts and monopolies, brought oppression upon the laboring man, and was thereby responsible for the strike. I made this point very strong in this speech on that occasion, for I believed it. I do not care to discuss the matter further for publication at this time, but I simply desire by calling attention to the fact that I described the troubles which the country passed through at that time to place myself right before the people."

Bland's Boom Started.

St. Louis, June 23.—Free silver and Bland's boom are to receive an impetus from Missouri oratory. The Bland campaign fund has grown to working proportions, and a stumping tour was mapped out at a silver meeting here Sunday. Speakers have been assigned to duty in Texas, Ohio and Illinois, and several of them have already departed for their fields of action. Other volunteers will receive assignments and soon be on the stump for Bland and silver.

McKINLEY HONORED.

Two Hundred and Fifty Citizens Visit Him at Canton.

Canton, O., June 23.—Maj. McKinley Monday evening received a visit from 250 citizens of Zanesville and Muskingum county. They came under the auspices of the Business Men's Republican club of that city. The train reached Canton at seven o'clock and, escorted by the local drum corps and cavalry company organized for the campaign, marched with drums beating and banners flying to the McKinley residence. They were joined en route by hundreds of Canton's populace, so that when they reached their destination the crowd comprised several thousand people. Congressman H. C. Van Voorhis was spokesman for the visitors.

Maj. McKinley was received with cheers as he mounted a chair to respond. His remarks were on this occasion chiefly notable for his first reference, in any of his speeches, to the financial plank in the platform, when he said: "When we give a full day's work we are entitled to be paid in a full dollar." It was also notable that this evoked the first applause. Maj. McKinley said:

"We have had some experience in the last three years and a half; experience has superseded prophecy, and cold facts have taken the place of prediction. We all know more than we knew three years and a half ago, and we are all ready and anxious to get back to the period of 1892, when this country was enjoying its highest prosperity, with the largest domestic trade it ever enjoyed and the largest foreign trade with the nations of the world. We want to get back to that policy, my fellow-citizens, which will give to us work and wages, give to agriculture a home market and a good foreign market, which was opened up by reciprocity legislation of the republican party. We have come to appreciate that protective tariffs are better than illeness, and that wise tariff legislation is more businesslike than debts and deficiencies, and all feel that the sooner we can change that policy which increases the debts of the government to the policy of 'paying as we go' the sooner we will reach individual and national prosperity. And, my countrymen, there is another thing the people are determined upon, and that is that a full day's work must be paid in a full dollar."

Paterson, N. J., June 23.—This city was brilliantly illuminated and decorated Wednesday night in honor of Garret A. Hobart's nomination for vice president. Between 5,000 and 6,000 citizens of all political parties joined in a procession to the armory, where 5,000 persons, mostly women, were waiting for the parade. All the musical organizations in the city were engaged for the occasion. Short addresses were made by Judge John Hopper and Mayor Braun, both democrats. The addresses were strictly of a congratulatory nature. When Mr. Hobart advanced to the front of the platform the audience went wild with enthusiasm. Mr. Hobart confined his remarks to the city and people of Paterson, and said that he would rather have the esteem and confidence of the people than any office within the gift of any political organization.

TEN THOUSAND DEAD.

Terrible Result of the Late Earthquakes in Japan.

Yokohama, June 20.—It is now estimated that 10,000 people were drowned by the tidal wave on the island of Yesso, the northern part of Japan, which accompanied a succession of frightful earthquakes, lasting about 20 hours.

In addition to the town of Kumaishi, which was wholly destroyed, many other coast towns have been washed away entirely or in part.

[Yesso, or Jesso, as it is sometimes called, is the most northerly of the four principal islands which compose the empire of Japan. It lies north of the central island of Nipon, from which it is separated by the Sangar strait. It is about 350 miles in length from east to west and 250 miles in extreme breadth. The estimated area is 62,500 square miles and the population is about 120,000. The surface is mountainous. A rugged mountain chain traverses it from north to south and it contains many active as well as extinct volcanoes. It is rich in minerals, well watered and has coasts indented by numerous bays and harbors. The northern part is especially fertile. There are some valuable gold and silver mines, but the chief products are wheat, rice, hemp, tobacco and fish. The chief town on the island is Matsmai, on the south coast, whose population is about 50,000. After Matsmai, the most important seaport is Hakododi.]

HON. BENJAMIN BRISTOW DEAD.

Was Secretary of Treasury Under Grant—Was Candidate for President in 1876.

New York, June 23.—Hon. Benjamin H. Bristow, the well-known lawyer and former secretary of the treasury, died at his home in this city Monday of peritonitis.

[Benjamin H. Bristow is best known as President Grant's secretary of the treasury for two years from June, 1874, until June, 1876, and as a candidate for the nomination for the presidency at the republican convention of 1876 in which he received 113 votes on the first ballot. Rutherford B. Hayes was nominated. Benjamin Helm Bristow was born June 20, 1832, at Elkton, Todd county, Ky. He was graduated at Jefferson college, Pennsylvania, in 1851, and in 1853 was admitted to the bar at Elkton, Ky. When the civil war broke out he threw in his fortunes with the union side and became lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-fifth Kentucky infantry. From 1863 to 1865 he served in the Kentucky senate. As United States district attorney for the Louisville district for five years, beginning in 1865, he proved so efficient that he was appointed solicitor-general of the United States. In 1873 President Grant sent his name to the senate for the place of attorney-general, but the senate refused to confirm the nomination. The following year Mr. Bristow became secretary of the treasury. Since 1876 he had practiced law in New York city.]

Perished in the Ruins.

San Francisco, June 23.—By the collapse of a three-story frame building on the corner of Fifth street and Mint avenue, Monday afternoon, five people were killed outright and 17 others more or less seriously injured. An unknown lady, who was passing by the building at the time of the collapse, was struck by falling timbers and instantly killed. The mangled remains of an old man, which have not yet been identified, were removed from the top of the wreckage, together with the body of an unknown male occupant of the lodging house. The employes and guests of the restaurant, 11 in number, have all been rescued. Some of them are seriously injured. It is known beyond doubt that two, or possibly more people, are still buried in the debris.

Milwaukee Boycott Is Off.

Milwaukee, June 20.—The boycott, resulting from the street car strike here May 4, was officially declared off Friday by the union.

President James Flint, of the Amalgamated Association of Street Employes, said that his organization had discontinued running busses, and no longer asks the public to refrain from riding in the cars. He stated, however, that the strike has not been declared off, and that it will not be as long as the men feel as they do at present.

FIENDISH WORK.

Two Men Killed at Wyoming by Robbers.

The Thugs Are Rounded Up in the Swamp Near North Branch by a Posse of Officers—One Killed and the Other Two Captured.

Minneapolis, June 21.—News of a terrible crime at Wyoming Station, 40 miles out from Minneapolis, on the St. Paul & Duluth railroad, at about 1 o'clock Saturday morning, reached this city yesterday. Edward Paul and Jacob Hayes, proprietors of a restaurant at Wyoming, were shot down in cold blood by three desperadoes, who were in the act of robbing Dr. B. Foster, of St. Paul, who had been closely followed from that city on a St. Paul & Duluth train.

Dr. Foster had been on board the No. 6 west bound passenger train, which left Minneapolis between 10 and 11 o'clock Friday night, reaching Wyoming station at midnight.

He had been summoned to Wyoming to see his wife, and had only reached the station a few minutes before the tragedy. He went to the eating house kept by Paul & Hayes and made arrangements to hire a team to take him out into the country.

While the three were talking the murderers entered the place and demanded what money they had. Resistance was offered and a fight ensued, in which Dr. Foster was beaten over the head with the butt of a heavy revolver. He was badly injured. Paul and Hayes were both shot dead.

After the murderers had secured all the money about the place, including $75 which Dr. Foster had they took to the woods. In a short time the community was aroused and a party of men were in pursuit.

North Branch, Minn., June 21.—The three desperadoes who killed Edward Paul and Jacob Hayes at Wyoming on Saturday morning, while attempting to hold up Dr. Foster, of St. Paul, were captured near here today after a desperate resistance, in which one of the outlaws was shot to pieces. The dead thug is known as Bill Wilson. The others are James Cunningham and George Kelley, and are in jail at Stillwater.

When Sheriff Anderson received the information of the shooting at Wyoming Saturday morning he left for that town to learn the particulars, and having found that the men had gone north he immediately formed a cordon around the swamps. Last night the murderers succeeded in passing the line and entered a residence here, from which they took five loaves of bread, $10 in money and a gold watch. Men who were stationed north of the town halted them, but the hunted men dropped their plunder and made for the woods.

This morning Sheriff Anderson organized a posse and took up the trail. Men had also gathered from Rush City, Forest Lake, Wyoming, Stacy, Harris, and the surrounding country, until the man-hunters numbered 200, armed with shotguns and rifles.

When the murderers left the railroad last night they laid quiet until this morning. The searchers found their trail leading to the big swamp one mile northeast. A posse under the sheriff and Commissioner Rystrom entered the swamp after them.

About 12 o'clock Rystrom's party was met by a volley of shots. The hunted men rose from behind a log when their pursuers were within 10 feet of them, and it is a miracle that some of the pursuing men were not killed or injured.

A pitched battle immediately took place and perhaps 50 shots were fired before the two surviors surrenderd. The dead thug, known by the others as Bob Wilson, is the one that did the shooting at Wyoming. He had not intended to surrender, for he was found with his revolver in position for reloading. He is the man that [illegible] Foster struck, as he had a black eye from the effects of the blow. The names given by the two men captured alive are George Kelly and James Cunningham. Kelly, who was shot through the nose, had confessed that they were the party who did the Wyoming shooting.

St, Paul June 21.—When the posse returned to North Branch with the Wyoming desperadoes the town was filled with people who had come in from the surrounding towns and the sheriff became afraid that some movement might be organized against his men. He made arangements to take his prisoners to Stillwater for safety. He swore in a few deputies and stopped the train. It was feared that there would be some demonstration at Wyoming, and at White Bear when the prisoners changed cars the large crowd gatherd at the depot made threats but no attempt was made to do violence. At Stillwater they were placed in the county jail.

A coroner's jury held an inquest on the remains of Bob Wilson and the verdict was that the deceased had come to his death from lead poisoning administered by hands unknown. The inquest on Paul and Hays will be held tomorrow morning.

Cunningham has done most of the talking since the arrest. He insists that he had no part in the shooting, but that Kelly did the shooting, and that Wilson was the man who was going through Dr. Foster. Kelly seems the desperate man of the trio. All three are from the South, coming from Missouri, but they will not give any more definite information.

HINTS FOR GIRLS.

When small biscuits are served with the soup they are eaten from the fingers and not broken into the soup.

A girl who has a good skin, or even one who has a bad skin, is very foolish to chance filling the pores of it with powder.

A young man who writes to a young woman extending invitations or making appointments on postal cards should be entirely ignored.

A young lady who is not the hostess need not rise when a gentleman enters the room, unless he should happen to be a very old gentleman.

When people insist upon coming on other than your "at home" day you may, with perfect propriety, have your maid excuse you and say that you are not receiving.

White lace or embroidery should be wrapped up in colored tissue paper or it will turn yellow. There is something in the white paper that discolors white materials.

A young girl in deep mourning could not with propriety wear a silver belt buckle. If she wears an all-white gown it should be one without lace or ribbon decorations.

TELLER FOR PRESIDENT.

Prominent Populists Indorse the Silverite's Candidacy.

St. Louis, June 22.—As the result of a series of conferences between committees appointed by the seceding silver men of the recent national republican convention and a committee composed of prominent populists an address was issued Saturday night from the headquarters of the people's party national committee in this city advising populists throughout the country to make Henry M. Teller, of Colorado, their national standard bearer. Immediately after the silver men walked out of the convention they appointed a committee, of which Charles H. Hartman, of Montana; Senator R. F. Pettigrew, of South Dakota; C. F. Cannon, of Utah, and Senator Fred T. Dubois, of Idaho, were members, to confer with a similar committee of populists. That evening at the Planters' hotel they met H. E. Taubeneck, of Illinois, chairman; Dr. Howard S. Taylor, of Chicago, and Thomas M. Patterson, of Denver, of the national populist committee, and as a result of that and subsequent conferences the following address was issued:

"Expressly disclaiming any purpose or right to bind any party or person by the views here set forth, we but yield to an overpowering sense of duty in saying what we do to members of the people's party and to all other good citizens who, apprehending the approach of a momentous crisis in our country's life, are willing to avert it by acts of exalted patriotism. We came to St. Louis as citizens, members of the people's party, to be present at the meetings of the national republican convention, that we might determine more definitely for ourselves the true aim of that organization in the present struggle. Here we have seen the 'boss' in politics more securely enthroned, more servilely obeyed and more dictatorial as to candidates and policy than was ever witnessed before in the field of national politics. One man, the perfection of his type, representing the millionaires, the banks, the corporations, the trusts and every other remorseless and plutocratic element in our country's life, has, through the power of money, dictated the nomination of Mr. McKinley and shaped the platform of his party.

"This convention, slavishly responding to the will of the money power, has forced an issue which must be met. It is a challenge to the yeomen of the land. If it is declined, or if it shall succeed, the fetters of a tyranny more grinding than that of the czars and emperors will be riven upon the plain people of the country, fetters which must be indefinitely worn with the contemptible spirit inseparable from willing serfs or in the end be broken with the irresistible power of a mighty revolution. That issue is formulated in the demands that 'the existing gold standard must be preserved' and for the enactment of 'all measures designed to maintain inviolably the obligations of the United States and all our money—either coin or paper—at the present standard.'

"This means that silver shall be permanently degraded into mere money of change, and that it be deprived of its legal tender quality except for some paltry sum: that the greenback and all other forms of government paper money shall be redeemed and destroyed; that the national banks shall be swollen into a power of triple their present ability to contract the volume of money, to absorb the earnings of industry and to grip the throat of all industrial and commercial life, while from time to time it terrorizes the voters into choice of its tools for all legislative, judicial and administrative positions.

"The money power has forced this issue now, because, in its judgment, those whom its policy will enslave are divided into hostile political families which cannot be united in time to resist its onset. It regards it as impossible that harmonious action can be secured between the different organizations that favor monetary reform and resistance to their insatiate greed. With populists, silver democrats and independent bimetallists supporting different nominees for president and the national congress, it feels assured of victory, and it has determined to press now and without abatement the advantage which this apparently lamentable condition raises before it in this, the most threatening crisis that has menaced the country since the civil war.

"Though simply citizen members of the people's party, we venture to make momentous suggestions to you, our brethren. In doing this we have neither desire nor thought to impair in the least degree the efficiency of our noble organization, charged as it is with the liberties of present and future generations, and whose integrity and growth is essential to the perpetuation of our free institutions. Our constant aim will be to defend it from foes within and without and to preserve it as a power consecrated forever to the defense of humanity's dearest rights upon the American continent. In view of the shameless submission by the republican convention to the most extreme demands ever made upon Americans by the money power, every thought and effort of American manhood should, from this hour, tend toward creating and cementing a union between those who would resist the conspiracy of wholesale robbery and grinding oppression. Measures must be gained or defeated through men. After all, the chief problem in this crisis is to find a man upon whom patriots can unite, whose life is witness that if intrusted with authority over national legislation and enforcement he will defy every allurement of wealth and every menace of power, standing unflinchingly by the cause of the people in the fierce struggle inseparably connected with the enactment of our proposed financial reforms.

"We see in the private and official life of Henry M. Teller a beacon, burning brightly, warning the people off of the threatening shores of dissension. He has but now publicly abandoned the republican party, with which he has been associated since its first organization. When to his official record are united an unsullied private life, a character without blot or stain, a grateful, generous nature, a patriotism that knows neither state nor section, we feel that we are but performing a duty to our beloved country in thus calling attention to Mr. Teller's merits and availability as a candidate for president; as one upon whom all populists may consistently unite, while they strenuously preserve and strengthen their organization. The necessity and wisdom of a dispassionate consideration of his claims upon the support of American people have become the more apparent since the patriotic republican leaders who abandoned their party under his inspiration, have announced him as their nominee for president of the United States."

KILLED IN BATTLE.

Gen. Wilson, an American in the Service of Cuba, Slain.

Kingston, Jamaica, June 23.—Advices here by messenger from the island of Cuba report the death of Gen. W. W. Wilson, the leader of the American expedition which landed in Cuba on December 8 in order to assist the insurgents. Gen. Wilson is said to have been killed in battle near Guanatanamo. Gen. Wilson, with about 18 men, four of whom were graduates of West Point, landed in Cuba early in December last with 200 rifles, 50,000 rounds of ammunnition, supply of dynamite, etc. The expedition was fitted out at New York by Americans who are interested in Cuba. Gen. Wilson had seen service in Central and South America and was with Garza on the Mexican border some years ago.

Adopts a Gold Standard.

Washington, June 20.—Minister Andrade, of Venezuela, has received advices from Caracas as to the final ratification of the constitutional amendment by which Venezuela adopts the gold standard. President Crespo advised congress some months ago to meet the prevailing agitation for a depreciated currency by a constitutional enactment. Congress passed the law, and it has now been confirmed by all the states. The silver already in circulation will not be retired. The future coinage will be restricted to gold and gold certificates representing actual gold on hand.

A POSTMASTER'S WIFE.

A Leeds Woman Who Astonished Her Friends and Neighbors.

Near to Death But Restored so Completely That She Has Been Accepted by a Life Insurance Company as a Good Risk.

From the Journal, Lewiston, Me.

A bright little woman, rosy and fresh from her household duties, dropped into a chair before the writer and talked with enthusiasm shining in her snapping, black eyes.

The people in the pretty village of Leeds Center, Me., have watched with some interest the restoration to complete health of Mrs. W. L. Francis, wife of the postmaster. So general were the comments on this interesting case that the writer who visited Mrs. Francis and learned from her that the statements regarding her troubles and her subsequent extrication therefrom are entirely true. All of her neighbors know what has been the agency that has performed this cure, but that others may be benefited by her experience, Mrs. Francis has consented to allow her story to appear in print.

"If there is anything on earth I dread more than another," she said, "it is to see my name in the papers. But in this case I conquer my repugnance and give publicly the same credit to the savior of my life as I would to one who had dragged me from a death beneath the waves. In fact, I have extolled my preserver so enthusiastically and unreservedly; have sought out sufferers and recommended the remedy to so many friends and acquaintances that already my neighbors jocularly call me 'Pink Pills Francis.' But really, my recovery is something that I consider wonderful. I know that there are so many testimonials of medicine in the papers nowadays that people do not pay as much heed as formerly, but I do wish folks who are suffering would remember that what I say comes right from the heart of a woman who feels that she had a new lease of happy life given her.

"Eleven years ago I was afflicted with nervous prostration. My existence until two years ago was one of dragging misery. Anyone in the village will tell you of my condition. My blood seemed exhausted from my veins and month after month I grew weaker. I was able to undertake only the lightest household work, and even then I could perform it only by slow and careful movements. During all these sorry months and years I was under the care of this doctor and that, but their medicines helped me only spasmodically, and then I fell into relapses more prostrating than ever.

"In the night I used to be awakened by the most excruciating pains in my heart and side, and was obliged to use pellets of powerful medicine that the doctor gave me for relief in such attacks. At last my condition became so grave that I went out only infrequently. We live upstairs, you notice, over my husband's store, and in descending the stairway I frequently was obliged to sort of fall and slide over the steps in order to descend, such was the strain on my system resulting from even this slight exertion. Occasionally I visited the neighbors, but I was obliged to sit and rest to recover breath while ascending any elevation. In short, it did not seem that I could live, such was my complete physical prostration.

"One day I saw an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and although my faith in remedies was weak by that time, I sent for a box and tried them. That was two years ago. Now I call myself a well woman. Isn't it wonderful?

"I haven't had one of those excruciating pains in the heart for a year and a half. Why, even the first box of pills helped me. I can walk miles now; can do my work easily; have gained in weight constantly, and you would scarcely believe it, but a little while ago I was examined for endowment life insurance and was accepted unhesitatingly after a careful examination by the physician.

"Do you wonder that I'm shouting 'Pink Pills' all through our village? I haven't taken any of the remedy for some months for it has completely built me up, but at the first sign of trouble I know to what refuge to flee.

"Last year my aunt, Mrs. M. A. Blossom, of Dixfield P. O., was here visiting me. She was suffering from lack of vitality and heart trouble, but she was skeptical about my remedy that I was so enthusiastically advocating. At last, however, she tried it and carried some home with her when she went. A little while ago I received a letter from her and in it said: 'I am cured, thanks to God and Pink Pills.' She also wrote that her husband had been prostrated but had been restored by the remedy.

"We feel up this way that such a sovereign cure cannot be too widely known. That is the only reason why I allow my name to be used in this connection. I know also that by personally recommending them I have helped many of my friends back to health, for I never let an opportunity pass when a word of counsel may direct some one."

One of the persons to whom Mrs. Francis recommended Pink Pills is station agent, C. H. Foster, of Leeds Center, and the reporter found him patrolling the platform awaiting the arrival of the morning train. Mr. Foster, who is one of the most trustworthy, capable and energetic men in the employ of the Maine Central railroad, appeared in unusually good health and spirits and we made inquiry as to the cause.

"Do you know," replied he, "I think I've made a discovery, or at least Mrs. Francis has for me. I have been in poor health for a long time with a heart trouble variously complicated. We have been so fully interested in Mrs. Francis' wonderful recovery that I at once determined to give the medicine recommended a thorough test. So, about two months ago, I bought the first box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Only two months, please note, yet already I am so much improved, so much better able to fulfill my duties, so sanguine that I am on the road to recovery, that I feel like a new man. I can now walk without the fatigue I once experienced, my heart affection appears to be relieved, and I have joined the Pink Pills' Band in our community."

Mr. Foster commenced taking the pills at a time when he was completely prostrated after he had suffered such a severe attack of heart trouble that it was necessary to carry him home from his office. Since then he has faithfully adhered to the remedy and is constantly improving, so much so as to excite his enthusiasm and his gratitude.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

You can reach practically all the great resorts of America, by the through car lines of "America's Greatest Railroad"— The New York Central.

You Poor Rheumatic.

both have their part in the great savings that come from Pearline. Suppose you're the mistress. There's the economy of it—the saving of time, etc., and the actual money that's saved by doing away with that steady wear and tear on everything washed. Suppose you're the maid. There's the saving of labor; the absence of rubbing; the hardest part of the housework made easier and pleasanter.

But suppose you are mistress and maid, both in one, doing your own work. Then there is certainly twice as much reason why you should do every bit of your washing and cleaning with Pearline. 507

—Our farmers have begun haying again; the crop is a fine one.

—Quite a few car loads of lumber have been shipped to Delano lately.

—The poles for the extension of the electric light system arrived last week.

—The band stand has received a new coat of paint. Babb and Coffin did the job.

—Our new photographer is doing a rushing business. He takes a good picture.

—Don't forget to vote at your party's primary election. Your vote may help.

—The Ladies Aid, of the M. E. Church gave a nice little lawn sociable in the church yard Friday evening.

—The new iron fountain was placed in position last Tuesday and is now ready to moisten the lips of the noble equine.

—Prof. Bohn is engineering the construction of another band stand, to be on River Street, "Competition is the life of trade.

—Dr. J. S. Shrader, lately returned from Shebyogan Wis., has moved into the Rebecca White house, on the corner of Third and Bridge streets.

—Rev. Zachman is to hold first mass at the St. Michaels church on Thursday, July 2. A large number from abroad, including Delanoites, are to be present.

—Eph Jacobs is putting up a fine residence on his farm on the Buffalo road. The view from there is grand, taking in Crow River, and Delano in the distance.

—Fishing parties are seen returning from neighboring lakes more frequently than for years past, and the strings of fish appear much more plenty and of finer quality.

—The Oregon Indian Medicine Co. concluded that Delano was not just the right kind of a town to do business in and therefoe moved to Myers Wednesday morning.

—Dr. Balcome, son of Dr. E. Balcome, formerly of Delano, of Macalester, is figuring on buying out the practice of Dr. Fassett, at Rockford. He is a homeopath.

—Martin Conzet, of Greenwood, desires us to thank, for him and the people of his town, the people of Buffalo, who so grandly entertained the Old Settlers on Saturday last.

—John Cunningham and family and I. Gutzwiller and Mrs. Bentz and May Mowatt represented Delano at the Old Settlers meeting, at Buffalo last Saturday. A good time is reported.

—Farmers are growling considerably because they are afraid there is going to be too much rain. Yet the grain, corn, potatoes, etc,, etc,, keeps right on growing, It beats all how hard some people are to please.

—The fine, new, non-freezable watering fountain has been placed in position opposite the Meister House. It will be all right until the first cold snap, when if it don't freeze up it is a good one; water pipes for drainage should be more than two and a half feet underground in this country.

—The time for school meeting is drawing nigh. Try to elect two members of the school board who are the best our town affords. The school is usually what the board makes of it. If a board hires inefficient teachers and cuts expenses in the wrong place the school can't keep up its standard.

—The present stage of Crow River furnishes better bathing facilities than it has for several summers, and the Delano boys enjoy a good swim almost every evening. They have to get out before the mosquitoes begin their evening concert though, or have numerous bills presented, persistently demanding blood.

—When Harrison instead of Blaine was nominated for President and Delano Republicans hoisted the flag half way up the pole, where it got stuck, and remained for several days, people thonght they were not very zealous Harrison men. But now when they have the boasted Nepoleon of tariff fame on a "sound gold" platform not a flag, an anyil, or even a hurrah has yet been let loose; and they have had plenty of time to have cought their second wind, too.

—On good authority we are informed that an able bodied man, recently moved to town, was out in the country a few days ago with his arm tied up claiming to have injured it in trying to save his team, and by other pitiful stories endeavoring to work on the sympathies of those he met, to the tune of a few nickels. If things are as reported, the man with the arm tied up should have been forcibly or legally ejected from the premises instead of given money.

—Two cases of small children getting hold of bottles of medicine and drinking a part of the contents happened in Delano this week, giving the parents and neighbors quite a scare, but fortunately no grater harm done. It is a wonder when people keep so many bottles of medicines, patent and otherwise, some of them strong poisons in the house so carelessly that their children dont grow suddenly ill or die more often than has been the case. Medicines should be carefully placed beyond its reach of small children if they must be kept in the house.

—Yesterday afternoon a sad drowning occurred in Crow River, near C. W. Ingerson's place. After being blacked up and marching around town to advertise the Catholic School Sociable for the evening the boys went in bathing, and in a few minutes Amber Dedrick aged 13 years, son of Len. Dedrick, sank to the bottom to rise no more. His companions came to town for help. Among others his father was soon at the place, and by diving got him out. But with all efforts made the spark of life could not be rekindled. The afflicted family have the sympathy of the entire town in thir sad bereavement which came so suddenly upon them.

The following were elected delegates to the People's Party Convention at Duluth, by the Wright County Convention at Buffalo last Monday. D. Cochran, W. S. Belt, Christ Hohl, Chas. Mathers, E. W. Johnson A. E. Johnson, N. I. Vanderson, A. O. Morton, J. W. Kuhnley, A. O. Rustad, Sam McGuire, John Robinson, John Giblin Jr., C. McClatceie.

Our Republican newspapers who are trying to uphold the gold standard platform made by Bill Merriam, are having kind of up hill business. They have lost no chance of telling the public what a smart man Mr. Towne was and what a great orator; and ex-Senator Eaton is known as head and sholders above most of the would-be Wright County politicians, intellectually considered, and both these leaders and many other reading and thinking people are for free silver regardless of other countries.

In talking with a man of intelligence, who a few years ago came to this country from Southern Austria we took occasion to enquire as to the kind of money used there. His answer was gold, everybody gets gold, a few years ago foreigners were paid in gold but home officials were paid in silver, now it is changed, the home officers are paid in gold. In order to bring this about money was borrowed and Rothschilds made millions out of the deal while the people are paying taxes for interest on the gold to pay their officers with. Isn't that quite similar to the effect of the gold standard in the United States, as far as we have got?

Among Our Exchanges.

The Buffalo Journal has come out for free silver and almost against the republican party. This is nothing strange or new. It is simply that the expected has happened. However, the world still moves.—Wright County Times.

There was a sharp rise in silver yesterday, but the prices of the other securities dealt in on Wall street went "down like McGinty to the bottom of the sea." This hardly bears out the theory that a rise in silver will enhance all other prices.—Tribune.

Although no convention was called nor held in this county we notice that 10 votes were cast for Meeker county in the state convention at St. Paul last Thursday. Somebody must be carrying the Democracy of Meeker county in his vest pocket.--Litchfield Independent.

At the last meeting of the board of education it was wisely decided to reengage the teachers who have so efficiently served the past year. It is the poorest of policy to change teachers every year and the boards action in this matter will be commended by every patron of the school.—Waverly Trique.

The six leading dailies of the twin cities, of which four are Republican, are of course all outspoken advocates of the single gold standard. They are owned and controlled by eastern capitalists, and the men who write the editorials are simply hired men at so much per week. They have absolutely nothing to say about the course of the papers they edit except to follow instructions from headquarters. The same state of affairs is true of every prominent daily paper in the country, with but few exceptions. It is different with the county press. The rural papers are usually owned by their publishers and their utterances are the individual opinions of their owners. This should not be lost sight of by the public in reading up on public question. --Litchfield Independent.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

THE WRIGHT COUNTY W. C. T. U.

MRS. ELIZABETH C. FRISBIE, Co. Supt. Press work.

The eighth annual convention of the Wright Co. W. C. T. U. convened at Rockford, June 16, 1896, in the A. C. Church, convention was called to order by the Pres., Mrs. M. B. Hillier. Morning programme, scripture reading, Mrs. C. Brookins, Monticello; prayer, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Frisbie, Monticello; song; minutes of the last meeting were read and approved; Mrs. May, of Howard Lake, read the treasurers report, which was accepted. The following committees were appointed. Credentials, Mrs. C. Brookins, Mrs. Coondale; courtesy, Mrs. Johnson, Miss Walker; resolutions, Mrs. Hoover, Mrs. Frisbie, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. Perkins. The report of Monticello union was read by Mrs. Stokes, Howard Lake union, Mrs. Corey, a verbal report was given of Montrose union. The reports were all good and encouraging to the Convention.

A bible reading was given by Miss Alice R. Palmer, our round-the-world missionary; noon.tide prayer, by Mrs. Neal. Afternoon session, song, scripture reading, Mrs. May; song. The address of welcome was written by Miss Downie and read by Miss Walker, response by Miss Pauline Moore. The Pres. address was very interesting. The report of press work by Mrs. M. E. Hoover, was splendid, she will be sadly missed in Wright Co. Instrumental music by Miss Waren, of Rockford, a paper on social purity was read by Mrs. Elizabeth C. Frisbie, Monticello. A parlimentary drill was conducted by Miss Palmer. A discussion, shall we adopt the Co. plan in Minn. led by Miss Frances Neal, Pres. Hennepin Co. Mrs. Hoover, Mrs. Neal, Miss Palmer, were made members of the convention. Remarks were made by Rev. Jackson, of Rockford; Miss Alice Palmer gave a talk on the relation of temperance to missions. Scripture reading at the evening session by Miss Pauline Moore; prayer was offered by Rev. Jackson. The recitation by Miss Lilian Walker was finally rendered; a duet with guitar accompaniment by Miss Lottie and Celia Yeeny, was excelent, Miss Alice R. Palmer gave one of her most interresting addresses; appropriate remarks were made by Rev. Jackson; benediction by Rev. Fassett, this closed the Wright Co. convention, which was a success in every way, as we enter upon the duties of our new year, we would place our hand in the masters and say, "Lead kindly light. Lead thou us on." The following officers were elected, Pres. Mrs. M. B. Hoover, Buffalo, Vice Pres. Mrs. F. H. Johnson, Rockford, Sec., Miss Pauline Moore, Montrose, Treas. Mrs. M. B. Bryant, Monticello; Sect. Sunday School work, Mrs. M. B. Bryant; Supt. Press Work, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Frisbie, Monticello; scientific temperance work, Mrs. May, Howard Lake.

THE FOLLOWING RESOLUTIONS WERE ADOPTED.

The Wright County Woman's Christian Temperance Union in convention assembled, in gratitude to our Heavenly Father who has led our organization through nine years with what we believe to be blessed results, hereby offer the following resolutions:

RESOLVED that we will earnestly strive to co-operate with our State union in its plans for reform. We will therefore prosecute to the best of our ability such departments of work as apply to our various localities.

RESOLVED that we feel the great need in our county of well trained speakers who shall go before our people and advocate our principles. We therefore willingly promise to contribute our quota towards a fund to be used by the state in prosecuting our work by this method.

RESOLVED that we advocate equal suffrage as a measure of justice, a means of reform and a weapon of defence against the giant evils that menance the home, which is the foundation of our government.

RESOLVED that we extend our sincere thanks to the editors of Wright county for favors received

RESOLVED that we will lend our support to such political party as shall, in our judgement, present the best embodiment of the principle of prohibition.

RESOLVED that we heartily thank the trustees of the A. C. church for the use of their pleasant and comfortable building for our convention; Miss Waren for instrumental music; the choir for their excellent music at the evening session; and to all who generally assisted in making the convention a success.

Committe, MARY E. HOOVER.
MRS. ELIZABETH C. FRISBIE.
MRS. PERKINS.
MRS. PARKER.

Teachers' Training School.

The Teachers' Training School for Wright County will be held at Buffalo, commencing at one o'clock, July 20th and continuing four weeks. E. J. Donaldson, assisted by Misses Hattie Dunton and Rebecca Mattson will have charge of the school. E. O. Mc Fadon will have charge of the class in music during the first week. It will be for the interest of all progressive

It will not long be possible for those who neglect the opportunities offered by the state for the improvement of teachers to keep up to the standard required by the state. It is the duty of the County Superintendent of Schools to select the best material that is offered in candidates for teachers, and among other things considered will be the work done at the training school.

Entered as Second-Class Mail Matter, at the Post Office in Delano, Minn

"THE love of money is the root of all evil," and there is lots of evil now-a-days.

DEATH has claimed as its own the venerable author of Uncle Tom's Cabin and Harriet Beecher Stowe died at Hartford Conn., July 1.

WHILE looking up a standard for money that would be "catching" it is a wonder the St. Louis Convention didn't stumble into "American tin."

WESTERN people who own lands horses, crops, and other property which is saleable for a less amount of money every day are beginning to think it would be a good thing to stop legislating in favor of money makers.

THE present law allowing anyone to be elected to the high and honorable office of Vice President of the United States simply by clinging to the tail end of the Presidential ticket should be changed. The people ought to have a chance to say a little bit about who shall be Vice President.

READING and thinking men are fast becoming bimitallists, or so called "free silverites," while country merchants and commission men, under the advice of travleing men, working in the selfish interests of their employers are dropping into the "gold standard" ranks. Read and think for yourselves. Dont grab at golden straws alone while you can get hold of more substantial support.

IT seems to us pure gall for a lot of Repnblicans who have been driven out of their party by its stand on the money question coming to the Democratic Convention and asking to nominate the Candidate for President, and that from among their own number It would look better if the Democrats would nominate their own choice and the Republicans who prefer a free silver candidate to McKinley could vote for him.

CLOUGH has been nominated for Governor and according to the newspapers he is being warmly supported by men who have been working against him and claiming that he was using unfair means and was unfit for election to this high. If these men were telling the truth they appear to be greater simpletons than even they say he is, when they climb into his band wagon. Why don't they vote as they talk? Against corruption in office? Or have they been converted to that kind of politics?

Republican Convention.

REPORT ON RESOLUTIONS.

The Republicans of Wright county in convention assembled endorse and ratify the Republican national ticket McKinley and Hobart under the leadership of McKinley and inspired by his candidacy we pledge to the party a sweeping victory in Wright. We adhere and subscribe to the National Republican platform and are proud that the party continues to stand for a protective tariff: for a sound currency, and for good government generally. (applause.)

Impelled by the voices of our constituents we commend the vigorous and able administration of State affairs by our present governor, and in pursuance of precident and fair play we consider the Hon. D. D. Clough is entitled to nomination by the Republican party to the position of Governor of this state. (applause) Wright county has, for forty years, furnished Republican majorities but never a Republican candidate for state, congressional or judicial honors. At this time we propose one of our citizens, William E. Culkin, (applause) to the Republicans of the Sixth Congressional District, as our choice for the Republican nomination for member of Congress (applause).

WE take pride in presenting him and feel that in his hands the Republican banner would be honorably upheld, (applause) a loyal Republican an upright and able citizen, and in all respects qualified for the past for which we urge him, we hereby instruct the delegates from this county to the congressional convention at St. cloud, to present his name to the convention there assembled and to use all honorable means to bring about his nomination. (applause)

Com. on Resolutions: JAMES C. TARBOX, J. A. WHARTON, O. M. PALMQUIST, GEO. M. WRIGHT, S. J. SWANSON

Chair announced we will now vote for delegates to state convention.

E. D. Washburne said he would not run for delegate.

Towle moved each Commissioner District choose 3, 4 to be chosen at large.

Tarbox asked that Delegates to Congressional convention at St. Cloud, be elected, 4 to each district, carried.

Each district was assigned a room in which to caucus.

Delegates to State Convention reported by districts.

W. E. Culkin was called on for speech. He said, in substance, among other things:

It is hardly in order to congratulate Republicans to day. We meet as Republicans. There are enough Republicans left to do business; because we believe in Republican party principles.

We love the Republican party because we love the American; its destinies and fates. It is necessary for all people of the country that the principles of Republicans be maintained in this country.

Four years ago in aberration the people placed in power Democrats. Nothing is left even of the Democratic party. They came, asking endorsement, they ask to build highways with hungry men and women.

Populists come with any false flag, no matter what comes behind; that they might wipe out hope of country.

Republicans will do duty with William McKinley. Who dares doubt he will be president? As the clouds which now overhang us in the sky will blow away, and the sun will shine, so will the political clouds be cast aside.

No man can get rich through law. With proper statute laws everybody will be prosperous. There is a lobby in the country. If silver was stopped it would belong to the miners; not to us. Let us legislate for ourselves; and not for men we do not know.

I am one of those who firmly believe that the country cannot prosper except through the action of the Republican party. Let us go hence amongst those that sent us here. Go amongst people of any political persuasion and preach the doctrine. Wright county is not going to betray the Republican party, Republican principles or Republican men. Republicans of Wright county never failed to treat me with utmost respect. They have never placed in my hands a trust which was not performed as best I could. Two years ago people went out advocating the election of a man. He has failed us. Holding a Republican commission as a member of Congress; he has turned his back upon Republican doctrines; declared himself no longer a Republican. So long as a man holds a Republican commission so long will he be loyal to the party that elected him. (applause It was with great pain; a personal loss; that we learned of this. It left us without a candidate. who will we nominate? 30 years has Wright county been loyal without a candidate for high office, and now speaks in thunder tones. If they refuse to recognize us we will cease to recognize them. You have said; and I have considered whether best to go with a candidate. I will say for myself wile no one should refuse to accept, our chances are small. If we loose as perhaps we may, I will still remain your debtor. I have one regret: that Wright county, herself cannot nominate a candidate.

There are those of us in dog days, when men are speculating, who see danger in the Republican party. Flowers wither. I expect to see massed in solid phalanx, nothing can resist, torches, lights for McKinley, next November. Some may imagine that will not be. I am sure that Wright county will roll up a rousing majority for the Republican ticket from top to bottom. I thank you from the bottom of of my heart; and promise that any Republican trust or popular duty placed in my hands will be performed.

Mr. Tarbox made a short speech in response to the repeated calls, advancing the following ideas: The Republican party takes a stand not for policy, but for a sound principle, true. one thing made my heart beat harded, and blood run more rapidly was that the St. Louis convention made no straddle, no question, no mistake in platform. I honor Mr. Towne, when he leaves the party; Teller also. The Republican party is bound to win, because it is right, true, according to reason and fact. The poet says: "Truth struck to earth shall rise again." We stand on principle, lead, others may follow. "You may deceive a part of the people all of the time; all of the people a part of the time; but you can't deceive all of the people all of the time." The more our principles are analyzed, the stronger they grow. We will have a celebration in November. This will be a campaign of education. We trust our future will not be as our past. We have been disregarded. When they around for votes we are found, but when standard bearers are wanted they overlook us. Thank you for the honor conferred in asking me to address you, knowing I am no orator.

The convention on motion was then adjourned.

Among Our Exchanges.

If the silver dollar be dishonest, who have made it so? What men and what parties have been in power in this country for the past 25 years? They must be the fellows who made our silver dishonest if it be so. The fact is that the dishonesty is in the legislation which enables the gold dollar to take twice as much of labor's products to pay a debt as were required when our national and other debts were contracted—twice as much wheat or cotton to get a dollar as in 1873 when silver was clandestinely stricken down by legislation.—Waseca Herald.

One of the most important laws enacted by the fifty-fourth congress, was the measure providing for trial by jury in cases of contempt of court. It limits the arbitrary exercise of authority of federal judges, as summary punished for contempt can only be inflicted when the offense is committed in the presence of the judge. In all other cases of contempt, such as violations of injunctions, etc., the defendant is guaranteed all the rights of the ordinary precednre in criminal trials. Eugene V. Debs imprisonment was consequently not in vain, as in the future no labor leader can be imprisoned for contempt of court upon the mere opinion and decision of one man.—Prison Mirror.

GRADUATING ORATION.

Americans for America

BY MR. GEORGE KURTZ, OF THE DELANO HIGH SCHOOL.

The nations which have deeply impressed themselves on the humane family, which have left to posterity the highest civilization, which have aided the world in its greatest advancement and given it its greatest institutions, have been homogeneous nations. Religion, literature and art have flourished and social and political institutions have prospered only under a united and homogeneous people, people having the same thoughts and living the same life for a long period of time.

Every nation has institutions adapted to itself. The welfare and prosperity of a nation depends upon the conformity of these institutions. An institution may flourish in one nation, but if it were transferred to another nation, whose climate, inhabitants, social and political institutions differed, it must either transform the people or be transformed itself.

Such a great influx into a community like ours of men of foreign birth, training and ideas as is going within the United States at the present day cannot but be accompanied by serious results. These people represent various nationalities and climates, who have adopted and have been trained to the peculiar institutions of their native country. They still cling to these institutions and nourish them and they are usualy of such a character that they are an evil to our country. They also represent countries whose political development has been worked out upon far different lines than ours, therefore they are ignorant of the requirements and management of our government. Citizenship is a free gift and permitted on the easiest possible terms, hence, the foreigner, in an extremely short time, becomes an American citizen and is allowed a voice in the management of our government. Suffrage is permitted him and he is allowed to stand before the polls and cast a vote equal to that of the American citizen without being able to speak our language. His vote is easily bought and influenced and he is often used as a tool for office-seekers. When he votes according to his own ideas he votes for people of his own nationality caring not whether they are capable of performing such duties as are required of them or not; he votes that he may exist under the same laws, have the same institutions as in his native country and be governed by people of his own nationality and not for the benefit of the country in which he lives and furnishes him his livelihood. He has already created the various votes which bear his name for which politicians bid, and which have already been decisive in determining state elections and might easily determine national.

Immigration was gladly welcomed as long as it came from English speaking countries or from countries whose customs and institutions compared favorably with those of ours. But the immigrants who are taking up their abode today are far different from what they were a half a century ago. Then they were composed of ablebodied and industrious men, men of education and wealth who assisted us in our struggles for liberty and the preservation of the union and helped to make our glorious country what it is. To-day, although many come to us in full sympathy with our free institutions and desire to aid us in our attempts of advancement, they do not represent the mass of immigrants. The typical immigrant is an European peasant, whose moral and religious training has been meagre or false, and whose ideas of life are low. He cares not for our free institutions and does not take advantage of them and instead of attempting to cultivate himself and learn of our customs and institutions he isolates himself. Vast sections of our country have been purchased and settled by him. Here all clases of business are carried on by foreigners, he has his own society, his own schools and teachers, newspapers printed in his own language and everything is carried on by foreigners for the benefit of foreigners. We are today breeding diversity of language, religion, and customs, such as never before existed in the United States, because foreigners will not adopt our institutions and become Americans.

The only place for children to be educated to fill the places of American citizens is our public schools. Foreigners should be compelled to learn our language, they should become acquainted with our history as a nation, learn the cost of our liberty and its value. They should grow up learning to respect our institutions and with an ever increasing anxiety for America's prosperity. They should conform to our habits and exert an influence upon their friends until all have become broadly Americanized.

When we view our glorious country and see it dotted here and there by these foreign communities each diverging in its tendencies from the nation's perfection we can readily see how dangerous it may become. The danger is yet small but it is sufficient to warn us to act while there is time and while it can be done easily and efficiently. The time has come if not to stop at least to check and sift our immigrants. Our gates have remained open to the world and left ungarded and the time to guard them is now. Whether or not our civilization can maintain itself and make progress against these vast multitudes of foreign training and ideas; whether it is to master or to be overcome in the struggle is the great problem which the century is to solve.

"American Poisons."

The Frenchman, not without reason, calls our iced drinks "American poisons." As a matter of fact, cool spring water will allay thirst much better than iced water; but it is very difficult to convince those addicted to the iced-water habit of this fact. The grave harm caused by iced water is from swallowing it quickly and in large quantities. If sipped slowly and held in the mouth for a moment, the temperature is raised appreciably before it reaches the stomach, and its cooling effects reach that part of the body where they are most needed,—the head throat and upper part of the chest. For this reason ice cream is much less dangerous than iced water: we eat it slowly, and it is not only entirely melted, but also perceptibly warmed, before it enters the stomach. This well known fact, which everyone can verify for himself, is entirely ignored by those alarmists who draw so harrowing pictures of the internal economy, representing the stomach and its contents as almost paralyzed by the suddenly congealing influence of the introduction of a mass of frozen cream. Of course, if this were so the danger would be immense, for when the stomach is attending to its appointed duties—actively engaged in the process of digestion—it is a little furnace, and any tampering with its fires results in the immediate discomfort of its owner and overseer. When you deluge it with iced drinks you put out the fires, and arrest digestion means acute pain and discomfort. Don't ask it to do so much work when the thermometer goes above 80 degrees; then the fires will not have to be so hot and, you will not suffer from what you feel is a consuming thirst.—From "Summer Hygiene," in Demorest's Magazine for July.

This mornings' Globe has a great article on "Is it a political Bogey?" It claims that "a silverite paper says that the prediction that free coinage would precipitate a temporary panic is but one of the bogies the gold standard men are flaunting in the faces of the people to frighten them." The Globe tries hard to make out it is more than a bogie; but after saying that in case of free silver everybody would wan't gold to hord and the gold would go out of circulation makes a very poor defense. If with gold and silver both as money the gold would all be hoarded would it not be much worse for the country when only the single gold standard was used for hoarding and everything else.

A couple of Kansas men have a scheme to take a very mean advantage of the train robber. It is an apparatus which throws a great stream of boiling water in every direction when a button is touched. It can be readily seen that such a machine would drive the train robber out of his chosen business.

Queen Victoria has completed the 59th year of her reign. It has been the intention to celebrate the event by a grand public demonstration, but, owing to her majesty's health and to her expressed desire on the subject, the plan was abandoned. The project of celebrating the 60th anniversary is already under consideration.

Japanese women are as industrious and as skillful as the men and are doing their share in developing the foreign trade of their country. They are employed in the large factories that are springing up in every Japanese city and some of them are receiving what are reckoned as large wages in Japan for their work as designers and artists.

Reports from Alaska are to the effect that two persons have discovered a "solid ledge of gold quartz, 600 feet wide and 3,000 feet long, beside which the great Treadwell ledge is a mere stringer. There is enough ore to keep 500 stamps going 100 years night and day." Coming on the eve of the failure of crops caused by the grasshopper plague, this is important.

Archbishop Falconio, the successor of Cardinal Satolli as the pope's ablegate to this country, speaks English fluently and has already spent fifteen years on this continent. He was at one time president of the Beneventure college at Allegheny, Pa., then he was sent as vicar general to Newfoundland, and from there he was transferred to Rome, where he has held high executive offices in the Franciscan order.

A Chicago man is the first to invade the realm of fishes with labor-saving machinery. Oscar Plath, according to reports from Washington, is the person who has invented a rod that jerks the fish out of the water by a spring attachment while the fisherman may sleep or otherwise employ himself. The owner's only duty is to bait the hook and the fish and the rod do the rest. Next to the process of catching the finny tribe at convenient fish markets, this device is the most advantageous of any that have recently appeared.

Bicycling has killed gardening for women. At least that is the statement made in New York, alluding to residents in the suburbs, where the practice was once a favorite occupation with the ladies of the household. Women who used to put on a coarse apron, a pair of thick gloves and a broad-brimmed straw hat, and then plunge wildly into gardening, have changed their amusement, and now look for pleasure on the wheel. Seedsmen say that their trade this summer is not half as large as it was this time last year, and that bicycling is carrying everyting along on the stream of its popularity.

At the time of the St. Louis tornado there was so much uncertainty as to the value of the property destroyed and so many wild guesses and estimates that the official figures furnished by the president of the board of assessors of that city are of interest. According to his estimates, which have been made with care and must be regarded as fairly accurate, the loss of property amounted to $10,239,000. This is not so high as some of the early estimates, but the sum is sufficiently large, particularly when coupled with the heavy loss of life, to stamp the St. Louis disaster as one of the greatest calamities of the decade.

The blue laws of New England are not in force in Chicago, but it seems to be dangerous for a man to kiss his wife in public. George Beban and his wife started out the other evening, and when the husband had to go to his lodge, he kissed his wife good-by, but did not leave her. Two policemen saw Beban kiss his wife and arrested both of them for disorderly conduct. They were locked up at the police station for five hours because two policemen regarded kissing in public as disorderly conduct. This, says the Inter Ocean, is nothing short of an outrage, and the policemen ought to be dismissed from the service.

WEST AND SOUTH.

A cloudburst did great damage in Marshal, Wetzel and Tyler counties in West Virginia.

At Jackson, Mich., the Collins Manufacturing company, makers of all sorts of road vehicles, failed for $240,000.

John U. Putnam and his sister Anna and Miss Bessie Newhall, all of Minneapolis, and a young man named Sherman, of St. Paul, were drowned at Annandale by the upsetting of a sailboat.

Advices from 50 wheat counties in Minnesota and the Dakotas show that the crop will not exceed 190,000,000 bushels, or considerably less than the estimate.

North Carolina democrats met at Raleigh and nominated Cyrus B. Watson, of Forsyth, for governor, and elected free-silver delegates to the national convention.

In Denver the first state convention of the national silver party met and elected delegates to the national convention which meets in St. Louis July 22, and indorsed Senator Teller for president.

The Georgia democrats met at Macon and renominated W. Y. Atkinson for governor and elected free-silver delegates to Chicago.

The largest and one of the oldest manufactories at Cuyahoga Falls, O., the Falls Rivet and Machine company, failed for $375,000.

The delegates to the democratic national convention have all been chosen and a canvass of every state and territory on the currency question shows 578 delegates to be for the free, unlimited and independent coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, against 328 delegates instructed for the continuance of the present gold standard.

LATER NEWS.

In a quarrel over the admission of colored children into the white district school ten miles east of Guthrie, Okla., J. H. Swain, a negro school teacher, was shot and killed by W. H. Arnold, a white school director.

Another extensive cave-in occurred the 30th in the workings of the Twin shaft near Wilkesbarre, Pa., shortly after midnight. The cave-in was in that portion of the mine where the victims of the previous cave-in are thought to be. It made a terrible report and was heard all over the town. It had the effect of driving the rescuers out of the slope. The news of the second cave-in had a most discouraging effect on everybody.

The 10-round fight between Solly Smith and Johnny Lavack, at Cleveland, O., the 30th, was declared a draw.

A fire at Brooklyn, N. Y. the 1st burned G. W. Piper's kindling wood factory, E. C. Smith's lumber yard, Ritchie, Brown & McDonald's iron works, Post & McCord's iron works and Brown & Bainbrick's asphalt works. Loss $1,000,000.

FORMALLY NOTIFIED.

McKinley Told of His Nomination by the Republicans.

Senator Thurston Was Spokesman of the Committee — Text of His Address and the Reply of the Candidate.

Canton, O., June 30.—The committee, consisting of one member from each state and territory, which was selected at the St. Louis convention to convey to Maj. McKinley the official notification of his nomination, arrived in Canton on a special train from Cleveland at 11:30 o'clock Monday morning. The day was charming and the members of the committee enjoyed the ride from Cleveland. They were met at the station here by a reception committee, composed of some of the foremost citizens of Canton, and were driven in open carriages to Maj. McKinley's residence, accompanied by a mounted escort. The preparations at Maj. McKinley's were simple. Seventy-five chairs were placed on the front lawn under the trees and facing the house. On the rear lawn a large tent was erected, and in it was a long table on which covers were laid for a hundred guests.

Maj. McKinley received the members of the committee on the veranda. The streets about the house were filled with men, women and children. The crowd surged in at the gates and pressed close up to the chairs where they sat

Senator Thurston's Speech.

Senator Thurston was in excellent voice. His tones were as clear and commanding and far-reaching as they were in the St. Louis convention hall. His speech was received with much enthusiasm and applause.

"Gov. McKinley: We are here to perform the pleasant duty assigned to us by the republican national convention recently assembled in St. Louis, that of formally notifying you of your nomination as the candidate of the republican party for president of the United States. We respectfully request your acceptance of this nomination and your approval of the declaration of the principles adopted by the convention.

"We assure you that you are the unanimous choice of a united party, and your candidacy will be immediately accepted by the country as an absolute guaranty of republican success.

"Your nomination has been made in obedience to a popular demand, whose universality and spontaneity attests the affection and confidence of the plain people of the United States. By common consent you are their champion. Their mighty uprising in your behalf emphasizes the sincerity of their conversion to the cardinal principles of protection and reciprocity as best exemplified in that splendid congressional act which justly bears your name.

"In 1892 your countrymen, unmindful of your solemn warnings, returned that party to power which reiterated its everlasting opposition to a protective tariff and demanded the repeal of the McKinley act. They sowed the wind. They reaped the whirlwind. The sufferings, losses and disasters to the American people from four years of democratic tariff are vastly greater than those which came to them from four years of civil war.

"But your nomination means more than the indorsement of a protective tariff, of reciprocity, of sound money and of honest finance, for all of which you have so steadfastly stood. It means an indorsement of your heroic youth; your fruitful years of arduous public service; your sterling patriotism; your stalwart Americanism, your Christian character and the purity, fidelity and simplicity of your private life. In all these things you are the typical American; for all these things you are the chosen leader of the people. God give you strength to so bear the honors and meet the duties of that great office for which you are nominated, and to which you will be elected, that your administration will enhance the dignity and power and glory of this republic, and secure the safety, welfare and happiness of its liberty-loving people."

When Mr. Thurston finished Gov. McKinley, who was standing a few feet from him and slightly in the rear, stepped forward, holding the manuscript of his speech in his left hand. Maj. McKinley read his speech in a clear, far-reaching voice. It was listened to intently and he was compelled to halt several times by reason of loud applause and cheers. He said:

Maj. McKinley's Response.

"Senator Thurston and Gentlemen of the Notification Committee of the Republican National Convention: To be selected as their presidential candidate by a great party convention, representing so vast a number of the people of the United States, is a most distinguished honor, for which I would not conceal my high appreciation, although deeply sensible of the great responsibilities of the trust and my inability to bear them without the generous and constant support of my fellow countrymen. Great as is the honor conferred, equally arduous and important is the duty imposed, and in accepting the one I assume the other, relying upon the patriotic devotion of the people to the best interests of our beloved country and the sustaining care and aid of Him without whose support all we do is empty and vain. Should the people ratify the choice of the great convention for which you speak, my only aim will be to promote the public good, which in America is always the good of the greatest number, the honor of our country and welfare of the people.

Great Issues Involved.

"Great are the issues involved in the coming election and eager and earnest the people for their right determination. Our domestic trade must be won back, and our idle working people employed in gainful occupations at American wages. Our home market must be restored to its proud rank of first in the world, and our foreign trade, so precipitately cut off by adverse national legislation, reopened on fair and equitable terms for our surplus agricultural and manufacturing products. Protection and reciprocity, twin measures of a true American policy, should again command the earnest encouragement of the government at Washington. Public confidence must be resumed and the skill, the energy and the capital of our country find ample employment at home, sustained, encouraged and defended against the unequal competition and serious disadvantages with which they are now contending. The government of the United States must raise enough money to meet both its current expenses and increasing needs. Its revenues should be so raised as to protect the material interests of our people, with the lightest possible drain upon their resources, and maintain that high standard of civilization which has distinguished our country for more than a century of its existence.

Will Protect American Credit.

"The party that supplied, by legislation, the vast revenues for the conduct of our greatest war, that promptly restored the credit of the country at its close, that from its abundant revenues paid off a large share of the debt incurred in this war, and that resumed specie payments, and placed our paper currency upon a sound and enduring basis, can be safely trusted to preserve both our credit and currency with honor, stability and inviolability. The American people hold the financial honor of our government as sacred as our flag, and can be relied upon to guard it with the same sleepless vigilance. They hold its preservation above party fealty, and have often demonstrated that party ties avail nothing when the spotless credit of our country is threatened.

"The money of the United States, and every kind or form of it, whether of paper, silver or gold, must be as good as the best in the world. It must not only be current at its full face value at home, but it must be counted at par in any and every commerical center of the globe. The sagacious and farseeing policy of the great men who founded our government, the teachings and acts of the wisest financiers at every stage in our history, the steadfast faith and splendid achievements of the great party to which we belong, and the genius and integrity of our people, have always demanded this, and will ever maintain it. The dollar paid to the farmer, the wage-earner and the pensioner must continue forever equal in purchasing and debt-paying power to the dollar paid to any government creditor.

Indorses the Platform.

"The platform adopted by the national republican convention has received my careful consideration and has my unqualified approval. It is a matter of gratification to me, as I am sure it must be to you and republicans everywhere, and to all our people everywhere, that the expression of its declaration of principles are so direct, clear and emphatic. They are too plain and positive to leave any chance for doubt or question as to their purport and meaning. But you will not expect me to discuss its provisions at length or in any detail at this time. It will, however, be my duty and pleasure at some future day to make to you and through you to the great party you represent a more formal acceptance of the nomination tendered me.

Expresses His Gratitude.

"No one could be more profoundly grateful than I for the manifestation of public confidence of which you have so eloquently spoken. It shall be my aim to attest this appreciation by an unsparing devotion to what I esteem the best interests of the people, and in this work I ask the counsel and support of you, gentlemen, and of every other friend of the country. The generous expressions with which you, sir, convey the official notice of my nomination are highly appreciated, and as fully reciprocated, and I thank you and your associates of the notification committee and the great party and convention at whose instance you come, for the high and exceptional distinction bestowed upon me."

After McKinley's speech, H. H. Smith, of Michigan, presented to him the gavel used by Chairman Thurston at the St. Louis convention.

Before sitting down to luncheon, the members of the committee filed through the reception-room and were introduced to Mrs. McKinley and the governor's mother.

The notification committee sat down to luncheon shortly after the speech making. After lunch they were driven about the city for an hour or two and left for Cleveland about five o'clock.

BURIED IN A MINE.

Disastrous Cave-In Occurs in a Colliery at Pittston, Pa.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., June 29.—One hundred miners were caught Sunday morning under a fall of rock in the Twin Shaft mine at Pittston, nine miles north of here. It is believed that all perished instantly, but there is a possibility that some are imprisoned in the drift between two cave-ins.

It appears that several days ago the officials discovered that the rock between the fifth and sixth veins had commenced "working" and to prevent a continuation of this all day Saturday and Saturday night the full complement of day men and such others as could be pressed into service from off the streets were set at work pillaring and propping the sixth vein so as to insure the safety of the workmen who were to go to work to-day. Orders went forth that about midnight Saturday that as many men as possible should be sent down to assist in this dangerous work, as constant cracking and splintering of the roof gave indication that the possibilities of danger were most strongly founded. In accordance with this order between twelve and one o'clock Saturday morning about 30 additional workmen left their homes and loved ones and journeyed to what now seems their end.

The men worked hard and faithfully until a little after three o'clock, when, probably without warning, the roof on the 1,000-foot slope where the men were at work fell in. The concussion was so great that it was felt for a distance of four miles. The foundations of nearly every house in Pittston were shaken, and the citizens first thought a violent earthquake had taken place.

Wilkes Barre, Pa., June 30.—There were no new developments Monday at the Twin shaft of the Newton Coal company at Pittston, the scene of the terrible mine accident. Superintendent Owens, of the Exeter colliery, and Superintendent Thomas, of the Lafflin colliery, who were in the shaft all night directing the rescuers, came to the surface Monday morning. From them it is learned that the work of rescuers toward reaching the entombed miners is progressing rapidly.

It is not now possible to give the exact number, but there is reason to believe there are not less than 70 men entombed, leaving 48 widows and 125 orphans.

PEFFER WON'T SUPPORT TELLER.

Declares That Populists Cannot Fuse with Democrats.

Washington, June 26.—Senator Peffer left here Thursday for home. Before starting he said concerning the populist attitude on the presidential question:

"The recent pronunciamento of a few populist gentlemen at St. Louis urging the democratic convention to nominate Mr. Teller was, in my judgment, an impertinence, and it was treacherous so far as it attempted to speak for the populist party as a whole. These gentlemen spoke without authority from the populist party, and I do not believe the party will sustain them. They have not conferred with the party and had been given no commission to speak for it.

"Personally, I have a high regard for Mr. Teller, but I have no idea that the old party spirit of the democratic organization will be so far relaxed as to bring about his nomination. In any event, I do not think existing conditions warrant populist indorsement of the democratic presidential ticket, even though the nominee is for free silver and the platform contains a positive free silver declaration. I regard the integrity and perpetuity of the populist party as essential to carrying out the plan of reforms we have espoused. The money question is but one of these. While the democratic convention doubtless will be for free silver, yet it will not be expressive of those other great questions of land tenure and of labor which the populist party regards as vital."

NATIONAL PARTY.

Arrangements Are Under Way for the Campaign.

Alliance, O., June 27.—Arrangements have just been completed at the national headquarters of the national party in this city for a grand interstate rally of the friends of the new movement in Minneapolis June 29 and 30. Ex-Gov. John P. St. John, of Kansas, who is vice chairman of the national executive committee, will be one of the principal speakers of the occasion. The leaders of the national party are seemingly jubilant over its prospects. Conventions for the nomination of state tickets and presidential electors have already been arranged for in the following states: Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana, Kansas, Colorado and Arkansas.

Four Persons Perished.

St. Paul, Minn., June 26.—By the capsizing of a sailboat at Clear Water lake, near Annadale, Minn., three Minneapolis young people and a St. Paul woman lost their lives Thursday morning. They were John U. Putnam, bookkeeper for J. Q. Adams, of the corn exchange, Minneapolis; his sister, Miss Anna T. Putnam, a kindergartner employed in the Minneapolis kindergartens; Miss Bessie Newhall, Minneapolis, and Mr. Sherman, of St. Paul. The party had just embarked for a sail on Clear Water lake, and had proceeded not more than 100 yards from shore, where the water was rough, when a gale struck them.

FRIENDS OF SILVER.

They Hold a Mass-Meeting in New York City.

Addressed by Senator Tillman, of South Carolina—Resolutions Urge Democrats to Declare in Favor of Free Coinage.

New York, June 26.—The silver mass meeting at Cooper Union Thursday evening filled the large auditorium and all the available standing room. The audience was enthusiastic and applauded loudly every time an opportunity offered itself. George F. Keeney, organizer of the American silver organization, presided. He said that the object of the meeting was to get resolutions adopted declaring for the free coinage of silver and urging the adoption of free coinage by the Chicago convention.

After Senator Bixby had made a few remarks, in which he said that the country needed free silver, and was going to get it, Hon. Alexander Delmar was introduced as a recognized authority the world over on the money question. He made a lengthy speech in which he said that this nation, if it is to remain independent, must devise and maintain its own system of money, and that he saw with the monetary commissions of 1876 and 1878 that all attempts to render money international are doomed to disastrous failure.

It took several minutes for the vast crowd in the auditorium to get through cheering when United States Senator Tillman was introduced. Senator Tillman began by paying his respects to the newspapers. He said that the night would give an opportunity to show the members of the audience that the newspapers were unconscionable liars. The owners of the newspapers, he said, were prostituting journalism, and not a paper in New York would dare print his speech in full. The speaker said that though he had been much talked about and lied about, he had written his name on a page of South Carolina history in such a way that it would remain there always. Coming to the money question, the senator said:

"If the Chicago convention does not give us democracy and return to the faith of Washington and Jefferson I will have nothing to do with it afterwards. The money question is up and it has got to be settled. It is as important as was the slavery question, and if enough of you can get together to reverse the verdict of the two millionaire conventions you will deserve the thanks of the whole country."

The following resolutions were adopted, and it was resolved that a committee attend the populist conveniton in St. Louis to urge the adoption of the demands as means to harmonize all elements of reform, in order to unite all reform forces for the pending campaign.

They demand the incorporation in the platform of the national democracy of the following:

First—That the mints of the United States shall be reopened to equally unrestricted coinage for gold and silver into unlimited legal tender money of the United States, the gold to issue in the present standard gold coins and the silver to issue in the present standard silver dollars.

(B)—Depositors of the gold or silver at the mint to receive, if they prefer, in lieu of coin at the coining value, coin certificates of the United States, which shall be redeemed on demand in gold or silver coin at the option and according to convenience of the United States.

(C)—And as a safeguard against panic and money stringency the secretary of the treasury shall be empowered to issue such coin certificates additionally against deposits of interest-bearing bonds of the United States, the interest accruing on the bonds to insure to the United States pending their reexchange for the coin certificates, which coin certificates, when returned, shall be canceled; provided that such additional issues of coin certificates shall not reduce the percentage of coin and bullion reserved for coin certificates and silver certificates below 60 per cent. of the aggregate sum of coin certificates and silver certificates outstanding. The now outstanding silver certificates, gold certificates and treasury notes of 1890 to be retired as they come into the treasury.

This (A) is free coinage at sixteen to one, the convenient gold certificate (B) to take the place of gold certificates, silver certificates and treasury notes of 1890. The safeguard (C) would provide for a temporary increase of $327,000,000 of paper money against the silver reported in the treasury June 1.

Second—We demand provision for direct legislation by means of the optional initiative and referendum.

TRADE REVIEW.

Effect of the St. Louis Gold Plank as Viewed by Dun and Bradstreet.

New York, June 27.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"The monetary outlook is not yet clear to some. The strength shown in recent conventions by advocates of silver coinage and expectation that all the elements favoring that policy may yet be concentrated, incline them to a waiting attitude. Their uncertainty retards improvement, notwithstanding the more widely prevalent feeling that the monetary action of the St. Louis convention will be sustained by the people. But many mills have waited as long as they can with safety, and signatures have been given by enough cotton mills of Fall River to insure a temporary stoppage, it is said, the nature of which is now under discussion in conference with the Providence manufacturers. Meanwhile the Pacific, of Lawrence, and the Naamkeag, of Salem, have closed for a time, and practically all the southern cotton mills will be represented at a meeting on Monday with the same object. Woolen mills are active without concert, but 14 are mentioned in dispatches as having closed this week. There is no similar movement in other industries, though the period of summer closing is at hand in many of them and important controversies as to wages of iron puddlers and other hands make it likely that the annual stoppage in that industry may last longer than usual.

"Failures for the week have been 217 in the United States, against 256 last year, and 24 in Canada, against 22 last year."

"The weakness of wheat, which has declined 2.10 cents, and of cotton, which is an eighth lower for spots, though less for futures, have full explanation in decidedly good crop prospects. It may be doubted whether the boot and shoe industry has ever been in better shape on the whole, though manufacturers complain that an advance in price is necessary, which dealers are very reluctant to pay.

"The great combinations, which the Iron Age wisely reasons, tend to cause disastrously low prices hereafter, still control the markets both for material and finished products of iron and steel, though it is reported that lower prices will soon be made for coke, owing to better utilization of products, and for nails, owing to heavy decrease in consumption.

Manley Quits.

Canton, O., June 30.—J. H. Manley, of Maine, has written a letter declining to be secretary of the republican national executive committee, on the ground that the position ought to be held by some one more closely connected with Maj. McKinley. Col. Osborne, of Boston, will probably be selected for the place.

Wonderland, '96.

Every year we have brought to our attention by the enterprising management of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. that this system is the one that takes the traveler to the Yellowstone park.

It is well we are reminded of this, for in our eager pursuits of wealth and pleasure we lose sight of this wonderful region, and of which we have such a limited knowledge. Great wisdom was shown by the government in securing this park for all time to come for future generations, and the time will come when not to have visited this famed region before going abroad will be a reproach.

Only think of a lake at 8,000 feet elevation, and miles across, skirted with mountains, with a steamer to take the sight-seeker around.

The Yellowstone Park is rightly named "The Wonderland," and it must be seen to form any adequate idea of its beauty and grandeur.

In seeking for a pleasure trip, here at our door is one that should be investigated, and every American citizen should have enough national pride to know all about the Yellowstone park.

By addressing the general passenger agent of the Northern Pacific railroad, Chas. S. Fee, St. Paul, Minn., and inclosing ten cents in stamps, you can secure that beautiful souvenir book entitled "Wonderland, '96."

This book will give you all desired information, and contains maps and engravings of the highest order.

The GLORIOUS 4TH.

THE church bells are merrily clanging
At the first red flush of the morn,
And cannon are flashing and banging,
And hoarse peals the ear-splitting horn:
On the air floats the banner of glory—
New stars its bright azure adorn—
And all of the day tells the story
When a nation to freedom was born!

All day, through the heat,
Sounds the tramp, tramp of feet!
'Tis the rampant small boy,
In a frenzy of joy,
Over crackers a-cracking,
And the snappy whack-whacking
Of pistols, torpedoes, and such—
Ah, for him there is never too much!
No pleasure can thrill him,
No music can fill him
With rapture so sweet
As the popping of powder
(Now softer, now louder),
And the rub-a-dud beat
Of the drum, and the life-
Stirring scream of the fife.

But night, with her mantle of peace,
At last shutteth silently down
Over country and village and town;
For awhile in the air
The bright, sky-rending flare
Of the rocket, the sheen
Of the candle's tumultuous glare,
Out-shining the starlight, are seen—
Then quietly, one by one,
Like the going down of the sun,
The tumult, the glory, surcease,
And the day, that so noisily rose,
Sinks down to unbroken repose.
Unbroken? Ha! ha!—
Bang! bang! bang! fizz—
Bang! bang! fizz—
Bang!—
Fizz!—
And the world sleeping is.

JASON'S DOUBLE INDEPENDENCE

[Original.]

ON'T be much of a holiday to-morrow, I'm afraid," remarked the storekeeper of the prairie settlement to the company gathered in his little room.

"Because the cattle's comin'?" put in a settler from across the creek. "Little thing like that hadn't ought to prevent Lone Prairie's havin' a good time on Fourth o' July."

"We'll have too much to do. The herd's a big one, or Jason Moore would not come in with it."

"His first trip to town in six years, I'm told. A woman was in it—wasn't there?"

"Yes, his girl married another man, or something like that."

Two well-dressed gentlemen, sharp contrast to the settlers, entered. They were buyers from the city at the mouth of the river, come to inspect the big herd of Texas cattle to come in off the range.

"What did you say this peculiar herder's name is?" one of them, tall and dark, asked.

"Jason Moore, the best known herder on the grazing ground—an' the best one, too, I reckon."

The stranger seemed a little startled, but he only remarked: "Good day for him to come to town—Fourth of July."

"But there ain't much going on that I know of."

There was something going on, and each member of the settlement found out what it was the next morning early when a small boy on horseback made the rounds, firing a large torpedo at every cabin door and announcing to the startled inmates that a flag-raising would take place at noon out at the schoolhouse.

"Guess we might as well go out and see the fun," remarked George Harlan, the dark-visaged stock buyer. "It's mighty dull hereabouts."

"All right," added his friend, and the two went across the level plains with the rest toward the tiny schoolhouse, set in the midst of the prairie five miles away. A few cottonwood trees were making a brave effort to shade the yard, but were somewhat bent by the steady south winds.

A considerable company of farmers, ranchmen, boys and girls, wives and sweethearts, were gathered and the teacher, pretty, blue-eyed Anna Leland, was busiest of all arranging the programme and preparing for the raising of the silk flag which some friends in her old home in western New York had sent to the school.

"Now, Mr. Graham," to the storekeeper, "I shall ask you for a speech."

"Don't do it—I'll break down," yet everybody knew that he could talk longer than any speaker on Lone Prairie.

As the strangers rode up they were closely watched by the settlers and the assembled families. Harlan was a graceful rider, and not even the Texas pony on which he was mounted could unseat him. He was not in time to see the school-teacher, for she had gone inside the building.

Before he reached the steps another matter of interest had attracted attention. Off to the south, already so near at hand as to surprise all that it had not been noticed before, was a cloud of dust. It was many rods wide and reached in a long irregular line up from the plains of the south.

"Cyclone's comin'!" shouted some excitable individual, and the women were perceptibly nervous.

"No such a thing," reassuringly put in the storekeeper. "That's the herd from the ranches we've been lookin' for, an' it ain't a mile away."

Silently they gazed. Then, as if a commander had come out of the midst of an army, a single horseman was distinguishable in front of the wall of dust and was evidently advancing on the schoolhouse group, gaining rapidly on the herd, now visible, plodding along behind.

"It's the boss herder, comin' in to pick a camp," remarked Graham.

He was right.

In a few minutes a wide-hatted, handsome cowboy dashed up and dismounted, his big spurs jingling merrily as he walked.

"Well," he began, with a light smile breaking over his naturally stern features, "are you here to give me a reception?"

"Hardly," said Graham, coming forward; "we didn't expect you quite yet."

"We're here, just the same, and the cattle are coming fast, too. They're anxious."

He was right. The herd had advanced very fast and the settlers were all on the opposite side of the schoolhouse watching the approach.

As the herder stood there beside the steps, with the bridle reins hanging loosely to his arm, suddenly came a vision in the doorway. It was a young woman, dressed in a fresh pink gown; she had laughing blue eyes and a pleasant face.

But the face grew pale and the girl started back nervously.

"Anna!" said the herder, in a voice which told of deep emotion.

"Jason!" Her words were as strangely spoken.

For a moment neither said more; then the herder went on:

"Why are you out here?"

"Why shouldn't I be? We couldn't all live on that little Illinois farm, and wages are better out here on the prairies than there."

"But—but they told me you were married—to Harlan."

"Who told you?"

"It came from him, I think, and if I find him—"

"Hush—you can find him, for he is not far off. I saw him pass the window a moment ago. He, too, is a westerner and is buying cattle."

"I've been raising them, out on the Texas plains, an' I have almost forgot I had a country, so long has it been since I saw civilization. This is my first trip in from the ranch in four years or more."

"Well, you'll know you have a country on this trip, for to-day is the Fourth of July."

"Is that why all these folks are gathered here?"

"Yes, and I'm to have a flag-raising. You must make a speech. Don't you remember how you used to 'orate' in the lyceum?"

Remember it! It was burned into his mind, and along with it was the recollection of long rides homeward with this same woman who stood before him—then a schoolgirl for whose favors he had striven and in whose good graces he had a formidable rival in Harlan. The herder kicked impatiently at the sunburned grass.

Anna Leland watched him closely and noted the change made by the passing years in her old-time admirer, and she wondered if he still thought of her as he did then.

Suddenly a shout took them to the side of the schoolhouse. The herd was coming and the younger part of the company was enjoying the tilt between two of the big steers that captain-like led the advancing horned host.

HE LEANED FAR OVER.

Five thousand head of cattle! A little sea of thin, nervous faces and wide-spreading, sharp-pointed horns. Sometimes so wild as to defy any but the most expert riders, mounted on fresh ponies; again seeming like farmyard inhabitants in their harmlessness.

These, browsing through the ravines and now feeding quietly while the herders, sitting on their ponies, awaited the boss herder's pleasure, were in the latter wood, and it seemed impossible that they could become as ungovernable as the beasts of the forest. Even as the spectators looked, an exhibition was to be given which would exemplify it all.

The boys of the school were watching the spectacle and likewise trying to do something to show their allegiance to the nation. For the latter purpose they were provided with several large firecrackers. It seemed to them that now would be an opportune time to begin the celebration, and accordingly the fuse of a particularly vicious cracker was lighted and the whole thrown far out in the grass.

Nobody can tell what will cause a stampede. The crack of a stick, the whistle of a quail—anything sudden and strange. In this case it was a Fourth of July firecracker, and it did its work well.

"Bang!" A thousand heads were raised. Bellowing sounds came from the leaders' throats; forefeet stamped angrily and then came the start! With heads thrown back, a dozen steers started off on their wild career. Hundreds followed them, and soon the herd was in motion. It became a blind, unreasoning horde, carrying death to whatever living thing came in its way and controllable only by adroit side-riding of the cowboys.

Jason and the school-teacher stood watching the transformation. They saw, besides the hurrying herders, a stranger in a light suit riding fast in front of the herd.

"That," spoke the girl, "is Harlan."

Jason strained his eyes, gazing at the man. Then he turned to watch his companion jealously. Did she feel an interest in Harlan? He could not tell.

Then something happened. In an instant, the twinkling of an eye, the horse Harlan was riding gave a lurch and fell headlong, his rider partly under it. Coolly Jason watched them. The horse was evidently hurt, for it did not rise—neither did the man, though he freed himself from the saddle.

But why need Harlan rise—a dozen rods away came the wave of flesh which was to make of himself and horse an indistinguishable mass hammered into the sod by thousands of hoofs.

Jason knew this and he felt conscience-stricken that his heart contemplated the catastrope rather gladly than otherwise. What could he do anyway?

That he could do something was evidently the school-teacher's view, for turning to the boss herder, she spoke clearly and firmly one little word—but its speaking meant life or death. It was: "Go"

Jason's brown face colored and with a bow in which Anna thought she realized some of his old-time courtliness, he leaped in the saddle, pressed the spurs deep into his pony's flanks and was off.

Faster and faster until the pony fairly flew over the level sod, but the herd was also advancing. The stranger who lay on the ground looked pitifully at the destroyers. The crowd of spectators at the schoolhouse was intensely interested and excited and wondered what the outcome was to be.

Boldly Jason rode and well. He plunged in ahead of the foremost cattle and with a speed which kept him in the lead made a direct course for Harlan. The latter had half risen and was, bewildered, awaiting his destiny. As Moore drew nearer he was recognized and Harlan felt deep down in his heart that his case was hopeless. For the instant that the two men gazed into each others eyes the old fire of hatred shone—but Jason did not even tighten the reins. He felt for that instant how easy it would be to fail but he did not intend to.

Catching one spur safely in the cinch straps he leaned far over in the opposite direction until his brawny hand could sweep the grasses. The cattle were not ten feet away and a single slip meant a life.

But he did not make it. The trembling form of Harlan met the strong wrist and arm of his rival and Harlan was swung across the saddle bow. Then on and on like the wind, taking the precious load to a place of safety. When he had reached it and the avalanche went roaring by, only to be stopped after miles of mad racing by the mere force of weariness, they rode more leisurely.

"Blessed if he ain't fainted," was Jason's first comment when he reached the schoolhouse and laid his burden on one of the long desks. But Harlan was not seriously disabled. Some water in his face revived him, an ex-physician among the settlers pulled a dislocated limb into place and he looked like himself again.

The rescuer, avoiding the crowd that came forward to praise him for his bravery, sought the blue-eyed woman whose heart he thought he now knew beyond a doubt.

"He's all right," Jason began.

"Thanks to you, sir."

"I don't care to be thanked," bitterly. "I've sat up nights hating that man out there on the ranches—I don't hate him now, but I don't care to have too much glory out of this thing for fear I will."

Anna said nothing. She was a very clever woman.

"Come," she called to the settlers, "it is 12 o'clock and the stars and stripes are waiting for the prairie breezes to kiss them." Several young people giggled.

In a moment all were seated on the grass in front of the building and the teacher stood before them. They sang "America," and then Miss Leland came forward:

"There are two kinds of independence," she began, "one of country and the other of heart. This flag we are about to raise will teach us the first, and yet the other is of as much importance. To-day a member of this circle, strangely brought among us, has thrown away a needless slavery which has bound his heart. He has a new independence that will make him better and worthier." Then she told them how the flag was sent her, the big scholar of the school read the Declaration and, amid the racket of a dozen of the largest firecrackers, the silken banner was pulled up the pole and its folds floated proudly in the breeze.

While Mr. Graham made his speech Anna went to the other side of the schoolhouse—and Jason followed.

"Did you mean that?" he whispered.

"Mean what?" Anna was very innocent, as well as clever.

"That word 'needless?'"

"Did I say that—probably I meant it."

A small boy who peeped around the corner was greatly shocked to see the big-bearded cowboy kiss the teacher.

"I don't believe," remarked Jason, a little later, "that my independence did me much good. I seem to have lost it again mighty quick."

Anna did not argue the question.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

Working Harmoniously.

The conference committe composed of representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Knights of Pythias and the Carnival Association, held a meeting at the Commercial Club in Minneapolis. An enthusiastic handful of men of the sort who always do the work in big events was present, and a fine program of entetainment was mapped out for encampment week.

As a result of conference, the great parade of the G. A. R. verterans will be held Wednesday, September 2, in St Paul, and all Pythian attractions will be scratched off the program for that day knights will be held in Minneapolis, when to give the visiting knights and the thousands of strangers who will be in the city, as well as Minnesota people, a chance to see the grandest parade in all the world. Then on the following day, Thursday September 3, the great parade of the uniformed, the same courteous inducement to witness the parade will be held out to the G. A. R. verterans and the people of St. Paul.

Finally Arrived.

In evidence that great bodies move slowly the long delayed medals and awards of merit from the World's Columbian commission are now finding their way to the respective destinations, after the world's fair has been a thing of the past for nearly three years. The Minneapolis School of Fine Arts is the recipient of bronze medal and diploma as award for excellence of exhibit in the Liberal Arts building. The studies for which the awards were conferred have been an ornament of the school room since their return from Chicago, and the medal and diploma will find place by them.

The medal is a bronze disc, bearing on its face a relief of Christopher Columbus as he took possession of the new world in the name of his king. The reverse side bears the commemorative inscription, "World's Columbian Exposition, in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Columbus."

Lost $500.

James Vongle, a Minneapolis fruit dealer, was robbed of $500 by two supposed friends, for whom the police have since been vainly searching. One of the two is known as Charles Bindin. The name of the companion is not known, but both were Italians. The two men professed to be interested in business at Duluth, and had persuaded Vongle to enter the firm. He drew $500 from the bank with that intention, and placed it inner breast pocket of his coat.

Ducing the afternoon the three men were about the city, and entered a saloon on Hennepin avenue. Vongle says he had his money while standing at the counter, The men excused themselves for a moment, and shortly afterwards he found the money was gone.

In for 16 Years.

Henry Wyman and George Whittaker, the two young men who have made themselves notorious through their wholesale highway robberies in the Twin Cities, received their sentence at the hands of Judge Kelly at St. Paul. The court spoke with great feeling in sentencing Whittaker, who seemed moved, but made no sign. In sentencing Wyman, the court seemed to take consideration of his youthfulness, and gave him one year less than Whittaker. The sentence is a cumulative one, 16 years and six months in all. The court in charging Wyman made the statement that he would leave the state prison in advance of Whittaker, and advised to avoid him.

Boom for Twine.

There has been a wonderful increase in the orders received for prison made binder twine, and up to recently 47 cars had left the prison containing 1,000,000 pounds of twine. This is distributed in all parts of the state. The convicts employed in the twine factory are now working over time and as a result the daily weave of twine has been increased from 13,000 to 16,000 pounds. It will be impossible to fill late orders for twine.

News in Brief.

James W. Griffin, of the national committee of the American Silver Organization for the state of Minnesota, has called a mass convention to meet at Harmonia Hall Minneapolis, July 16, at the hour of 11 o'clock, for the purpose of selecting 30 delegates to represent the state at the national silver convention in St. Louis, July 22. Prominent bimetallists are expected to be present and address the convention.

The residence of Judge Stark, at Rochester, was fired by lightning. The fire was soon extinguished before much damage was done.

Lightning struck the clubhouse of the Minnetonka Yacht Club and tore a large hole from roof to floor.

An incendiary fire was started in a lumber pile in the yards of Youmans Bros. & Hodgins, at Winona. Its early discovery and prompt work by the fire department prevented a serious conflagration.

Charles Baldwin, foreman in the mill of the Nelson Paper Company, in Minneapolis, was fatally injured by falling into the rotary pit of the mill. He was seen standing near the mouth, and by some means not definitely known, fell backwards, striking the stone bottom, 16 feet below.

Frank Waltman, ex-member of the park police, residing at Minnehaha Falls, committed suicide by shooting himself in the mouth with a 38-calibre revolver. It is claimed that the deed was the result of his dismissal from the park police force three weeks ago after he had been allowed the privilege of explaining away certain charges.

Mathias Holzmer, of Hampton, an early resident of Dakota county, was found dead at his home by his family upon their return from church at New Trier, he having committed suicide by shooting himself with a shot gun in the right eye. He was 88 years of age.

A young man named Christoperson, residing near Rothsay, was drowned in Long Lake while bathing.

Miss Cora B. Nichols, while riding her wheel at Duluth, lost control of the same and would have gone into the lake had not an unknown man stopped her. The man was bruised and the girl sustained a severe scalp wound.

The Temple of Serpents.

The small town of Werda, in the kingdom of Dahomey, is celebrated for a loathesome den called the Temple of Serpents. It is a long building dedicated to the priests and mystery men of the kingdom, and in it they keep thousands of snakes of all kinds and sizes. These slimy, crawling creatures literally own the village, as well as the temple which has been erected for their special accommodation, and may be seen hanging from the rafters and door posts of any house in town. In Werda to kill a serpent is a crime punishable by death. The serpents in the sacred temple are fed by a regular corps of hunters, who are paid for their services out of the public exchequer.

The Dewfall in Britain.

Wells estimates the total annual deposit of dew on the British isles as being in the neighborhood of five inches, or about one-seventh of the total amount of moisture received from the atmosphere. This means 22,161,337,355 tons of dew a year, reckoning the ton at 252 imperial gallons.

AYER'S ARGUMENT.

If there is any reason why you should use any sarsaparilla, there is every reason why you should use Ayer's. When you take sarsaparilla you take it to cure disease; you want to be cured as quickly as possible and as cheaply as possible. That is why you should use Ayer's: it cures quickly and cheaply—and it cures to stay. Many people write us: "I would sooner have one bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla than three of any other kind." A druggist writes that "one bottle of Ayer's will give more benefit than six of any other kind." If one bottle of Ayer's will do the work of three it must have the strength of three at the cost of one. There's the point in a nutshell. It pays every way to use

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

There is no dividing line.

—The Good Templers will hold a special meeting in the M. E. Church Tuesday Eve. July 7th at 8 o'clock P. M.

—The new band stand on lower river street has been completed and last Sabbath afternoon the Franklin Band played several pieces in it.

—The band, the St. Anthony Benevolent Society, and other citizens of Delano visited St. Michels Thursday. They were royally entertained.

—Tramps seem to infest this part of the Country in greater numbers than usually. Instead of becoming less numerous their number are daily augmented.

—A Mayor and a member of the school board should aid in enforcing the laws; not in breaking, and opsnly violating them; setting the best possible example of anarchy.

—Some towns wouldn't tolerate a Mayor who invites the brass band into the back door of the saloon on Sunday "to have something" not for a day; Some of our citizen are not very proud of him.

—J. W. McDonald reports quite an encounter between himself and team and a couple of men walking on the road near Horsch's farm west of town one day last week. After passing the couple, John says he made good for town.

—Rev. J. L. Farber preached a splendid Missionary sermon on Sunday evening; to a fair sized audience; The choir rendered some fine selections The Elder won his case judging from the more than usually liberal contribution taken up at the close of the sermon.

—Come to Delano and have a genuine 4th of July Celebration. Prof. Chas. S. Hawker is orator of the day. John Steffes will read the Declaration of Independance, The Delano Band will discourse sweet music, and any amount of sports of various kinds will aid in entertaining you. Besides it is a good day to meet old friends from all over the country. And patriotism is not entirely dead about here.

—At a meeting of the Epworth League held last night, officers for the ensuing six months were elected as follows: President, Prof. Charles S. Hawker, 1st Vice Pres., Mrs. C. H. Green, 2nd. Vice Pres., Miss Mary Catlin, 3rd. Vice Pres., Mrs. H. V. Wilder, 4th. Vice Pres., Miss Julia Cunningham, Secretary, John J. Catlin, Treasurer, Emery Cunningham. The time of holding regular business meetings was changed to the first Thursday evening of each month.

—Prof. Hawker and a friend were shipwrecked in Big Stone Lake while out bathing a couple of weeks since. The two young men rowed out quiet a distance from shore and after casting anchor jumped into the water. After a time the Prof. thought he would get aboard, but when he tried to get to the boat he found it drifting with heavy waves rapidly away from reach. After several attempts he succeeded in catching the craft, when on trying to get in, in his haste to assist his friend he overturned the boat. After quiet a time he succeeded in getting the boat and his friend togeter and then waited until help came. About two hours in the water. The next day a party of three went out when their boat sprang a leak and two of the party drowned.

County Cullings.

The Celebration at St. Michels yesterday was a grand success. The St. Michels Church is one of finest churches in the State.

The applause at Saturdays Republican Convention was hardly spontaneous enough. The chairman of the Convention had to start too much of it himself and to work too hard keep it up.

Wonder if Senator Culkin thoug ht he had the Wright County Republican majority in his vest pocket when he announced his determination to bolt if things didn't go to suit him at the coming Conventions.

It seems strange that A. Y. Eaton is not in the Merriman combine while the gang that has been accusing him of being financially interested in favoring that gentleman's projects are climbing over each other to secure Mr. Merriam's smallest wishes. Why these changes?

Hon. "Billy" Culkin ought to be ashamed to face as intellegent an audience as he had at Buffalo and "roast" as he did the Hon. C. A. Towne for sticking to his principles, while himself changing from a bimetallic to a single gold standard platform. But he did'nt show any shame.

If, intimated by Senator Culkin, at Buffalo, Saturday, the Republicas will cease to reconize the standard bearers among which they have no representative of Wright Co., there is a chance for the Democrats to carry the county this time sure. It is about time Old Wrgh had raised a big man of some sort.

Notice the contrast in the speeches of Tarbox and Culkin. The former honors Mr. Towne in adhering to his principles; to what he believs right; in refusing to stand for nomination on a platform antagonistic to his belief; while the other orator denounced him in bitter terms.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26, 1896.

Little except the Chicago convention is talked about by the politicians of all parties who are now in Washington. All sorts of guesses are being made as to what the convention will do, but nobody, pretends to be able to do more than guess. One thing seems certain, if such democrats as Senators Harris, of Tenn., and Jones, of Ark., are in touch with the controlling element in the convention, as they are believed to be. That is, that Senator Teller will not be even seriously considered as a candidate for the Presidential nomination. Another thing which seems probable, if not quiet certain, is that the South will not furnish the candidate. Senator Blackburn who has been endorsed by the Kentucky democrats will, it is stated, declare his appreciation of the compliment and then decline the support offered, because of his belief that it would be unwise to nominate a southern man.

It is generally admitted by democrats that the fight in the Chicago convention will probably be the bitterest since the convention of 1860, but they all hope that the result will not be so disastrious; and are all certain whatever the outcome that there will not be two democratic Presidential tickets in the field this year. Ample time is to be given for the delegates to fully consider platform and the ticket, with the understanding that when action is taken it shall be concurred in by the minority. Notwithstanding the extraordinary efforts which President Cleveland and his friends are making to prevent it, the general impression among all classes of politicians is that the platform will declare for the independent free coinage of silver by this country at the ratio of 16 to 1.

There was no surprise in Washington when it was stated as coming direct from Mr. Hobart himself that his nomination for Vice Pressdent was the result of an understanding months before the convention with Mark Hanna, but when Hobart's talk got back to Hanna there was probably a few remarks made which could not be printed in a family newspaper. One republican remarked when told what Hobart had said that he thought Hanna might at least have selected a man for second place on the ticket who knew enough to keep his mouth shut.

It looks like it may be assertained after a while just what it costs to make armor plate for warships. During the last session of Congress the Senate Naval committee made a bluff at finding out, but it made such a bad failure that the House committee announced its intention to try, and meanwhile insisted upon inserting in the naval appropriation bill a clause instructing the Secretary of the Navy to make no more contracts for armor plate until Congress acted upon the matter, and also instructing him to have an investigation made by naval officers. This week Secretary Herbert appointed a board consisting of Capt. W. T. Sampson, chief of the Bureau of Ordinance; Lt. Commander N. E. Niles, and Lt. A. A. Ackerman to investigate and report to congress. The general belief is that too much has been charged for the plates by the only two concerns in the country which have the plants to make them.

"I see," said a man who served in Congress with McKinley and who knows him too well to vote for him, "that Mark Hanna is reported to have said that McKinley secured that nomination without making any promises. If Hanna said that he must have been joking, for he must know that making promises has always been a weakness with McKinley. Why, it kept him in hot water nearly all the time he was Governor of Ohio, and he even went so far sometimes as to promise the same thing to two different men. In one such case, where both men had too much influence to be turned down he had to get the legislature to help him out at the expense of the State by making two positions at $5,000 a year where only one had existed when he promised it to two men. Not made any promises. Why, I'll bet my very head that McKinley has promised away every position worth having in the gift of the President, and nobody knows it any better than Mark Hanna."

While the rumor mongers were firing off whole broadsides of Fourth-of-July war fireworks, based upon what they supposed would be the nature of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's report on the situation in Cuba, which, by the way, the President has not yet received, the President was catching a few salt water fish, and Secretary Olney was getting two or three days rest out of town. When it comes down to hard work the sensational newspaper man wears the belt all the time.

MARKVILLE.

June 24, 1896. Now that the St. Louis convention is over, and the great political economists declare the country safe, and that a great tidal wave of prosperity put up in packages for the dear people is about to be let loose; and we are sure that vile metal that Judas used 40 pieces of to buy the potters field with, is truly turned down for all time, and the golden calf will be worshipped with a true American devotion, we should breath easier; we can say, well done thou good and faithful serpent, for thou hast solved the most profound mystery of the ages, and that the single gold standard, will roll back the cloud of national despair, and buoy up the breaking hearts, fill the land with joy and happiness, and there will be no more sorrow. When we think of the awful mistake of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, and scores of others, in using and recommending silver as money for so many years, carrying the old ship of state through many a hard gale, and now to realize that the gold bug has discovered that our country is on the verge of ruin if we persist in coining and using the vulgar white metal as money.

I say it makes ones heart ache to contemplate the glaring error that our good old patriots of 76 and downward, lived and seemed to thrive under.

L. O. the doctors of finances of 96 discoveres that silver, the good old Democratic money of our country, is the soul cause of all our past misfortunes. Let us thank God for the wise law makers of today, and be doubly thankful that our dear land of the free and the home of the slave is safe at last. Selah.

Now our country is safe, every one about these parts is looking toward the great events at Hotel "La Fayette" which has its formal opening Saturday, June 27. A fine bill of attractions is published and every one is expectant of a big time.

The season was opened about June 20. Owing to the morbid political condition it was hard to open the season, and ou this occasion a large crowbar and a monkey wrench made for the event was successfully used, while the band played "My country 'tis of thee" The season is now declared formally opened.

There is one thing the trimmers of politics have left us yet, the grand old July 4th and the Bald Eagle. July 4th is the day we wrested our liberties from John Bull. They could not stand Yankee thunder, but in 73 and 93 they sprang a financial trap that fixes us more completely in their power than a victory at arms would have done, debased our money, and pelted us with bonds until death in many cases has been a pleasure. Well the dear old "Eagle bird" looks poor and his feathers hang down, his pride is knocked out but good food and attention will put him in trim for July 4th.

A poor old man was found at the road side at "Orono" with his leg broken, and his rig smashed up generally, ally, he was taken to comfortable quarters by the good Samaritan, P. P. Swanson.

We have a new Post Master at Markville.

Mr. Harrington, Wayzata lost two valuable cows by lightning.

The Northwestern Association of spiritualists will purchase 30 acres of land, beautifully located on the lake, near Markville, for permanent camp grounds. They intend making it very attractive.

The strawberry season has just closed. I had about ¼acre. Picked about 600 quarts of as fine berries as I ever saw grow. Generally, the crop was a failure, but "Romana" God of the fruits used me well indeed. "Romana" is a good girl, long may she live.

Farm crops are coming along fine, hope they will prove a mortgage lifter to many a poor fellow.

"IS LIFE WORTH LIVING."

Life is worth living, if we live aright,
Eyes to the front, the final end in view,—
The end when all aims trivial or untrue
Must burst like airy bubbles on our sight.

Life is worth living, if we do our best:
Our best is often greater than we dream.
Immortal souls with mighty forces teem—
They are revealed by him that makes the quest.

Life is worth living when our secret thought
Hides no least wish or impulse, hope or aim,
That can bring disappointment, sorrow, shame,
Or hurt to any fellow being's lot.

Life is worth living when we strive to be
Of greater use tomorrow than today.
Moulding ourselves from rough unsightly clay
To something lovely for the world to see.
—ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

THE Minnesota delegation at Chicago are divided like nigger dice, "seben come leben".

SOME of the Republicans in this neighborhood say they are quiet anxious to restore the McKinley bill in its full force. Don't they know it proved inadequate to raise revenues sufficient for the running of the government and don't they know the present tariff system is so near the McKinley bill as to be little better? Would it not be better to have a bill that would raise revenue than one that would "protect" the millionaires in their business of squeezing money from the western farmers.

THE license law fails to regulate the liquor business in this community further than to give a few men a monopoly of the entire traffic in liquors. The contract made between the saloon keeper and the village council is not kept. Saloons are kept open Sunday. Children of tender years go to saloons and buy liquors. Men who have loast control of themselves so that they cannot get home alone are filled still more full, so long as their money lasts. Cards are played in saloons. The license law appears of no use whatever except to allow the few who pay the license the privilege of breaking the laws right along while others who have not the five hundred dollars to put up cannot go into the business: even though they shonld comply in other respects strictly to the law.

PEOPLE are studying political platforms as they never have before. They are reading over the latest made and comparing them with those of former years. They are beginning to learn that their old leaders are, in many instances, leading them astray. They are finding out that instead of such men as Judge Vanderburg, Judge Smith and Hon. C. A. Towne having forsaken the ways they long have trod that they are today, on the leading question at issue, the money question just where they were two years ago, or four years ago, That when the leaders of political parties denounce such men as having turned their backs on their old friends, the leaders are simply barking up the wrong tree. Read for yourselves the following money planks and see what you think.

From Republican National platform, adopted at Minneapolis, in 1892:

GOLD AND SILVER MONEY.—The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetalism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals, so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal. The interests of the producers of the country, its farmers and its workingmen, demand that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the Government, shall be as good as any other. We commend the wise and patriotic steps already taken by our Government to secure an international conference, to adopt such measures as will insure a parity of value between gold and silver for use as money throughout the world.

From the Republican National platform adopted at St. Louis in 1896:

MONEY.

"The republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1879; since then every dollar has been as good as gold.

"We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved.

"All our silver and paper currency must be maintained at parity with gold, and we favor all measures designed to maintain inviolably the obligations of the United States and all our money, whether coin or paper, at the present standard, the standard of the most enlightened nations of the earth.

THE Pioneer Press in an editorial seeks to discourage the bimetallic league. It claims that advocating a ratio of 16 to 1 is pure monometallism; that it would lead to silver money only. The Press pretends to be for both metals and claims that by voting for a single gold standard we will have both gold and silver in circulation. How foolish! If the Press wants both gold and silver for money why don't it work for that and vote for it? and not be wasting its breath howling for gold standard. If a farmer wants both oats and corn for feed, does he sow all oats? or does he plant the entire farm to corn? no! he puts in both kinds of seed and reaps feed better adapted to his business than if he had but the one kind.

Red Hot Reformation.

We were considerably surprised this morning on receiving the following letter from one whom we had known as a staunch Republican. And as it so fully explains the situation with a great many reading and thinking Minnesotians we publish the letter:

MONTEVIDEO, Minn., July 9, '96.

T. J. CATLIN, ESQ,
DELANO, Minn.

DEAR COUSIN: I was sorry you stopped sendiug me your paper but I am under obligations to take and pay for so many now that I am paper poor. But while I never voted a Democrat ticket in my life I shall this year if they nominate Teller; or if they will nominate any good clean silver man and unite the silver factions. I certainly will vote anything to defeat the gold bug republicans. I am no republican. I am opposed to protection that only protects the rich. I say John Sherman is a worse enemy to this country than ever Jefferson Davis was for treason of '73. Call me a Populist, a Democrat or a mugwump; but I will hit the man that calls me a republican. The party that sold itself soul and body to the saloon and not to the Rothschilds, London bankers and Wall Street. No Sir! I hope posterity will disown me if I ever endorse such cowardice and want of patriotism.

I am for law that is of the greatest benefit to the largest number; and saloon license is not; Protection is not; the gold standard is not. Then my principles are at right angles with republicanism.

The best act of a democrat Congress was declaimed unconstitutional by a republican Supreme Court; and a republican Supreme Court denied the right of a jury trial for Debs and I hope the great middle class (the producing class) of our country will rise in the might of united strength in November and snow under the "sound" of the gold bug until we never shall hear the (sound money) "sound" again. Let me hear from you.

Yours for a free country,
THEO. W. KEITHLEY.

A Hint for American Schools.

Belgium schools back up the temperance teachings by a pledge taking day, when the school is decked with flowers, pupils are in holiday costume, and the local officers, the clergy and the parents of the new members, are invited to be present at the ceremony. Children from the age of 12 are invited to pledge themselves to abstain from all strong liquors until they are 20, when it is found they do not usually want to drink.—Waseca Herald.

Misleading.

The attempt of a manufacturing firm in Atlanta, Ga., to practically demonstrate to their workmen the fallacies of free silver by paying them their wages in Mexican silver dollars, simply demonstrates a disposition on the part of the manufacturers to deceive the people. It is a well-known fact that, ordinarily, foreign money, including gold, cannot be disposed of at its face value. Right in our midst Canadian paper and silver money passed at a discount and even British gold is a nuisance for occasional circulation among merchants. Our own silver is looked upon with suspicion in the South American republics, although they know that it passed at par with gold in the United States, and they, like our own people, prefer their own coin for every-day use. The writer of this had occasion, some years ago, to buy several hundred dollars' worth of United States coin in one of the South American republics at a discount of twenty per cent., and his personal experience is that if a manufacturer or farmer had undertaken to pay his workmen in United States silver at its face value it would have been refused.

From present appearence it will be with some difficulty to satisfactorily adjust our financial perplexities, and it seems that an effort ought to be made to discuss this matter honestly and with candor. The time of maneuvering for positions is past; the lines are drawn, and the people, who eventually must decide the whole question, ask nothing but a plain statement of facts, from which to draw their own conclusions. —St. Peter Free Press,

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1896.

Chicago is the Mecca towards which thousands of good democrats are now travelling, and towards which millions more are looking with deepest interest. The weal or woe of the democrats, not only for the present campaign, but for the future, will be determined by the convention which meets in the windy city next week. As far as the most important plank in the platform to be adopted by that convention is concerned the matter is already practically settled in favor of silver. The principle contest in the convention will be over the head of the ticket, it is believed, although there is a report that a fight is to be made to drop the rule requiring two thirds of the convention to nominate. There is another report to the effect that a formal bolt is contemplated by the gold democrats, in case the head of the ticket nominated is a radical silver man Your correspondent will have to see this before he will believe it. From the beginning of this unfortungte fight in the party it has been preached up by the gold men that the fight should be fought to a finish inside the party and that when the National convention had adopted a platform it should be loyally accepted by the minority. Now, men like ex-secretary Whitney and Chairman Harrity of the Democratic National Committee, have done that sort of preaching, and I positively refuse to believe that they are going back on it if they fail to get the convention to see things as they see them. National Conventions are courts of last resort to political parties, and no man should take part in one who is not prepared to accept its decisions. There may be individuals who attend the Chicago convention who will leave the democratic party because of its action, as they have a right to do, but I don't believe there will be any bolting on the part of a body of delegates.

The more that becomes known about Hobart the more republican dissatisfaction there is expressed at his selection by Hanna for the second place on the ticket. At first it was thought that his obscurity would cause him to be accepted without protest by the rank and file of the republican party, but since the newspapers of the country have been throwing their search light upon Hobart's record there is a regular republican howl all along the line. They may not be able to force him off the ticket, but it is certain that had they known as much at St. Louis as they do now that the Blane republicans in that convention would never have allowed Garret Hobart to be nominated for Vice President, and it is doubtful whether Hanna would have asked such a thing of the convention had he known that Hobart not only bolted the nomination of Blaine, in the '84 campaign, but furnished a considerable part of the money to pay campaign expenses of Ben Butler, whose running was a factor in the election of Mr. Cleveland. The Blaine republicans were not any too well disposed towards McKinley anyway, and, now that they know the part played by Hobart in keeping their idol out of the White House, nobody need be surprised if thousands of them knife the whole ticket in November.

President Cleveland has no sympathy for men who are convicted of violating pension laws. He refused applications for pardon for three such convicts just before he left Washington for Gray Gables. In the case of Paul A. Marcellino, he wrote on the application for pardon; "This conviot was guilty apparently, of nearly all the crimes and frauds denounced by our pension laws. He seems in every way possible to have cheated and swindled ignorant pensioners and imposed on the government. The punishment meted out to him was all well deserved, and I cannot yield to the unthinking and irresponsible appeal for his pardon." Upon the application for a pardon for Andrew J. Rooks the President wrote; "This convict personated a dead soldier, and through that means procured a pension and robbed the government. He was justly dealt with by the court, and should suffer all the punishment awarded to him," and upon that of S. O. W. Brandon, who was a pension attorney: "Denied. I am unwilling to pardon those who in violation of our pension laws, overcharge applicants for pensions for the services they render in substantiating their claims."

What will be the condition of John R. McLean boom when the balloting at Chicago is over is a matter of doubt, but it left Washington in a healthy condition and its friends were indulging hopes of success. Ex-Congressman Beriah Wilkins, of Ohio, and one of the proprietors of the Washington Post, is one of the chief boomers. Mr. Mc Lean is proprietor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, and has important business interests in Washington, where he resides most of the time; but he, of course, retains his citizenship in Ohio.

McGary Again.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:

"Thou art this head of gold.

The metallic image seen by King Nebuchadnezzar was composed of four different metals." But the Republican platform adopted at St. Louis on 18th of last month was composed of but one metal, gold. William McKinley and Wall street being the head of gold. Your correspondent read the Republican platform with considerable interest, but to my mind much of it seemed misleading. It says the Republican party is unrestrictedly for sound money. Then why did they demonetize silver in 1873 when it was at a premium of three percent. It further says the Republican party caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments 1879. Since then every dollar has been as good as gold. Then why have the leaders of the Republican party been telling the people that we have got only a fifty cent silver dollar, then further on they say we are opposed to free coinage of silver. Then why should we have free coinage of gold? Now it seems to me if a man can read that platform from a nonpartisan standpoint he can plainly see that it is a trap to catch suckers. They say small fish will nibble at any kind of bait and I find that the whole platform nearly is a combination of this, or that, in order to catch the vote of the people and some of it is rather laughable where it says Republican party is mindful of the rights and interests of women. We call for their admission to wider spheres of usefulness and welcome their co-operation in rescuing the country from Democratic and Populistic mismanagment and misrule. In other words as they have not been able to kill the Democrats and Populists they want the women to help them do it, but what did they promise them in their platform? Nothing.

Just above this read the temperance blank composed of three lines and 19 words. What do you get out of it? nothing. It was not intended to mean anything. It is less void of meaning than Balam's ass was of speech, but this is not to be wondered at for it is said that train loads of beer and other drink was shipped in from Milwaukee and other places to quench the thirst of the convention crowd, and they sold it all day Sunday and Sunday night in violation of the state laws of Missouri, and the drunken rabble howled themselves horse for McKinley; (Will it be the same at Chicago?) but what makes this loook all the worse, the Republican party have always claimed to be a temperance party. If they are a temperance party we pray to the Lord we may never see another temperance party. Now the question is if all our just laws and the prosperity of our government come through the Republican priesthood then the Democrats and no other parties have any right of inheritance.

It seeems many of our best men are undecided upon the money question; think it to complicated and cannot understand the drift of its meaning, but this is only a scare crow set up before them by leaders like Carlisle, John Sherman, and others. Silver is just as much a constitutional money now as it ever was, and the silver dollar just as much a legal tender as it ever was, then why should there be such a discriminating between gold and silver. They tell you free coinage of silver would enrich the mine owner. Then our free coinage of gold must enrich the mine owner. That is not the trouble but the trouble is this: the bankers, bond holders and money loaners know if we get free coinage of silver, every dollar of that will go into circulation and the people will get it, and this is just what they do not want, for this class of men can make more when money is scarce; but the question is, do you want the other fellow to make himself rich at your expense, and thats what they will do when we have a single gold standard. Let us not allow ourselves to be betrayed with a kiss.

Naturally I think McKinley a very good man, and I believe from his heart he is a tree silver man, but in politics is naturally ambitious, and his love of office, popularity and self aggrandizement would not constrain him from accepting a nominatien for President on a single gold standard platform.

Would say to my brother farmers and all those who depend upon their own labor for a living, this single gold standard business means no good luck for you. It is only another link in the chain of oppression which will bind you tighter and tighter, and from which there will be no rescue, only by revolution.

Take the statistical report of the census of 1890 and see what our mortgaged and bonded debt is, and this alone is enough to satisfy any sane man that there is something wrong. Congresss is a combination of lawyers, bank Presidents, Presidents of corporations etc. There is in the United States Senate 57 lawyers and in the House of Representatives, 232 lawyers, making a total of 289 lawyers in Congress. There are two farmers in the Senate and 14 in the House. Now if our laws come through the Republican priesthood (for the Senate and House have a Republican majority) it would seem they are largely responsible for some of the money evils that our nation is afflicted with at present.

The wealth producers everywhere are in debt and especially the farmer and as we farmers do not raise dollars but do raise produce and buy dollars. The dearer and more scarce the dollars the more produce it takes to buy a dollar with which to pay our debts. So it takes no philosopher to see why the bankers, bond holders and moneyed men want a single gold standard.

It is strange that the banking Jews and and a few old fogies like old John Sherman (who should be dressed in petticoats and breech clout, spanked and sent home) should so influence the people that they will go in direct opposition to their own interest.

The mortgage debt of Minnesota, according to the census of 1890 (and it is no less today) was $197,745,989. How will this ever be paid, when you have adopted a single gold standard and the mortgagor must pay a premium on gold to pay it, no, never! This earth will dissolved and melt into fervent heat before it can ever be done under such a system.

Now Mr. Editor I am done but before closing must ask your pardon for taking so much of your valuable time; but this question has become a Leviathan heaped upon the people by a lot of bobtail aristocrats without cause or provocation and I am willing to help carry amunition from the magazine to the siege gun that will blow this across the continent into Polar seas where it will have a chance to cool off.

Chicago Convention.

DEMOCRATS FOR FREE SILVER.

The Democratic National Convention has been in session at Chicago since Tuesday. More than two thirds of the delegates are voting for free silver ideas. David B. Hill was nominated for temporary chairman but beaten by a majority of 207 by Senator Daniels, of Va. Senator White, of Cal. was made permanent chairman.

A platform advocating free silver was adopted by a vote of 628 to 301.

At last nights session ringing speeches were made and nominations for Presidential nominee were made as follows: Bland, of Mo., Boies, of Iowa, Matthews, of Indiana; Blackburn, of Ken., Bryan, of Neb., McLean, of Ohio. From this array of ability it looks as if a good man would be chosen to lead the Democratic hosts to victory.

Report says Bland is the Nominee.

Under the new constitution of Mexico which went into effect this month the central government alone will have the power to issue money, collect customs and regulate commerce.

Some of the kites with which the weather bureau has been experimenting are powerful enough in fair weather to lift a man from the ground. Perhaps the new kite will be the next American fad. A combination of kite and wheel ought to satisfy the most ambitious scorcher.

Franklin wished that he could live a hundred years longer to see what advance the world would make in that time. It has gone ahead considerably in science and invention, but as far as men are concerned Franklin would find himself second to nobody on earth.

A Vienna professor contends that baldness is a mark of higher evolution, and a French scientist declares that the heels should be higher than the head to reach the full result of intellectual sleep. People will be apt to prefer ordinary, sound, unintellectual sleep, and a Paderewski profusion rather than no hair at all.

The director of the geological survey reports the mineral output during 1895 at $611,795,290, an increase of $80,000,000 over the previous year. This is less in value than the record for 1892, when a total of $648,000,000 was reached. But the quantity in that year was not so great as in 1895, when lower prices ruled.

Both Edison and Tesla are claiming an invention which quadruples the power of the incandescent lamp. The light is produced cheaply in a vacuum tube, and is a brilliant white glow resembling daylight. It seems that the two inventors have been working independently on an idea which is likely to be of great practical importance.

The United States and Canadian governments have entered into an agreement whereby citizens from both sides of the border may enjoy equal fishing rights in the St. Lawrence. This seems reasonable and sensible. It is far better to invest money in fishing tackle and jugs for spring water than in guns and fortifications along the boundary line.

Much is said of the bicycle as a disturbing element in business. One statement is that 2,000 tailors are out of employment in New York because the vast army of wheelmen have ceased to wear fine clothes on Sunday. On the other hand, the profits of the rubber men last year were over $3,000,000. There are always two sides to a business revolution.

Dr. Baraduc, of Paris, and Drs. Istrati and Hasden, of Italy, are having much success in the photography of thoughts, a thought current being sent at times with intensity enough to affect a sensitive plate. The man who sees his neighbor's boy knocking off the pickets of his frontyard fence can photograph his thoughts and send them to the boy's father.

The bicycle, to the front in everything else, is not to be left behind in the most important matter of these summer days—the marrying and giving in marriage. Recently occurred a wedding where the bride and groom, ushers, maids and 30 guests donned cycling costumes and wheeled to the church. The ceremony was performed by a clergyman who is an enthusiastic bicycler. After the marriage service the party rode to the house of the bride for a wedding breakfast.

The St. Louis tornado has led to a great demand for insurance against such risks. Some $2,000,000 of this insurance is said to have been written in St. Louis alone since the calamity. The fact that the insurance losses from tornado damage in St. Louis and East St. Louis together aggregate only about $400,000 shows to how small an extent property had been protected against damage from this source. About one-fourth of this loss is on plate glass broken in the larger city.

Statistics which have been collected show that the annual cost to the people of the British empire for horse racing, hunting, shooting, golf, boating, cricket, tennis and other sports in which they indulge is something in the neighborhood of $200,000,000. The cost of American sports, while undoubtedly much less, will also reach an enormous total. It may be that the English and American people are overdoing the gratification of their sporting proclivities, but it cannot be denied that the Anglo-Saxon race has been greatly benefited by its love of sports.

In his baccalaureate sermon at Harvard Rev. Lr. Lyman Abbott said: "We hear the cry that murders, divorces and all crime should be kept from the press. No! We want a press that shall tell us the vices of mankind as well as the virtues. The press is a looking glass. We look in it every morning and we see ourselves very dirty. But we do not want to find fault with the glass. We want to wash ourselves." The truth never hurt anybody. It is possible to tell it, however, without dwelling on disgusting details, and that is more and more what the press of this country is doing and will do.

Baseball was as a professional game played first at Hoboken, N. J., on June 19, 1846, between the Knickerbocker and New York clubs. The first team was organized on September 23, 1845, but it was not until the following June that a match game was played. It consisted of only four innings, the rules providing that the side being first to score 21 runs should win the game. The bitter rivalry which afterward existed between the Athletics of Philadelphia and the Atlantics of New York gradually gave rise to professionalism, and these clubs were the first to pay their players.

THE DEMOCRATS.

The Fight Between Gold and Silver Begins at Once.

David B Hill Is Named by the Committee as Temporary Chairman, but the Convention Decides Otherwise—Daniels Was Elected.

Chicago, July 7.—In the capacious Coliseum, in Jackson park, the democratic convention met today.

After a brief but decisive battle the silver men vindicated their supremacy. They wrested from the hands of the gold phalanx the control of the convention and gathered the reins of power into their own hands.

The invocation of the boyish chaplain, Dr. Stires, an Episcopal divine, with its appeal of peace, had hardly ascended to the throne of grace before the hosts had met in battle. The gold men carried out their program of presenting Senator Hill for tomporary chairman, but the silver leaders antagonized him with Senator Daniel. For two hours the oratorical gladiators of the opposing forces fought it out on the platform.

The result of the roll call showed 556 votes for Daniel and 349 votes for Hill, practically the strength of the two sides.

Senator Daniel, who assumed the duties of presiding officer, sounded the keynote for silver in a ringing speech.

The silver leaders in control carried through the remainder of the program to-day, and to-night the several committees are in session with silver everywhere in control.

The convention adjourned until 10 a. m. Wednesday.

There is little change in the situation as to candidates to-night. Bland still has a strong lead, but the possibilities of all sorts of complications which may blockade his way have made his followers anxious, and the talk of abrogating the two-thirds rule in his interest has been revived.

The committee on resolutions met at the Palmer House. Senator White, of California, was elected chairman of the committee. Before he could take the chair a committee from the committee on permanent organization called upon him and notified him of his selection for permanent chairman. Senator White accepted the permanent chairmanship.

The sub-committee on resolutions have decided on the following financial plank:

We are unalterably opposed to the single gold standard, which has locked fast the prosperity of an industrious people in the paralysis of hard times. Gold monometalism is a British policy founded upon British greed for gain and power, and its general adoption has brought other nations into financial servitude to London. It is not only un-American, but anti-American, and it can be fastened upon the United States only by the stifling of that indomitable spirit and love of liberty which proclaimed our political independence in 1776 and won it in the war of the revolution.

We demand the immediate restoration of the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation.

We demand that the standard silver dollar shall be a full legal tender, eqnally with gold, for all debts, public and private, and we favor such organization as will prevent the demonetization of any kind of legal tender money by private contract.

Chicago, June 8.—At 2:15 o'clock the subcommittee on resolutions finished its labors and the anti-silver men went to Senator Hill's rooms to prepare a minority report briefly as follows:

The financial plank leads the platform with a declaration against free silver and denounces the issue of bonds in times of peace; demands that the power to issue notes be taken away from national banks; declares for a tariff for revenue only and that the reenactment of the McKinley bill would be a menace to prosperity; asks for a constitutional amendment for the enactment of income tax; expresses sympathy for Cuba: demands that pauper emigrants be kept out of the country; favors liberal pension legislation; expresses approval of Senator Hill's bill for regulating cases of contempt of court in the United States courts, and denounces the republican house for not passing the bill; denounces the Pacific railway funding bill now pending in congress; opposes third terms for presidents as a cardinal principle of democracy and denounces the extravagance of the last republican congress.

THAT THEY MAY HEAR

Some fish, like the perch, are provided with a very singular device for hearing. Nerves lead from cavities in the skull to the air bladder, and the vibrations are conveyed to this internal receptacle as to a drum.

There is a curious difference in ears between the donkey and the horse, the ears of the latter being small and well shaped, while those of the former, though he hears no better, are of extremely generous proportions.

Many varieties of jelly fish have in their auditory apparatus small globules of lime called "ear stones," which are believed to serve the purpose for the jelly fish that the carbonate of lime powder serves in the human ear.

The ear of the elephant, like his eye, is very small in proportion to the size of the animal, although the flap of skin which covers it is often of considerable size. The hearing of the elephant, however, is singularly acute.

From the middle ear to the side of the pharynx, a small canal is found. When this is stopped up, as sometimes happens during cold or inflammation, an unpleasant sensation is produced by apparent pressure on the tympanum.

RIOT AND BLOODSHED.

One Striker Killed — Funeral Sermon Arouses Comment.

Cleveland, O., July 3.—Bloodshed again marked the trouble at the Brown hoisting works Thursday afternoon. One man, William Rettger, was shot dead by a non-union man who had attempted to leave the works on his bicycle and was attacked by a portion of the mob. The police managed with great difficulty to rescue him, and the police detail was besieged in a shop and had great difficulty in preventing the lynching of their prisoner. Finally a call for troops was made and two of the four companies under arms were hurried to the scene. The prisoner was finally loaded into a patrol wagon and about 7:30 p. m. was locked up in the Central police station. The troops remain on guard and at midnight there was a sullen mob of at least 10,000 persons hanging around the premises.

Shortly before the hour for quitting several strikers marched up to the Brown works with a big banner, on which was written in black type: "Brown Scabs." At 4:30 o'clock the main body of the workmen were marshaled into line and the police force formed the usual hollow square. Capt. English gave the word, the gates were opened and the solid body of men, workmen surrounded by 150 policemen with clubs in hand, marched out. The crowd gave way, and the procession moved up Hamilton street to Case, on the way to the St. Clair street cars.

The crowd followed, as on Wednesday evening, yelling "Scab!" and making a lively vocal demonstration. Contrary to what the mayor had declared would be done, the police did not drive back the following crowd. At least, they allowed them to follow up Hamilton street. In the meantime the police marched steadily forward to Case, up Windsor to Willson avenue, and reaching the Fourth precinct station near Euclid, a halt was made. Forming two lines, the police allowed the workmen to enter the station.

All out of the way, the police formed again across the street. At this moment the following party was a dense black crowd reaching far down Willson avenue. Suddenly the word "charge" was given. It rang out loud and clear and an awful scene followed. The police sprang forward like a shot out of a gun. In a moment they were upon the vanguard of the crowd. The latter were dumfounded. There was a waver and then all turned and fled. But the deadly work had commenced. The batons of the police were falling like hail on the heads of the men. The crowd was panic-stricken. Two cars blocked the way north of Willson avenue and the men, women and children were packed together in a tight mass, yelling and shrieking. One part broke away and ran down the Cleveland & Pittsburgh tracks close at hand. Another went south on Willson. Men were lying unconscious on the streets or crawling around in a vain attempt to rise to their feet. The police, dividing into squads, charged after each section of the crowd, determined to inflict punishment severe and unrelenting. This lasted for several minutes, and then returning squads of policemen began to gather up unconscious men and others who were staggering around as a result of severe blows.

During the fight the police captured five of their assailants, each of whom was in a bad condition from clubbing. William Hearn, a furniture van driver allowed the strikers to crowd into his wagon and then crying: "Give them h—ll," drove right into the police line with his horses on a run. Several policemen were knocked down before the team was captured. Hearn was dragged from the wagon and clubbed into insensibility before he could be carried into the station. His skull is fractured and his face and head cut and bruised fearfully. Steve D. O'Neill was also on the wagon and has a broken head and a broken leg. Hermann Schaels, a blacksmith, has a terribly cut head and was badly hurt by being trampled on. James Fox and Charles Cuppenbecker were each badly cut about the head. Charges of rioting were preferred against the five prisoners. The mob managed to carry away all of the others who were injured so as not to be able to walk. A conservative estimate is that 50 men were severely injured by the clubbing.

Cleveland, O., July 6.—The funeral of William Rutiger, the striker killed at the Brown hoisting works, was the most impressive funeral pageant ever given a laboring man. In Cleveland there has been but one occasion when there was a larger procession and greater crowds—the funeral of Garfield. Sunday by actual count 10,300 men formed the funeral cortage. The funeral services were held in the Church of the Immaculate Conception. A conservative estimate places the number of spectators about the church and along the line of march to the cemetery at 100,000. The procession moved quietly and save for the dirges played by the many bands no sound save the tread of feet broke the quiet. The white casket in which reposed the remains was literally buried in flowers.

Eugene V. Debs telegraphed that it would be impossible for him to attend the funeral, but that his heart and soul were with the locked-out employes in their fight. Mgr. Thorpe, who it is thought will be made bishop of Buffalo diocese, delivered the sermon and his remarks were not altogether relished. In the course of his sermon he said:

"The body of this young man lies before this altar. We know how he came here. Human passion is strange, and the lesson to-day teaches that we many times go beyond our strength, and that there is no way to reason against human passion. The lesson we must learn to-day is that in society to-day there are two classes, capitalist and wage-earner. Next to capital there is the strong right arm of labor. One cannot exist without the other. The capitalist has the right to manage his capital. He has the right under the laws of the state and nation. He makes hazardous adventure, and on account of the risks in business has the right to do as he chooses. He may abuse that right and forget God in his enjoyment of his riches. If he does, there is a remedy, but it does not lie in passion or violence. I speak to you as brothers. The remedy is public sentiment and the law. There is another class, not banded together as you are. They have their individual rights, and those who administer the law must protect them. Scenes have been enacted during the past week which should never have occurred. These men who have became victims of your hate have rights under the law."

He continued at some length to score the strikers for the scenes of violence. After the funeral the sermon was roundly denounced by many.

Cleveland, O., July 7.—There was no trouble Monday in the Brown hoisting strike. The police and troops are still on guard. Only 50 men were at work. The strikers are very bitter over Manager Thorpe's funeral address and have issued an open letter addressed to him in which he is denounced in unmeasured terms.

AGREE ON A COMMITTEE.

Men Who Will Run the McKinley and Hobart Campaign.

Cleveland, O., July 4.—The republican national committee's headquarters will be in New York city and there will be no branch anywhere. The campaign of education through the dissemination of literature will open immediately and the regular campaign about September 1. The executive committee will meet in Cleveland for the first time about July 20. The members of the executive committee as agreed upon between McKinley, Hobart and Hanna are as follows:

Mark A. Hanna, Cleveland, chairman.
Charles G. Dawes, Evanston, Ill.
W. T. Durbin, Anderson, Ind.
Cyrus Leland, Troy, Kan.
John I. Long, St. Augustine, Fla.
Joseph H. Manley, Augusta, Me.
Warner Miller, Herkimer, N. Y.
Henry C. Paine, Milwaukee, Wis.
Matthew S. Quay, Beaver, Pa.
William McKinley Osborne, Roxbury, Mass., secretary.

Some of these names are dependent upon the agreement of all the party leaders within their respective states, it being Hanna's settled policy not to antagonize any faction by the appointment of an opponent.

TRADE REVIEW.

The Situation as Seen by Dun and Bradstreet—The Failure Record.

New York, July 4.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"Current movements have been so largely of a temporary character or else purely speculative on the day by day plan, that they are not highly instructive. Thus an extensive shut-down of cotton mills is solely in the hope that half production in July and August may clear a largely overstocked market. Stocks fluctuations were still more ephemeral, including two sharp declines and partial rallies within a week, both laboriously ascribed to various political causes, but mainly due to keen operators who saw chances for a quick turn.

"Extended reviews of the half year's operations in leading branches of manufactures go far to explain numerous stoppages. In woolens they are without concern. Mills are waiting for orders, the sales of wool having been not a third of last year's for the same week. Prices are depressed, but still depend on foreign possibilities. In cotton goods the closing of many mills, both north and south, for half of July and August, is in effect a recognition of the fact that heavy stocks of goods manufactured from cotton costing between 7½ and 8½ cents could not be expected to show profits if the mills go on manufacturing until a new and probably heavy crop of cotton is ready. The reduction of prices has brought out a large demand in many cases, but not enough to meet the output of the mills. A further decline in print cloths to 2½ cents is significant, when such a decrease in production is assured.

"Having begun by reducing prices to the lowest ever known, boot and shoe producers are doing a shade better in prices with leather a little cheaper on the whole, though hides have mounted to about the level of January 1. The output of iron has largely decreased, and there is a quite general stoppage of works for repairs, but the annual controversies about wages have in most cases been settled, and it is believed will be settled in all without strikes.

"Wheat declined one-half cent and recovered one-fourth cent, but western receipts continue remarkably large. The stocks in sight are greater than a year ago, and though winter wheat yields less, spring wheat seems likely with fair weather to yield more than last year. Corn promises remarkably well and also oats. Cotton greatly needs rain in parts of Texas, but better reports come from most of the other sections, and a large increase in acreage is generally reported.

"Complete failure returns for the second quarter of 1896, April 1 to June 30, inclusive, cover 2,905 in the United States, against 2,855 in the same quarter of last year. Failures for the week have been 257 in the United States, against 195 last year, and 22 in Canada, against 24 last year."

Bradstreet's says:

"General trade, in both commercial and industrial lines, is duller, but the failing is, in part, the usual midsummer dullness. Comparatively few changes are noted, but most of them are decreases in either price or demand. Quotations for wheat, Indian corn, cotton, oats, iron and steel are lower. Sugar has reacted after the decline of last week, leather remains conspicuously firm, with shoe factories busily employed, and petroleum and anthracite coal are higher. The sentiment of the trade at many points is that the immediate outlook for business is not favorable. At some western centers complaint is made that the purchasing power of the agricultural community is curtailed by prolonged low prices for farm products. The general industrial situation shows no renewal of activity."

HONOR JEFF. DAVIS.

United Confederate Veterans Lay the Corner Stone of His Monument.

Richmond, Va., July 3.—The three-days' meeting of over 100,000 confederates ended Thursday in the laying of the corner stone of the Jefferson Davis memorial monument. Immediately upon the adjournment of the convention sine die the line of procession to Monroe park, where the monument will be erected, was formed. There were 20,000 men in line and 200,000 people witnessed the parade, which was headed by Gen. Gordon, and had in its ranks several well-known surviving heroes of the C. S. A. The column included every branch of the military service, and with inspiring music and national and southern colors floating above it was at every point greeted with enthusiastic cheers. It arrived at Monroe park at four o'clock in the afternoon, and after brief masonic ceremonies and a prayer by Bishop Granbery, Gen. Stephen D. Lee delivered an oration. A benediction closed the exercises and the great crowd disbanded. In his oration Gen. Lee said in part:

"We are here to-day to honor the memory of Jefferson Davis; to lay the corner-stone of a monument to one who needs no monument in our generation beyond that in the hearts of his countrymen. But we think it due to erect one, that posterity may know the reverence felt for the great leader of a cause that failed. It is fitting that he should rest here in Virginia—that greatest of all states, the battle-scarred producer of warriors and statesmen—fitting that he should rest here among her immortals. Many presidents, statesmen, soldiers, lie in Virginia soil—from Washington to the present time—none greater than Davis, but more fortunate.

"Jefferson Davis stood the test of true greatness; he was the greatest to those who knew him best. He was opposed to disunion and did his utmost to prevent the step. At the conference called by Gov. Pettus, of Mississippi, of the representatives of congress from the state in 1860 Mr. Davis declared himself opposed to secession as long as the hope of a peaceful remedy remained. In calmer years, when the last ember of sectional feeling has burned out and the last word of love has gently bound the hearts of all Americans together, fathers will bring their little children to this spot and tell them the story of a pure, great man, who suffered for his people and for the right as they understood it, and how for this they loved him as they loved no other. Long as yonder noble river shall roll its tide to the sea it shall behold no man more kingly."

The monument of which the corner stone was laid Thursday will cost $400,000, and will be one of the most magnificent memorials in the United States. The site was donated by the city council.

OVATION TO TELLER.

The Colorado Senator Warmly Received on His Way Homeward.

Denver, Col., July 2.—Senator Henry M. Teller could have aroused the west to no greater demonstrations of approval had he been a sovereign of an empire or a president of a republic. All Tuesday night his progress west from Omaha along the line of the Union Pacific was marked by noisy demonstrations at every stopping point in Nebraska. Bands met him with energetic martial and patriotic airs, crowds cheered and demanded a speech, and at many places the senator was fairly dragged from the train, mounted upon boxes where he could be seen as he thanked the people for their good feelings towards him and the cause he has been championing. It was long after midnight before his party or any other passengers on the train could take any comfort or rest.

FATE OF AN IOWA BELLE.

Miss Minnie Kiel Murdered by an Unknown Near Bellevue, Ia.

Dubuque, Ia., July 7.—Minnie Keil, 18 years old, was murdered in a meadow four miles below Bellevue Saturday afternoon while en route to a neighbor's to join a party going to a dance. The body was found 24 hours later. The skull had been broken with a stone and club and the scene bore evidence of a desperate struggle. There were no marks below the neck and no attempt at violation. She was the belle of the neighborhood and the authorities believe her preference for one lover excited the jealousy of other young men under surveillance.

A FABLE.

The Squirrel, Owl and Mice, Also the Reflections of a Bluejay.

It was in late summer and the owl sat upon a branch looking very wise and doing nothing, while the squirrel busied himself with the nuts lying about on the ground, gathering them expeditiously and stowing them away in hollows and holes.

Winter came by and by and with its sharp cold and deep snow, but still the owl sat upon the branch looking wise and doing nothing. The squirrel jeered at him, thinking that the owl must be hungry and starving, because the bird had not been a provident one. Each day the squirrel grew fatter, but the owl did not change, which the squirrel thought to be due to the feathers stuck out by the owl in his false pride.

When it was at last between fall and spring time, the blue jay one day saw the wise owl leave its perch on the branch and seize the fat, provident squirrel by the neck and eat him, after which the owl returned to the branch, and sat upon it, looking wiser than ever, and the blue jay wondered if it was better to be provident like the squirrel, wise like the owl, or lucky like the mice that thereafter ate of the squirrel's store.

French Town Which Has Come Into a Heritage of Consumption.

It has long been a cause of controversy among physicians as to whether consumption is contagious or not, and one of the strongest arguments, says the New York Journal, that it is that has yet been produced is the story of the fate of the villagers of Mentone. Forty years ago this place was one of the healthiest villages in France, whose inhabitants were of superb physical development. It was discovered about this time that the climate of Mentone was remarkably beneficial in cases of lung diseases, and people afflicted in this way flocked thither from all parts of Europe. The natural result was that the people who had hitherto been engaged in farming one and all betook themselves to ministering in various ways to the throngs of invalids. The strong and healthy women of Mentone became laundresses and washed, without taking the least precautions, the consumptives' clothes. The place is now described as being a "bacillus pest hole." The very soil and air are said to be contaminated.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

DAWN.

Dawn came into the drowsy world,
The curtains of night she softly furled

She sang to the world austere and gray:
"Get ready—get ready to meet the day."

She put the sleepy stars to bed,
And tinted the fleecy clouds with red;

She gilded the tops of the tallest trees,
And freed the freshest morning breeze.

Evil shades and the sins of night
Fled away from her honest sight.

The sick man turned his weary eyes
To greet her coming in the skies.

"Would God," she cried, to souls in grief,
"I would to God I could bring relief."

She roused the farmer's wife: "Get up,
Prepare the platter, prepare the cup;

"Out in the barn the cows are lowing,
And clover heads await their mowing."

She roused the birds to life and song,
And opened buds as she passed along.

Oh! the smell of the woods was sweet,
When wildflowers bloomed beneath her feet.

But when she saw the Lord of Day,
Modest Dawn slipped out of the way.

A SUMMER NIGHT.

The hot summer sun was beating down on the long white streets and making the flowers on the balconies droop, and even the leaves of the lime trees hung listless and motionless in the great heat. Not a single soul was to be seen in the usually crowded Andrassy street in Buda-Pesth, and the old porter of the Hotel Esterhazy sat half asleep, his chair well drawn back into the shade; he knew very well that no one would disturb him at that hour.

Esme St. Maur lay down on the sofa, lamenting that her fate had made her spend this grilling afternoon in Buda-Pesth. "However shall I stand three week of it? At any rate, I shall not be in town after to-day, and I hope the country house of the embassy is cooler. What time is it, Klimja?"

"Half past four, milady; but the gentleman mademoiselle expected is waiting downstairs, and wants to know if you will receive him."

"Certainly," said Esme, lazily, fastening a pink rose into her belt; "bring some more tea, Klimja, and take those cigarettes away; I shall not want them now."

A few minutes later a tall, sunburnt man came into the room.

"So sorry, Arthur," said the lady; "I'm positively too tired to move; this heat is killing! I'm so glad to see you," she went on, looking up at him. "Let me see, it is nearly three years since we saw each other; what are you doing here?"

The man hesitated a moment and then became pale, and his mouth twitched.

"I was hurrying to England, Esme," he said, "because I heard a report about you that I could not credit; that you were going to be married."

"Well," said the girl, nervously picking off the leaves of her rose, "it is quite true. No, no, Arthur, it's no use," she continued, sitting up and putting her hand on his arm; "sit where you are and listen. You see, dear, it had to come to this some day, and I may as well tell you here as anywhere else; we cannot fight against fate, and the fates are against us. Look! It would be ten years at least before you could marry me, and then I would be a middle-aged woman. And even if I could wait, what am I to do during those ten years? Grandmamma, you know," she went on, turning her face, now appalling in its pallor, toward him, "and left me £50 a year, and since her death I have been living, yes, living on my sister's husband! Think! The proud Esme St. Maur actually living on charity!"

"But surely," Arthur broke in, "surely—"

"Of course they don't say so, but I know, I know. They have three children to educate, and look at the position they have to keep up! I know Frank's income is by no means large, and I feel I've no right to be a burden to them when I've a good offer."

"Who is the man?" he said, dryly.

"Lord Hillborough," she answered, her eyes down.

"A man almost old enough to be your grandfather!" he said, getting up and standing beside her. "Do you care for him?"

"No," she answered, lowering her eyelids wearily; "no, but I respect him more than—than anyone but you."

"Esme," said Arthur, hotly, "how different you are! How calculating and worldly you have become! I remember my little Esme holding forth fiercely that love was the one thing in all the world, that to marry a man without love was the greatest wrong a woman could do him; that—"

"Arthur," she said, "what can I do? I intend, if I marry Lord Hillborough, to be a good wife to him; I cannot be that if I have another man's image in my heart. I must live it down; I must force myself to forget it."

Arthur walked away to the balcony.

"Do not make it harder for me," said Esme, her voice full of sobs. "What am I to do? I cannot do anything to earn my own living. Look at me," she said, bitterly, drawing herself up to her full height; "a perfect woman, strong and healthy, with a small fortune spent on education; and yet, now that I am thrown on my own resources, why, a shop girl could make a better living than I could! Bear it, dear!" she said, going over to him. "You know this must be the end."

"Dearest," he said, in a broken voice, "it is only the beginning. You love me, and yet you marry this man! It is the beginning of wretchedness for you and him and me, for all our lives!"

"Arthur," she said, slowly, "you know me. I have made up my mind, and I will carry it through. There is no other course for me. I cannot do anything for myself and I will not live on charity."

"You never really loved, if you can sacrifice your love to your pride, if you can let your head govern your heart."

"I cannot help it, Arthur; I am engaged to Lord Hillborough, and shall marry him in October. I cannot bear another scene like this. Bid me good-by and go now—forever," she added, shivering slightly.

The man looked at her for a second and, then took both her hands in his. "Yes, sweetheart, I will bid you good-by and leave you forever. But let me come and spend this last evening with you. It is not much to ask, and I promise not to speak one word you would not like. We will have our coffee on this balcony among the flowers, with the lights opposite, as in those dear old days when we first met at Ostend. Say I may come, Esme, for auld lang syne—the last evening I shall ever spend with you."

Three hours after the witchery of the summer night had fallen upon the city, Esme, sitting on her balcony, moved to and fro and let the mystic beauty of the night steep itself into her feelings. "On such a night as this," she thought, as the old words of the immortal Iramstist came into her mind, "I wonder if such a night as this has played as weighty a part in anyone's love story as in mine, and this is to be the last—ah!" as a shiver of remembrance came over her, "how I shall hate the summer nights after this."

'All in the dark," said a voice at Esme's elbow and Arthur sat down at the other side of the tiny table, where the waiter was putting down the coffee tray.

"Why not, Arthur?" she said. "Who could be barbarian enough to have lights brought now? Look at that queen up there!" pointing to the moon. The man opened his lips, as though to speak, but shut them determinedly again. He looked across at her steadily. Heavens! What a magnificent woman she was, with her tawny hair that gleamed like burnished gold in the moonlight — her great gray eyes and the vivid scarlet lips and cheeks that had before been so pale!

"I do not give allegiance to two queens," he said.

"Don't you?" she said, laughingly, as she handed him a cup of coffee, "but you are a faithful soldier all the same, I hope."

"It pleases you to be merry to-night," he answered, quietly.

"Have you ever read Mrs. Browning's 'Mask,' Arthur?" she said, "How little men understood women, after all! You should know that the thing we seem to be is only a cloak to hide what we are really feeling. But there—we taboced feelings for to-night."

"Did we? I only remember promising to say nothing to reproach you, and I shall certainly keep my word. Indeed, I will praise you. It was awfully good of you to let me come—and have one evening like those in Ostend. Do you remember?" He leaned back, and went on dreamily: "I suppose every man has some particular way in which he pictures the woman he loves. I always thought of you on a balcony, in a white dress, surrounded by flowers, looking—well—as you look to-night. I shall remember you always so."

Esme looked up in surpirse. There seemed a resignation in his tone which had not been there three hours before.

"Arthur, your experience as a man of the world must tell you that in a few years your feelings will calm down; you will come to London and we shall meet as friends."

He looked across at her curiously.

"You speak to me as a man of the world. I know I am speaking to a woman of the world. Not to the Esme of three years ago. But even from your calm standpoint of a woman of the world you are wrong. I admit that a man's love might 'calm down,' as you say, even were it as strong as mine, if he reaches his goal, but the removal of the prize beyond his reach makes him long for it more fiercely. Such, at least, is my case. You see, dearest, we feel so differently. I could never bear to see you another man's wife, and therefore I shall never come near you again. You believe that my love will cool down; I know now that it never will, and I prefer to end it at its height, not to see it die a slow death by the stages of affection — regard—indifference."

"End it?" said Esme; "what do you mean?"

"I mean that after to-night I shall never see you again—according to your own wish—"

"Arthur," she broke in, "you misunderstand me. I meant only until you could see me without—without loving me."

"That will never be, dear," he said, "and as I am never to see you again I am glad to have seen you for the last time as I liked to see you best—as I have always pictured you in my heart."

"You are getting sentimental," she said, with a forced laugh. "Your coffee will be cold."

Arthur took the cup and poured a few drops from a small green bottle into it. "Excuse me," he said. "I had a nasty touch of fever a few weeks ago, and take my drops in my tea or coffee, like an old woman."

"Fever, Arthur?" She bent forward and looked at him. "Yes, you look haggard and ill. I did not notice it this afternoon. I wish you would not go back to that horrid India! Why don't you take more care of yourself? Are you going to London now?"

"Oh, do not talk to me," the man said, hurriedly; "tell me about yourself. What have you been doing all these years? Have you been in Ostend again?"

"No," she answered gently; "I have never cared to go back there."

"Then you really remembered and cared, Esme?" The pain in his voice was terrible to hear, but he suddenly recovered himself. "This is quite like one of those evenings. We only want the music," he added, in a different tone.

A silence fell between them for a few minutes. They seemed unable to talk except on the subject they both wished to avoid. Suddenly, as though in answer to Arthur's wish for music, the curtain on the lower balcony was again drawn back and Paul De Jaerschky stepped out.

"Ah," he said, gently, "on such a night there is but one song, mia cara," and his glorious voice burst forth with passionate feeling into that song—the wonderful love song that has touched so many hearts.

Eme bent forward with a sudden expression of agony and buried her face in her hands. "My God, not that—not that!" she murmured. A great trembling shook the man opposite her, but he restrained himself, and, drinking down his coffee with one gulp, he leaned back in his chair with closed eyes. Meanwhile the great singer went on.

"Arthur! Arthur!" cried Esme, kneeling down beside him. "I have been mad! I have been selfish! I cannot forget! Love is the one thing in this world! Rank—money are nothing! I do love you. I will wait! Why do you not speak, love?" she cried, as the man sat motionless. "Will you not take me in your arms, kiss me, say you forgive me?" His hand fell from her grasp. The truth dawned upon her. —St. Louis Republic.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

The State Fair.

The officers and board of managers of the Minnesota State Agricultural Society held a meeting at the Ryan hotel in St Paul. It was voted to instruct Secretary Randall to convert the old pool room on the grounds into an exhibition hall, and that such space therein as might be required be turned over to the states north and west of Minnesota for state exhibits. The cost of such transposition the secretary was cautioned must not exceed $100.

Smith B. Hall was chosen press agent for the year 1896.

The Deere-Webber company submitted a proposition to pay $1,000 to the board provided one day of the week of exhibition be set aside for bicycle racing and exhibits, to be called "The Deere-Webber Company Bicycle Day."

The proposition was accepted, and Monday, the opening day of the fair, fixed as the day. It will be understood that this exhibit may include all wheels of every make, and that those contesting for prizes may use such wheels as they choose.

The board voted to expend $1,000 in prizes for racing premiums, for the best make of wheels, besides music and other incidentals in making bicycle day a success.

A committee of the publishers and editors of the state and the cities asked that one day be devoted to the editors and to general newspaper interests. The request was granted, and Saturday set aside as the day.

It was voted to retain for the agricultural society the receipts on that day, and to divide the grand stand receipts between the Minneapolis and St. Paul Press clubs and the State Editors and Publishers' Association.

The board voted to distribute the six days of the exibition as follows:

Monday—Bicycle day.
Tuesday—St. Paul day.
Wednesday—G. A. R. day.
Thursday—Minneapolis day.
Friday—Farmers' day.
Saturday—Newspaper day.

The secretary was directed to notify the proper persons that the farmers' institutes, heretofore a feature of the state fair, would be omitted this year.

A Neat Map.

The Minnesota State Immigration association has just issued a folder containing, besides much information, a county map of the state, which is intended as a guide to intending settlers. The map shows the railroads, streams and lakes, counties, towns, congressional districts clearly and accurately as possible. Besides the map there is a description of the various counties and congressional districts, information on the soil, climate, lands, timber and otherwise, taxes and the different advantages of the state and other such information. P. B. Groat, secretary of the association, is sending copies of the map to the secretaries of the district associations and other officials, who will forward them to persons making inquiries about Minnesota.

He Killed Him.

John Adler, a shoe cobbler, doing business at 310 University avenue, St. Paul, shot and killed Bernard G. Nellis, a German baker, living across the street from his shop.

The shooting is said to have been the result of revilement. Adler says he killed Nellis because the latter reviled and spat at him. The killing was done with a revolver with which Adler says he armed himself in anticipation of having some trouble. Nellis died within 10 minutes after he was shot, and the murderer was arrested at once.

Will Not Renew.

Benedicts' Academy at St. Joseph and St. John's University at Collegeville, have decided not to renew their contracts with the government for the education of Indian children, as the government has reduced the allowance one-half. At the university there were 48 boys and at the academy 64 girls. These were returned to the reservations at White Earth, Cloquet and Fond du Lac. Formerly $125 was allowed a year for the care and tuition.

News in Brief.

W. A. Bartlett, conductor on the Milwaukee road was killed near Wells the other night. It appears he either fell from the top of the train or was thrown off by tramps.

John H. Koch, formerly a boot and shoe merchant of St. Paul, put a tragic end to his life by deliberately throwing himself beneath the wheels of a moving freight train in the Omaha yards at the foot of John street.

The body of the 8-year-old son of Carl Morse was found floating in the Minnesota river below Mankato.

Willie, the 17-year-old son of Valentine Salonek, was found dead in an old well on his father's farm near Montrose. Foul play was suspected. There will probably be an investigation.

George Smith was drowned while swimming in the stone quarry at Pipestone. He has relatives in Hamline and Minneapolis.

The proposition to vote $10,000 and lands to erect waterworks and electric light plant at Fosston, was carried by a vote of 90 to 40 at a special election.

Charles S. Benson, one of the leading citizens of St. Cloud, has been named by Judge Sanborn as receiver of the St. Cloud Gas and Electric Light company. He becomes the receiver of the property, assets, rights and the franchises.

A new railroad was incorporated at Duluth known as the Duluth & Southwestern. The contract for the substructure of the bridge between Duluth and Superior was let at Philadelphia to Alexander McGaim, of that place. This means that money has been raised to build the bridge and that work will proceed at once.

General orders No. 11 by Commander-in-Chief Walker of the G. A. R., announces the appointment as aides on his staff of George A. White, Minneapolis, and George F. Sabin, St. Paul.

The recent benefit in Minneapolis for Margaret Fjelde, the widow of the late sculptor, netted $750.

T. H. Pressnell, George L. Roberts and A. L. Hudson have been appointed a board of civil service examinery for the Duluth custom house.

The Naval Veterans' Association met in the Nicollet National bank, in Minneapolis, and agreed to take care of the naval veterans' parade and also look after veteran sailors generally during the G. A. R. national encampment.

By the fall of a staging at the new German church, eight miles north of Grand Meadow, Frank Martin, a builder and contractor of High Forest, was terribly bruised. He will probably die from his wounds.

TO MEND KITCHEN UTENSILS.

A Few Useful Hints to Amateurs in Tinkering.

It sometimes happens that a granite saucepan or chafing dish gets a fall, and in this fall a bit of the granite enamel is loosened and finally peels off The dish is of little value, for a hole will soon ensue. Granite is supposed to be unmendable, but we have proved that it can be mended. If the granite is not weakened all around the hole a copper rivet, such as are used by harness makers, may be used to fill up the break. There are different sizes of the rivets—they come with a small head, something like carpet tacks. The rivet proper is slipped through the hole in the granite and then over the end that passes through is slipped a copper washer (which comes with the rivet), then with a few taps of a tack hammer the rivet is flattened down on the washer. This effectually mends the break in the granite and makes it practically as good as new.

If only a very small hole is found a bit of copper wire is used to mend it. The wire is slipped through the hole, after being cut the right length, and then with a tack hammer it is flattened on both sides of the granite vessel which is being operated upon.

The process is so simple that even a woman who is doing "light housekeeping" need not fear to undertake it, providing she can strike a straight blow with a hammer, which women are not supposed to be capable of doing. Though it may be among the new women there may be found a few who can do this. The only thing to be avoided is striking promiscuously upon the granite surface, and so scaling more of the enamel off. The mending is almost as simple as the old method of putting a rag into a hole to mend it.

It once happened that a high wind played havoc with a paper tub, and, after rolling it around promiscuously, it threw it against a stone and virtually wrecked it forever. It also happened that the tub belonged to a woman who had some original ideas, and she straightway went to work to demonstrate that although ventilated it was not wholly beyond repair.

She secured some putty and put it over the hole and smoothed it down carefully until it was about the same thickness of the paper mache itself, of which the tub was made. In case of an article needed for such use it might be well to paint it all over and then it might be decorated if desired. I have seen this paperware decorated with nasturtiums, and it really looked pretty. An occasional coat of paint would do a good deal toward making such utensils lasting.—Cleveland Leader.

The Illusion Dispelled.

An elderly Russian princess much addicted to gambling, and very superstitious, was one day engaged in her favorite pastime when a gentleman of genial aspect, but horribly deformed, came and sat down beside her. "How lucky!" thought the good lady. In this persuasion, and with the assurance common to persons of high rank, she began to stroke the protuberance of the hunchback whilst increasing the amount of her stakes. In the course of half an hour she lost 60,000 francs, yet she did not complain, being firmly convinced that she would recover the whole amount before very long. But suddenly the hunchback stopped playing and, as he stood up, he looked as tall as a grenadier. He thrust his hand up his back and withdrew—the hump. The latter was nothing more or less than a huge felt wide-awake that the wearer had stowed away under his coat to save himself the trouble of leaving it in the cloakroom. The supposed hunchback was as straight as a pikestaff. The princess flew into a passion, called him a swindler and an impostor, and it required the united efforts of all her friends to pacify her.—El Diluvio.

"In what way?" asked a friend.

"He expects me to live on nothing and save half."—Detroit Free Press.

HEALTH IN OLD AGE.

An Old Lady Finds the True Source of Vitality.

A Reporter's Interesting Interview with a Lady of Seventy-Two Years, Who Tells a Marvelous Story.

From the Union, Port Jervis, N. Y.

But a short time ago, in a distant part of the country, we heard of a cure by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which seemed almost marvelous, and more recently another substantial evidence of their value reached our ears. Being of an inquiring turn of mind, and wishing to know just how much there was in the story, a reporter was sent to interview the person said to be thus benefited. If the narrative as it had reached our ears was true, it was only simple justice to let it be known—if it proved untrue, it would be well to know it.

The person alluded to above as having been thus greatly benefited by the use of Pink Pills is Mrs. Jane Hotalen, of Hainesville, N. J., a pleasant hamlet in Sussex County, about fifteen miles from this office. The reporter had no difficulty in finding Mrs. Hotalen. It was nearly noon when we reached her pleasant home, a double house, one part of which is occupied by her son. She is a pleasant-faced old lady, looking to be about sixty-five, but is in reality seventy-two years of age. After a few preliminary remarks in explanation of the call, she was asked if she had any objection to giving us the details of the case and how she came to try this now famous remedy.

"Not at all," said she. "If my experience can be of any good to others, I am sure they are welcome to it—it can do me no harm."

"When were you taken sick and what was the nature of the malady?" was asked.

"It was about two years ago. The trouble was rheumatic in character—sciatica, they called it—and it was very painful indeed. The difficulty began in my hip and extended the whole length of the limb, crippling me completely. I suffered intensely from it, and the ordinary treatment gave me not the slightest alleviation. I was under treatment about a month as stated, but grew worse instead of better, and was fast becoming discouraged."

"What brought Pink Pills to your notice?"

"My son called my attention to an article in a paper, in which it was stated that a Mr. Struble, of Branchville, a village in this county, had been greatly benefited by their use, and suggested that it would be a good plan to try them. But I was skeptical in regard to their value—in fact, I had no confidence in their efficacy and rather laughed at the suggestion. But the trouble increased and I was badly crippled. A few days later my son was about to visit a neighboring town and suggested again that it might be well to try this much-talked-of remedy, and I then consented. He bought me a box of them and I began taking them at once. At the end of a week I noted a marked improvement, and by the time I had taken the first box I was able to walk without a cane. I continued their use, taking several boxes, and am, as you see, in a very comfortable state of health."

"Have you had any return of the trouble?"

"Not as yet, though at my time of life, seventy-two, it would not be surprising if I should have. If it comes, I should at once begin the use of the pills. I suppose I inherit a tendency to troubles of this kind—my mother died from them."

"Did you ever note any ill effects from the use of Pink Pills?"

"None whatever. They never disturbed my stomach in any way or caused me any annoyance. Neither did I find it necessary to increase the dose, as the directions say may be desirable. I am able, as you see, to attend to my own work."

The reporter thanked Mrs. Hotalen for her courtesy and bade her good day. It is not often that one can witness such a complete recovery from such a pertinacious trouble at such an advanced age, and such instances cannot fail to produce a profound impression. Readers of the Union may rely on the absolute accuracy of all the statements here given—nothing has been exaggerated, nothing withheld.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

GAME-KILLING FOXES.

Their Destructiveness Shown by the Contents of a Burrow.

Arthur S. Burr, of Old Haddam, when going across lots recently discovered the carcass of a woodchuck partly eaten, and a little further along a ruffed grouse. Thinking it was the work of a fox, he made search and found the burrow, with a large black hen and two more partridges at its mouth. Suspecting there were young partridges in the row, he made up his mind to return and dig them out, as the town of Haddam pays a bounty of two dollars a head.

It was five days before he had a chance to do this, and when he dug out the burrow with the assistance of Sherm Fowler he found that the wily mother fox had removed. They were determined to have that bounty, and incidentally the foxes, and after a long search they found a new burrow, picking up two more partridges on the way. On digging out this new hole they took out eight partridges, three rabbits and a very large woodchuck, with five young foxes in the end. The partridges were partly eaten, but the wodchuck was completely cleaned out, nothing but the skin being left.

Sportsmen have long claimed that foxes were more destructive to game than all the hunters, and have noted a great increase of foxes in towns that have not paid a bounty for the last few years. The only incentive the farmers' boys have for killing the fox is the bounty money. Eight partridges in a burrow but four days old show the great destructiveness of foxes.

CAVE DWELLERS.

The Haunt of the Bat on the Colorado River.

A party of hunters have just returned to civilization after a trip along the Colorado river. One of them, Capt. Hurd, tells of an interesting discovery they made. One morning they rose about daylight to take advantage of a long day in which to make a desired excursion. As they passed among the timber on the steep and rocky side of a canyon, they suddenly came upon a big dead tree, every limb of which was literally covered with bats of varying sizes. There were hundreds and thousands hanging to the wood.

But as the hunters watched a curious sight was revealed. There was a hole in the trunk of the tree, and one after another the bats released their hold on the limbs and disappeared in it. They moved in with great regularity and speed, but more than an hour was consumed before all had disappeared. It was evident to the interested watchers that there was not room within the tree trunk for one-tenth of all the bats which had entered, so they determined to cut the tree down and discover the secret. When the tree was felled a cave was found underneath, and in this the thousands of bats found refuge by day. A match dropped in the mouth of the cave brought the inmates out in great numbers.—Philadelphia Press.

Monarchs Meet and Shake.

When the late shah of Persia was in Paris in 1889 he visited the Wild West Show, and there met the famous Indian chief, Red Shirt. The latter was in his tent and was presented to the Persian monarch. To the shah's astonishment Red Shirt held out his hand as though to an equal. The shah hesitated, but when the interpreter whispered: "He is a king," he took the Indian's hand and shook it. He was evidently immensely amused and interested by the dignified old warrior, with his feathers and primitive surroundings.

Yellowstone Park

Is more and more impressing itself upon the public, as the years go by, as being the great park of the land. The strong feature of it is the fact that it is not a man made park. True enough man has built roads and bridges and hotels in order that he may see the park, but he has not yet tried his hand at constructing new fangled geysers, or re-adorning or re-sculpturing the Grand canyon of the Yellowstone. These are as God left them. There, too, the elk, bear, deer and other animals are not enclosed in wire fences. They wander free and unfretted whithersoever they will. Man's handiwork is but little seen and the park is the grander for it. Send Chas. S. Fee, General Passenger Agent, Northern Pacific Railroad, six cents for Wonderland '96, and read about the park.

—Dr. Niven July 20 and 21. 40 3t.

—Tomorrow will be Delano Fair Day.

—School Meeting for the election of two new members of the School Board will be held on Saturday July 18.

—Bock Brothers had quite a lively runaway while hauling lumber one day this week. No serious damage was done.

—Read the inside of this paper for an account of the Cincinnati strike and of the opening of the Democratic National Convention at Chicago.

—David Reibel has moved into M. A. O'Hair's South River Street residence, which has recently been repainted and repared and is now quite a cosy place.

—Charles S. Hawker's 4th of July oration was pronounced by all, as fine as we ever had in Delano. Delano people are justly proud of the Professor.

—The first harvesting we had the pleasure to see this year was a fine row of shocks of rye around the field of Hon. G. A. Ruckoldt, in Rockford last Monday evening.

—The I. O. G. T. held an informal meeting on Tuesday evening. They resolved to meet on Saturday evening July 25, at the M. E. church. Let all members be present.

—Some of the readers of the Eagle who attended the Delano Fourth of July celebration were much astonished to learn that its new editor was such a good hand to "call off" for a dance.

—Rev. Tabor Davies preached a good sermon in the morning at the Presbyterian church last Sunday. The music was fine, Dr. Soper sang "The Holy City" which was highly appreciated by the audience.

—The C. E. Society gave an entertainment in the City Hall, last night, to raise money to help pay for the window in the Presbyterian church. A good sized audience was present and enjoyed the occasion.

—The remains of Herman Johannesberg, who died Nov. 25, 1895, at the age of 5 yr., 5 mo., and 26 days, at Worchester, Mass., was shipped through town yesterday on the way to Watertown for interment in the Swedish Luthern Cemetery.

—The 4th of July was observed in Delano much after the usual fashion, lacking perhaps in some quarters the customary enthusiasm. The parade was the poorest, perhaps, ever turned out in the place. No effort to represent trades, or anything put a few buggies in line, a few ragmuffins and the band, was made.

—The Delano Eagle Printing Co. has secured a slice of the State Printing to do. They intend fixing up the building east of the present office and moving into it and putting in a bindery where they now are, and building an engine room and heating both buildings with steam. This will be quite an improvement.

—The call for the Democratic County Convention appears in another column. It is to be held at Buffalo Saturday Aug. 1. primaries must be held from 7 to 9 p. m. on Saturday July 25. Town and village committees must see to it that six days notice is posted up. These are severe penalties for holding meetings wrong.

—Some of the strangest and most absurd and ridiculous arguments have been heard on the streets lately on the money question. Those who know the least about the question generally, appear to favor a gold standard, and insist that there is no difference between the Republican platform of four years ago and the one of 1896.

—Clark Sturman furnished a part of the amusements at Rockford although not on the programme. His line got caught in the ring on the back of the harness and he could not pilot his team through the mill yard; so rolled out among the logs. The top of the buggy shewed more damage than any of the balance of the rig, including Clark.

—Rev. J. L. Farber preached last Sunday evening on Sabbath breaking. He took the scriptural ground that the Sabbath was made for man, and insisted that it is best to observe it holy, as a day of rest and not recreation. He thought all places of business should be closed and all games should wait for Monday, and that people should attend church on Sunday.

—A gentleman informs us that he was considerably astonished lately by hearing our Mayor offer to bet a hundred dollars that there was no bridge across the Crow River, on a line from the Zeibarth school to the Dean school house; and this after the road had been traveled for nearly two years, and found much shorter than the old road. Surely the world "do move."

—The present arrangement of services between the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches furnishes ample opportunity to all to attend preaching both morning and evening, who desire to do so. The morning hour is occupied by Rev. Tabor Davies at the Presbyterian church; and the evening hour at the M. E. church by J. L. Farber. Good singing is now had at both places, and a good sermon can be heard at both places. Fill up the churches. Church going people are a credit to any community.

—Delano claims the fastest folks in Wright County on wheels.

—Dr. Shrader has a new team, purchased in Minneapolis Wednesday.

—Enos Eppel advises bicyclers to hold on to the oil can while oiling the wheel.

"Billy's" boom for Congress like most Republican Wright County projects seems likely never to be very big; and to hardly be recognized outside of the Wright County Republican Party.

John Belden, of Montrose, attended the celebration at Rockford on the 4th. We saw him standing on a saw log, in Florida's millyard, presumably learning to "stump" for legislature this fall.

The selecting of Legislators for our district this year shonld be carefully done. Our state is in need of laws and revisions of laws, and men who can and will be present and watch out for the interests of the State and of the 38th Legislative district should be elected. There are many important questions to be settled and they will be best done dy men who will take an interest in them.

The Waverly Tribune publishes a number of answers of citizens, to the question. "Are you in favor of free silver or are you not?" Among them we notice from J. K. Cullen, who is well known to most of our readerr as a man of experience and wisdom, the following; "Gold and silver have been on an equality since early days, There is no time recorded in history when silver was not on an equality with gold till the demonetizaton of silver in 1873.

Wright County politics seems to be fully as badly mixed up as ever before. Republicans appear to think they are bound to have all the offices so there are numerous seekers for most of the nominations. Democrats are waiting to see what the other parties are going to do. Populists are not tumbling over each other in the scramble for office, while Prohibitionists are keeping unusually quiet. Tere is a very strong undercurrent for the free coinage of both gold and silver as standard money and there is no telling what it may wash up by election day. We hope better times at all events.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—

DEMOCRATS FOR FREE SILVER AND FREE GOLD.

For President,
WILLIAM J. BRYAN, of Nebraska.

For Vice President,
ARTHUR SEWALL, of Maine.

See pictures of the candidates and read and preserve for reference the Democratic platform on the inside of this paper.

Repudiated Principles.

The Party repudiated the Principles is why the People are repudiating the Party! Just compare the two planks for yourself; carefully, line by line:

From Republican National platform, adopted at Minneapolis, in 1892:

GOLD AND SILVER MONEY.—The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetalism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals, so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal. The interests of the producers of the country, its farmers and its workingmen, demand that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the Government, shall be as good as any other. We commend the wise and patriotic steps already taken by our Government to secure an international conference, to adopt such measures as will insure a parity of value between gold and silver for use as money throughout the world.

From the Republican National platform adopted at St. Louis in 1896:

MONEY.

"The republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1879; since then every dollar has been as good as gold.

"We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved.

"All our silver and paper currency must be maintained at parity with gold, and we favor all measures designed to maintain inviolably the obligations of the United States and all our money, whether coin or paper, at the present standard, the standard of the most enlightened nations of the earth.

DANIEL LAWLER has called for a meeting of 400 or more Democrats to talk over making another ticket. We didn't hardly suppose Dan would bolt. Maybe he won't.

THE people of the United States demand a settlement of the money standard of our country and they desire to vote squarely on the issue, and any clique of men that deprives them of the privilege will gain nothing in favor with the people.

HOWEVER badly scheming politicians may wish by placing a multiplicity of candidates in the field, to throw the election of President and Vice President out of the hands of the people, it should be discountenanced by all honest voters.

MINNESOTA, at the convention lately held passed resolutions favoring a gold standard and now they don't jibe well with the National Democratic platform. The convention at Minneapolis Aug. 4th. will, doubtless, make some that will harmonize with Democracy,

TALK is being indulged in, in some quarters of Nominating David B. Hill on a gold platform. Four years ago he was anxious to be nominated on a silver platform. It looks as if the nomination is what he is after. He will vote for both gold and silver if he is a Democrat.

EVERYBODY is howling for a change in political affairs this fall. Even the Republicans claim they favor a change. but their platform seems to indicate a very small change. They advocate the "present gold standard of money", and they favor the McKinley bill which is too near the present tariff to be much of a change and even that for the worse.

SOME of our state delegates to the National Convention made quite a fuss about the way the National Convention was conducted. Had they paid more attention to the minutia of our own state convention and the primaries, where there was any primaries held, perhaps they would not have judged the silver wing of the party at Chicago quite so harshly.

BOLTERS from the Democratic party are in no more favor than are bolters from the Republican party.

THE St. Paul Globe seems to be in a bad fix at present. It has joined the majority of city dailies howling for gold bugs. The county press is still pretty solid for free silver and gold both as standard money.

GOLD Standard Democrats who favored the Chicago platform if it would say "gold standard" instead of "gold and silver standard" are now trying to pick the platform to pieces, plank by plank. They are making hard work of it.

EX-CONGRESSMAN JOHN LIND, of New Ulm, has finally consented to be a candidate against Gov. Clough. In case the free silver parties unite on his candidacy there will be a lively campaign with big chances for smashing the ring rule in the political machine of Minnesota.

THE Pioneer Press editorials are good reading for free silver people and will doubtless, strengthen many in their views. For instance it claims that if we get fifty cent dollars farm produce will rise accordingly. Want that be good to help the farmer pay his debts that he has been paying interest on for years? Since silver was demonetized.

IF, as some of the Gold Sarndard people try to have us believe, there is nothing in the money question. Why did some of the leading republicans walk out of the St. Louis convention as soon as it declared for a gold standard? And why are some of the Democrats denouncing the Chicago convention because it adopted a platform declaring for the free coinage of both gold and silver? If there is nothing at stake to the people of this country why let that one question dissolve the party ties of a lifetime.

DURING the great tariff campaigns one of the main instrumenas for holding the G. O. P. voter in line was a little pamphlet with a British flag and an American flag side by side and the question which flag are you for? The claim was made that the British wanted Free Trade therefore Americans must not give it to them. How would they like to have the Free Silver men bring around some of these old pictures with the silver question instead of the tariff, and ask them the same question "Which flag are you for?"

WHEN a gold bug argues that the reason we don't want free silver it will run the gold all out of the country. Ask him where it will go to? The chances are, he will tell you, that we owe Europe bonds payable in gold. Then ask him if he don't intend paving those bonds if we have a gold strndard? Likely he will say, Oh yes. Then ask him if it takes all our gold to pay them what he intdnds having for money at home? And again if the gold will go out any quicker if we have more standard money than it will if we don't? Try it on the first gold bng you come to, and see him flutter, and sputter.

OUR gold bug friends say we must have gold as a standard money because of its "intrinsic" value. Webster degnes "INTRINSIC" inward, internal; not merely apparent or accidental. Now applying this definition to gold we would like to ask of what great consequence would gold be in the world if it was treated like silver and "demonetized." How long would a little piece of gold be received in exchange for the commodities of the world if it was not coined as money by any nation? If a man with a pocket full of gold should loose his way on a cold, dark night on a broad prairie his gold would not appease his hunger; it would not protect his body from the biting blasts; he could neither eat nor wear it to advantage; nor even burn it to warm his fingers by. Where then is its inherent value. If the poor fellow had a woolen blanket it would help keep him warm, if he had a loafe of bread he could satisfy his hunger. If we must have money of an "intrinsic" value, why not stamp a blanket, or a loaf of bread, or something more convenient to carry around but which has "intrinsic" value. What could be found with less "intrinsic" value than gold, should the nations of the earth conclude to adopt as a money standard, "American tin" or some other scarce article instead of gold?

THE much talked about intrinsic value of gold is not its only value, and on comparison with other articles dont seem to be the value that is interesting the American party to day. But its commercial value; the value given it by law making it money, is the value we are interested in. Some people insist that the intrinsic value of gold is a permanent thing, and that no laws or other circumstances alter the value of that metal. So far as its intrinsic value goes that is a fact; but its commercial value, its value as money is very fluctuating: fully as much so as the commercial value of anything else with which we have to deal.

The intrinsic value of an ounce of gold in any county and at any time may be unchangable, but men have seen times when they would be glad to give a pocket full of gold for a good meal of victuals, or a drink of water.

The intrinsic value of a horse is to day what it was 10 years ago; he can do as much work, or travel as far in a day as he could then; but his commercial value, measured in the gold standard money of our country is less than half what it then was.

The intrinsic value of gold is the same now as it was ten years ago, but its commercial value has been changed, and now it takes less than half as much gold to buy a horse or to stock up the larder with provisions as it did then.

The intrinsic value of the farmer's years toil is, with improved machinery and methods, worth more, yet he must give twice as much of the products of his laborers to get gold as he did then.

It's not the "intrinsic" value that is making all the disturbance, but the miserly greed for gain in those who have money. It is the hungering after more. "The love of money is the root of all evil."

Pioneer Press vs. John Lind.

By all means trot out John Lind as a candidate for govenor on the Pop-anarchcrat ticket if he will trot. John used to be a good Republican congressman until some years ago he got the notion in his head that the silver 16 to 1 foolishness was popular among the farmers of his district, and he risked and lost his hold on his constituents by committing himself to the fad. But if he is off on the silver question it is hardly likely that he can bring himself to swallow the rest of the Chicago dose of Pop-anarchism—Pioneer Press.

The Pioneer Press don't seem to find any fault with John Lind except that he favors a restoration of silver to its former place as money, as provided for by the constitution of our country. As for the balance of the platform we think the majority of voters in Minnesota will have no trouble in finding it as near up to the times as is the Republican platform.

Debts and Debtors.

The debtor who declares outright that he won't pay his debts at all is more to be respected than one who offers to settle in Confederate notes, or who claims to pay in full when he tenders Bryan tokens worth 50 cents apiece, instead of dollars worth 100 cents in gold.—Pioneer Press.

If there are any dollars worth 50 cts. each, who made them worth that? And what of a party that legislates the money of the country into such a fix? What of a party that requires the man that is in debt to pay in gold what he contracted for in either gold or siver? What would you, Mr. Farmer, think of a neighbor who sold you a horse, agreeing to take for pay 400 bushels of oats or 400 bushels of corn, or part of either as you choose, coming around in the fall after an early frost had killed the corn, asking you to pay him 400 bushels of oats which had appreciated in value to 50 cts. a bushel.

The Political Question.

The political issue before the people of this country has been thoroughly demonstrated to be whether we shall have a single gold standard, as declared by the Republican platform; or both gold and silver as standard money as declared for by the Constitution of the United States; by the usage of the people since the beginning of our government, and as demanded by the Democratic platform on which W. J. Bryan and Arthur Sewall are to be made the presiding officers of our country.

Now that the issue has been clearly defined, it looks as if the way to decide it would be for those favoring a single gold standard to vote for McKinley and Hobart electors while those in favor of a double standard, both gold and silver as the money of our country should support the electors for Bryan and Sewall. If ever there was a time when party ties should be disregarded it loooks as if now was that time. There are both gold standard and free silver republicans and there are both gold bug and double standard democrats, and even the Prohibition party is split on the same question; so the most satisfactory solution of the problem would be for the two giants, Bryan and McKinley to go into the field and without making use of the usual brass band tactics, quietly argue, from as many stumps as possible, the all important question. Educate the masses and let them, for once vote for what they know something about; vote intelligently.

But, owing to the selfish greed of human nature, there are those who are seeking, for personal ends, to divide the votes; to befuddle the voters and place in the field a number of candidates; hoping thereby to so disarrange the workings of the election machinery as to, by some hook or crook, get their own personal choice of men seated in the offices, regardless of political, legal, moral, or any other right principles.

The platforms have been made; representative candidates have been nominated by the two leading parties of the land. The issue is clearly marked out. The candidates are noted debaters; amply able to present their respective cases to the people. Let the fight be honest, fair, and of an educational nature, and let this important question be satisfactorily settled.

FROM THE EVERGREEN STATE.

BY REV. W. H. WILSON.

Mr. Editor: In view of the fact that many of our people some of which are students, and some who have gotten out of history, know very little of the grandeur and productiveness of this garden of tne world. I have prepared an outline of historical data which has been put in print in several papers out here, and if you find space in the Gazette you may give it to your readers.

This country abounds in both wealth and beauty; one cannot turn the eye unless it meets some freak of nature that at once arouses the deep interest of the thinking man. Often wonder why this country was left so long unnoticed and uninhabited, and yet the wonder vanishes by casting the eye to the right hand, and left hand, those great beautiful mountains stretching away, and nearly shutting out even the remotest idea of their being just beyond, this basin into which frost and snow seldom come. I had thought that Capt. Geo. Vancouver would have fallen so deeply in love with these straits and this tropical climate that he would have dropped anchor in some sheltered nook and spent his days enjoying the comforts to be had in this far away north west. But not so, for the mariner like the true minister must ever push out, and on, discovering to himself and others the hiden mysteries and truths of God.

For two centuries after the discovery of the straights of Juan de Fuca by the Greek pilot, of the same name, there was a complete blank in the history of this country. If the ships of Spain touched the coasts their crews left no record of their voyage. The drift of exploration and settlement had turned in other directions, the native races of the country remained undisturbed for two hundred years. The Indians pursued the occupation of their savage life; generation after generation was borne and engaged in the varied struggle for existence, they were gathered to their fathers, and laid in the fantastically decorated grave yards: I wonder if any of our school boys or girls of Delano have ever visited an Indian graveyard. Just let me pause long enough to tell you of my visit to one of these cities of the dead savages. On the shore of San Junan very close to the side of the tide line, lies one of the many grave yards. I call it that for one can not think of anything else when walking through this bone yard, each grave wide open and, and the bones scattered all over the ground. The Indian is human, and has a soul, and that soul can be touched, and it feels, it loves, and it can hate. I sometimes wonder whether he has not more soul and decency than we give him credit for. This graveyard is a noted and wonderful place, started over two hundred years ago by the Quilliute and Neah Bay Indians, and located on the sound just in behind the spit that reaches out into the bay. I believe I described this spit before. However it keeps the strong winds from sweeping over, showing that the native wished as quiet a place for their loved dead as could be had, this yard has never been fenced or protected from man or beast, one cannot help feeling a peculiar censation creep over him as he stands and gazes upon the bones of these old warriers who have hushed their children to rest in the wigwam, and whispered to them of the great spirit. The Indians bury their dead in a shallow grave, say about two feet deep, when this is scooped out they spread in and over the grave, a clean blanket, upon which the dead body is laid; the ends of the blanket are folded over the form and all this is bound with whang string, then they split out great wide slabs of cedar, and lay these slabs over the body, then more are put on until quite a covering of this is over the grave, then they gather stones and cover all over this, and I am glad to say that these graves have never been disturbed by wild beast, and would have slept there securely until Gabriel sounded the notes of the resurrection, had not the ever inquisitive white man with more than brute ferocity, torn off the covering and scattered the bones all over the ground, and this did not occur until the old Indian guard who has lived with his clutchman (wife) for forty years, just by the side of this city of bones, became so old and infirm, and his wife, old Sarah, became blind, and could no longer protect their loved charge, then the white man came in and tore up the graves and stole away the skulls of the dead. The Indians bury their dead in very peculiar shapes, ones feet may be located near the heart of another so not one particle of ground is wasted, then they have a mourning lodge, this is made by leaning poles up against trees. These would not of course be very close together, nor would they be in a square, but the polls were put up against other trees, onto which were put other poles, and across these, others, and cedar shakes put over this all. Inside this lodge is located a table on which they lay the body of the dead, and then begins the mourning, all the belongings of the dear one is brought and laid down, and the mourners go about bewailing the sad departure. This does not seem so very savage, when we think of the days of our own fore fathers who used to hire their mourners to weep over the dead.

I have made a move to gather all the Indians together from Quillute, Neah Bay, and Squine, in order to impress upon their minds the importance of hiding from view the bones of their dead.

One never gets tired of sight seeing in this far away North West country. There was a time out here when boats, fishing, Indians, and a general wild life was the only occupation for even the white man. But bless God these times are in a measure passed, and men now are turning to God, and we are looking for the time when God for Christ's sake will hear our united prayers and open the windows of gracious providence, and let his convincing and converting grace fall upon Puget Sound, one could not grow weary and faint by the way, and forget God altogether, for on every hand are the visible tokens of his loving kindness.

This is truly a beautiful land. But:

There's a land that is fairer than this,
And by faith I can see it afar,
For our Savior waits over the way
To prepare us a dwelling place there.

Now Bro. Editor if you wish to place this before your readers, and desire me to come again, I will give you some history of this country.

W. H. WILSON,
Former Pastor
Delano.

Intrinsic Value.

From the National Bimetallist we clip the following: "The intrinsic value of gold has not changed for twenty-two years," says the gold bug. I reply: "Neither has the intrinsic value of wheat or corn; but the commercial value has changed, and because of legislation brought about by you. The possessor of gold has been benefitted, the raiser of wheat and corn has been injured. No honest, intelligent, truly patriotic man can defend legislation that injures the most important industries of the country."

The Silver meeting held at Minneapolis last night was a rouser. The crowd was estimated at 6000 people.

Ringing speeches were made by Hon. John Lind, of New Ulm, Hon. Charles A. Towne, of Duluth, and Hon. Frank Nye, of Minneapolis, all endorsed the nomination of W. J. Bryan for President.

The sentiment of the meeting was plainly for John Lind, for Gov. of Minnesota, as evidenced by the cheers that greeted him.

At the convention during the day delegates were chosen to attend the Silver Convention at St. Louis on the 22nd inst., and instructed to vote for W. J. Bryan's nomination.

Said chairman Culkin, of the convention, in refersing to this district's congressman: "Towne is at Minneapolis, listening to the plaudits of his new friends, anarchists and Populists." Senator Culkin may liye to regret this assault upon thousands of his fellow citizen.—St. Cloud Timer.

Superstitions.

Mr. Bryan and his followers must not lose sight of the fact that the candidate was nominated on Friday.—Duluth News Tribune.

Does the News Tribune think McKinley's Friday was any better than Bryan's Friday.

CORRESPONDENCE

INDEPENDENCE.

Crops and the silver craze are coming along fine.

Most of the farmers have cut their rye and are now busy making hay. The hay crop is good this year.

Hope everybody will remember the annual school meeting next Saturday evening and come out to the meeting

Would say I am for Bryan, of Nebraska for President. He seems to be the peer of all other candidates that were brought up. He is a western man and a free silver man, and I hope a man for the people.

Gorden Granger Post will take in some new members at their next regular meeting.

Hard times are with us just as they have been for some time past.

Mr. and Mrs. William Fogleman are rejoicing over the advent of a girl baby, born July 13 th., all the parties are doing well at this writing. Also Mr. and Mrs. M. O. Batdorf have cause to rejoice over the arrival of a new girl baby born July 10 th. Shurely we are a prolific people.

Last week, ice cream and lemonade was better than gold or fine rubies. It was too hot for comfort.

Mr. Editor not much news this week most everybody too busy to take much interest in any thing but attending to their own business.

It is thought Maple Plain will yet have a creamery, or that is the talk now. Then if we have free coinage of silver can have a mint of our own at Maple Plain and have plenty of money.

THE
New York World
Thrice-a-week Edition

18 PAGES A WEEK. 156 PAPERS A YEAR.

Is larger than any weekly or semi-weekly paper published and is the only important Democratic "weekly" published in New York City. Three times as large as the leading Republican weekly of New York City. It will be of especial advantage to you during the Presidential Campaign, as it is published every other day, except Sunday, and has all the freshness and timeliness of a daily. It combines all the news with a long list of interesting departments, unique features, cartoons and graphic illustrations, the latter being a specialty.

All these improvements have been made without any increase in the cost, which remain at one dollar per year.

We offer this unequalled newspaper and the BUFFALO GAZETTE together one year for $1.75

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.00.

and BUFFALO GAZETTE 6 months for 90 cts; or three months for 50 cts.

A scientist in Minnesota has invented a flying machine that is the most perfect of its kind ever constructed. It has only one defect—it will not fly.

By order of the Servian government 30 villages in the district of Aschitza were completely destroyed not long ago because all other measures had failed to put a stop to the brigandage practiced or connived at by the inhabitants.

Peculiar marriage relations exist, or will exist, in a family in Belfast, Me. About one year ago a couple were married. Now a brother of the first-named groom is to marry the mother of his brother's wife. Two brothers to marry mother and daughter. By this arrangement one brother becomes the father-in-law of the other.

The use of iron in architecture is not so new as people are accustomed to think. At Delhi is a forged iron column 60 feet high. It is 16 inches in diameter at the base and 12 inches at the top. Its weight is estimated at about 17 tons. From records extant it is reasonably certain that it was in existence 900 years B. C.

Forty thousand Japanese have become professed Christians through the efforts of missionaries. Among these are many high in social rank and of the greatest intellectual power and influence. Independent in all things, the Japanese now desire to direct the affairs of the native churches themselves and are growing restive under the leadership and control of mission boards.

Another prophet has arisen to remark that the judgment day is at hand. This time he calls himself Samuel Hendrickson, and he proves his point by voluminous quotation from the Bible and the Declaration of Independence. But he considerately leaves enough of the tattered edge of time for McKinley's administration. The trump is booked to sound in 1900.

The wealth of the United States is nearly twice as great as that of any other nation. Our census of 1890 makes the aggregate wealth of our people $68,000,000,000. Great Britain's wealth is estimated at $47,000,000,000, France at $42,000,000,000, Germany at $31,000,000,000, Russia at $25,000,000,000, Austria at $19,000,000,000, Italy at $14,000,000,000, and Spain at $12,000,000,000.

"Learn to allow others to be mistaken," is the advice one woman has given others, through one of the current magazines. That is pretty good advice. A great deal of friction, annoyance and unhappiness is caused by the tendency of many to call especial attention to the trifling mistakes of others. Unless a mistake is material, or it is liable to grow into a habit, the advice is good, do not call attention to it, but let it pass unnoticed.

Bishop Turner (colored) is still active in urging the better class of negroes in the south—those who are thrifty, able-bodied and ambitious—to migrate to Africa. At Selma, the other evening, he held forth on the subject for four hours at a stretch. An agent of the Liberia Emigration society sat beside him. This agent told a reporter that he had booked about 400 negroes in that part of Alabama and hoped to get 1,500 on his list before winter.

According to present prospects the oat crop in the United States this year will be by far the largest ever known. The demand for oats has suffered a remarkable decline since the substitution of electricity for horses on so many street railways, but there is still a ray of hope for the farmers. The consumption of oatmeal and similar prepared food is rapidly increasing, and it is possible that because of this the growers of oats will eventually have their market restored to them.

It is already evident that the anti-filled cheese law, passed at the last session of congress, will thoroughly accomplish its purpose. Manufacturers of this bogus cheese find that the tax imposed by the law is so heavy that they will have to suspend production, except for the export trade. Ordinarily a law that drives any industry out of business is to be deplored, but in this case the result must be gratifying. Filled cheese is a fraud, and through its sale consumers are deceived, and the law was passed in compliance with urgent requests from dairymen in all parts of the country.

The Boston Herald calls attention to the fact that among 800 essays written recently by school children on the "Three Greatest Americans," Washington and Lincoln were almost universally chosen—the former appeared 776 times and the latter 731 times. As to the third name there was a wider diversity of opinion, as, indeed, there must be among children of larger growth. The name of Grant was chosen by 308, that of Franklin by 220, that of Jefferson by 96, and that of Webster by 83. Authorities must differ as to who are the three greatest, but there is general accord as to the two greatest.

The commissioner of education reports an enrollment of 16,000,000 children in the schools of the country. These are to be of the twentieth century men and women. How will they celebrate the Fourth 30 or 40 years hence in the maturity of their powers? What will be the strength of their allegiance to the principles upon which the moral power and prosperity of this republic depends? As the young tree is influenced in its growth for the future, so are the 16,000,000 children of the schools daily under influences which, in their results upon the young minds, extend far beyond the merely individual life.

HOT WORDS CHEERED.

Christian Endeavorers Applaud an Arraignment of the Administration.

Washington, July 14.—The last day's session of the fifteenth international Christian Endeavor convention, began Monday at the appointed hour in the three white tents, simultaneously, after the usual sunrise prayer-meetings, President Clark, Treasurer Shaw and Trustee Wayland Hoyt presiding. It was a day reserved for missionaries. Addresses were made in tents Williston and Endeavor by a number of foreign delegates, India, China, Africa, Asia, England and the countries of continental Europe being represented. Among others, Missionaries Goll, of Africa, Rutnam, of India, Bentley, of China, and Hildner, of Germany, spoke.

Chief interest of the day centered in the Armenian demonstration in tent Washington. An Armenian relief committee has been at work all the week stirring up enthusiasm among the delegates, special Armenian relief flags and badges have been spread over the city and they appear everywhere in the decorations, in street cars and on the head dress and lapels of the delegates. Three Armenian missionaries are here, one being Secretary Greene, of the national relief committee, and the others being Ladies Margaret W. Leitch, of Ceylon and Rebecca Kirkorian, of Turkey, just returned from the scene of the atrocities. These three spoke to an immense crowd of sympathizing endeavorers in tent Washington.

The appearance of Miss Kirkorian, in Armenian costume, her sad face and her broken and pathetic story of her people's woes moved the great audience to frequent and audible expressions of sympathy and sorrow. Her father, a venerable Protestant pastor in Armenia, has just been released from a Turkish prison. Two of her brothers are still suffering imprisonment, yet she spoke with remarkable forbearance of her persecutors. She did not ask for the extermination of the Turks.

After her appeal she was again presented to the audience, while Miss Leitch, her fellow worker, wrapped her in the folds of an American flag and called upon Americans everywhere to see that the protection of this government was extended to her people. This incident brought cheer after cheer from the audience.

Evangelist Mills took up the appeal and in a passionate harangue assailed the governments of Europe, England and the United States for their indifference toward the Armenian slaughter.

He made hostile allusions to United States minister Terrell because the latter had advised the withdrawal of the American missionaries from points of danger in Armenia and criticised bitterly the president and the administration for failing to interfere, while, as he alleged, fomenting a quarrel with Great Britain over Venezuela. In conclusion he said:

"Our government has stirred the passions of the American people to anger against England on one-thousandth part of the pretext that would have sufficed for a destructive war with Turkey. The administration officers have turned a deaf and almost scornful ear to the entreaties and representations of some of our best citizens, missionaries, churches and moral societies, and I denounce their conduct as unpatriotic, uncivil, undemocratic, unrepublican, un-American, un-Christian, selfish, weak, barbaric and criminal in the eyes of the American people, and of God and all men."

Every word almost of these last sentences of Mr. Mills was greeted by loud cheers. Men and women on the platform behind him and in the benches before him rose and shouted their hearty approval of denunciation of President Cleveland. In the midst of the solemn charge of cowardice and disloyalty leveled at the chief executive, the secretary of state and the American minister, the whole audience arose spontaneously, waving flags and banners and crying aloud their approval. As Mr. Mills proceeded they kept on their feet, repeating the cheer of indorsement at every adjective. Finally, when his voice and manner indicated that he had reached the end of his period, six rousing cheers of approval were given. Rev. Wayland Hoyt, who presided, arose in his seat beside the speaker and called upon the audience to reaffirm the charge. Again came the six cheers with hearty enthusiasm. "I hope the response will echo through the empty white house and extend to Buzzard's bay," cried Mr. Mills as he took his seat.

The convention closed its sessions Monday night. There were meetings in the three tents, in the Calvary, First Congregational, Foundry and New York Avenue churches and in Central hall. Today will be devoted to sight seeing and to-night there will be a bicycle parade in honor of the Endeavorers.

The reports so far received at headquarters show a registration of 25,776 delegates, which is estimated to be 6,000 short of actual attendance, and with the members of the local union and chorus brings the total membership attendance at the meetings to 50,000.

From the Senate to a Cell.

Columbus, O., July 13.—Ex-State Senator George Iden, of Newark, and John Quincy Abbott, of McConnellsville, were on Saturday sentenced to two years each in the penitentiary. Iden solicited the clerk of the house to change a record to show that a bill had been passed and Abbott solicited money for influence to pass a pharmacy bill. Sentence was suspended until September to enable the cases to go to the circuit court.

William's Yacht Wins Another Victory.

London, July 13. — A large fleet of yachts and other craft assembled in Rothesay bay Saturday to witness the yacht races of the Royal Northern Yacht club regatta. The starters in the principal race were the German emperor's new yacht Meteor, the prince of Wales' Britannia, Mr. A. B. Walker's Ailsa and C. D. Roses' Satanita.

Earthquake in Ontario.

Whitby, Ont., July 14.—A shock of earthquake was felt here about one o'clock Monday morning. Hundreds of people were awakened by the shock, which lasted about 20 seconds.

Low Price of Oats.

Waterloo, Ia., July 13.—All through this section of the country the oat crop is abundant, but the price is so low that it is going to be a total loss. Any quantity of oats can be contracted at from seven to nine cents per bushel. Farmers are offering laborers 12½ bushels of oats for a day's work.

Loss of $500,000.

St. Louis, July 14.—The loss by the burning of the Merchants' terminal elevator, at Second and Biddle streets, early Monday morning, is estimated at $500,000. The elevator contained many thousands of bushels of grain.

A DEADLY CRASH.

Trains Collide at Logan, Ia.—Thirty-One Persons Are Killed.

Omaha, Neb., July 13.—An appalling accident to an excursion train occurred early Saturday evening at Logan, Ia., 35 miles east of this city, on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad, in which 31 persons living in this city, Council Bluffs, Missouri Valley and intervening points, were killed and 39 injured. Many of the injured will, in all probability, die.

The wreck occurred as a result of Engineer Montgomery, of the excursion train, mistaking orders. He was ordered to wait at Logan until the fast mail and the east-bound passenger train had passed. He waited for the passenger and then started out, having forgotten about the mail. The trains were going 50 miles an hour, when they met three miles west of Logan.

The scene which followed the crash is indescribable. Both engines and the first passenger coach were demolished. The shrieks of women, the yells of men and the wails of the injured and dying in the gathering gloom rose above the crash of the heavy machinery and the screeching of steam escaping from the wrecked locomotives.

The crowds of anxious people at the depots did not scatter with the break of day, although the excitement of the night wore off as relatives and friends of the dead ones became convinced of the worst. About seven o'clock the first funeral train from the scene of the catastrophe arrived at the Union depot, and there was an involuntary push forward to gratify a morbid desire to learn the news from those who had been in the disaster. The first train contained many of the seriously injured, and as the poor unfortunates were lifted in blankets from the car the groans of the wounded mingled with the agonized sobs of relatives and friends. It was a most touching scene. Some 20 passengers were taken in ambulances to St. Joseph's hospital. Several of them cannot hope to live more than a few hours at the furthest.

At 8:30 o'clock the train carrying the dead was sighted coming across the long Union Pacific trestle. Nearer the specter drew and an involuntary wail of mourning burst from the assembled multitude. The contrast of the day before was sharply drawn. A crowd of happy young people had gathered on that same depot platform. Good-bys were said amidst the waving of flags and playing of bands as the cars moved out. No one ever dreamed of the terrible fate that was in store for the merry excursionists.

A complete list of the dead is as follows:

A. M. Gerard, 1839 Seventh avenue, Council Bluffs, Ia.; Owen Cavanaugh, Eighteenth and Charles streets, Omaha, aged 18; Willie Cosgrove, 1622 Nicholas street, Omaha; E. G. DENOUNCE FREE SILVER.

Many Democratic Organs Repudiate the Platform and Ticket.

Chicago, July 11.—The Tribune says conservative democratic newspapers, especially in the east and south, are openly and in considerable numbers announcing a policy of vigorous opposition to the free silver platform and nominee. In many cases sound money democrats are advised by these journals to vote for McKinley as the surest method of stamping out the heresy which has attained a governing power within the party. Some of the belting newspapers suggest the nomination of a third ticket on a gold platform, but most of them are in favor of the election of McKinley. The list to date is as follows: The Staats-Zeitung, Sun, Herald, Times and World of New York city; Record and Times, Philadelphia; Sun and Evening Times, Baltimore; Courier-Journal, Post and Anzeiger (German), Louisville, Ky.; Staats-Zeitung and Chronicle, Chicago; Times, Richmond, Va.; Globe, St. Paul, Minn.; Eagle, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Sun, Lewiston, Me.; Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S. D.; Courier, Buffalo, N. Y., and Anzeiger Des Westens, St. Louis, Mo.

Action of Illinois Gold Democrats.

Chicago, July 14.—The honest money democracy of Illinois, through its executive committee, issued an address Monday night to the democrats of other states calling upon them to nominate another national ticket and adopt a platform of "sound money" principles upon which the nominees can appeal to the people of that opinion. This address was authorized at a meeting of the executive committee Saturday night and a committee of three was appointed to write and issue it. This committee met Monday in the law office of Henry S. Robbins, president of the Illinois Democratic Sound Money league.

Drowned at Camp.

Springfield, Ill., July 14.—Private Fred Koch, of the First regiment, I. N. G., now in camp here, was drowned while bathing in the Sangamon river Monday. Private Patrick Maloney, of the same regiment, broke his back by striking a stone while diving. He will die. Both men lived in Chicago.

Hay Dealer Fails.

Toronto, Ont., July 14.—Louis Roch, a dealer in hay, has failed. His liabilities are placed at $75,000 and his assets at only $10,000. The cause of the failure is attributed to losses in shipping hay to England.

Canadian View of Silver Question.

Toronto, Ont., July 13.—A number of local bankers and financial men interviewed Saturday expressed the opinion that the adoption of a silver standard by the United States would seriously affect the business relations of the dominion with that country, and that Canadian investments would undoubtedly suffer.

An Honor for Senator Jones.

Chicago, July 14.—Senator Jones, of Arkansas, was elected chairman of the national democratic committee and Hugo Wallace, of Washington, son-in-law of Chief Justice Fuller, temporary secretary.

DISASTER NEAR CHICAGO.

Picnic Train Wrecked and Five Persons Are Killed.

Chicago, July 13.—An excursion train on the Wisconsin Central ran into an open switch at Altenheim, a suburb ten miles west of this city, Sunday evening, killing five people and injuring about 20. The names of the dead are: Charles Samuels, Chicago; Frederick Keitel, Chicago; Fred Koch, Chicago; Miss Mary Arnold and Miss Mary Hubert.

It is not known who is guilty of leaving the switch open, but pending an investigation the police arrested Conductor Heater, James Grant and William Dolan, the crew of the excursion train, and the crew of the side-tracked passenger train.

The train consisted of 13 coaches and was returning from Schiller park, where the Graded Assessment club, a lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, had given a picnic. The train was coming down a grade approaching the Altenheim station and the speed was so great the engineer, who saw the open switch could not reverse in time to stop. Standing on the siding were a switch engine and an unloaded passenger train, waiting for the excursion to pass. When the heavily laden picnic train struck the engine and train the baggage car was telescoped by the next coach. Those who met death were riding in the baggage car, as no seats were to be had in the coaches.

M'KINLEY'S CAMPAIGN.

Mark Hanna Chooses a Force of Assistant Managers.

Cleveland, O., July 14.—After weighing in the balance the names of 20 prominent republicans for a month, Chairman M. A. Hanna has named the executive committee who will be his coiaborers and advisers in managing McKinley's campaign. The list of executive committeemen was furnished to the press Monday morning. The official list contains the names of M. A. Hanna, of Ohio, chairman; M. S. Quay, of Pennsylvania; Joseph H. Manley, of Maine; H. C. Payne, of Wisconsin; Cyrus Leland, of Kansas; Powell Clayton, of Arkansas; C. G. Dawes, of Illinois; W. T. Durbin, of Indiana, and N. B. Scott, of West Virginia. The republican executive committee will meet in this city Wednesday. W. M. Osborne, of Boston, is made secretary of the committee and J. A. Dick, of this city, assistant secretary.

AN INDORSEMENT.

American Bimetallic Union Approves the Convention's Work.

Chicago, July 13.—After a two-days' secret session and conference with prominent members the executive committee of the American Bimetallic union adjourned Sunday and formally announced its approval of the democratic platform and candidates. The committee appeals to the silver organizations of the country who intend to send delegates to the St. Louis convention to unify the silver forces by endorsing the work done in the Coliseum.

Thirty-odd members of the committee and outside members of the union attended the council which reached this decision. Gen. A. J. Warner, president of the union, presided. There was no division of sentiment as to endorsement.

APPEAL FOR "BIRD DAY."

Agricultural Department Urges Its Observance by Schools.

Washington, July 14.—An appeal for the observance of a "bird day" in the schools throughout the country has been made by the agricultural department. The object is to devote the day, to be set apart once a year or to be combined with "Arbor day," to instruction in the value of our native birds and the means of protecting them from wanton destruction. The idea originated with Superintendent of Schools Babcock, of Oil City, Pa. It has already been adopted in two cities, Oil City and Fort Madison, Ia., and Secretary Morton, the author of "Arbor day" and indorser of the "bird day" movement, wants to see the latter extended generally.

ARMY OFFICER DEAD.

Major James H. Gageby Passes Away at Johnstown, Pa.

Washington, July 14. — A telegram was received at the war department Monday announcing the death at Johnstown, Pa., of Maj. James H. Gageby, of the Twelfth infantry, of heart disease. His present station is Fort Niobrara, Neb. He was born in Pennsylvania and appointed to the army from the volunteer service in June, 1861. During his service he was twice breveted. In July, 1863, he was made a first lieutenant for gallant and meritorious services in action at Hoover's Gap, Tenn., and in November of the same year he was appointed a captain for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Chattanooga, Tenn.

A Railroad Sold.

Spokane, Wash., July 14.—The Washington & Idaho railway, extending from this city to Coeur d'Alene, a distance of 156 miles, was sold under foreclosure at Tekoa, Wash., Monday to the reorganization committee of the Oregon Railway & Navigation company for $1,615,740. This completes the purchase of all branch lines of the Oregon Railway & Navigation company and the plans of reorganization will now be rapidly completed and the receiver discharged.

Four Killed in a Cyclone.

Petersburg, Va., July 10.—A cyclone visited portions of Dinwiddie and Prince George counties, leaving destruction and ruin in its wake. Dwellings were blown down, and in some instances occupants were more or less injured. In Prince George county four men were killed.

A Church Burned.

Brooklyn, July 13.—The Roman Catholic church of the Visitation, corner of Verona and Richards streets, was destroyed by fire at 11:55 p. m. Sunday night. The loss is estimated at $150,000; insurance, $60,000.

Prominent Englishman Dead.

London, July 13.—Rt. Hon. Sir Augustus Berkeley Paget died at Hatfield Saturday, aged 73 years. He was British minister to Saxony in 1858-9; minister to Denmark from 1859 to 1866; minister to Italy from 1876 to 1883, and ambassador to Austria from 1884 to 1893.

Awarded to a Chicago Firm.

Washington, July 13.—The treasury department has awarded the contract for terra cotta work and fire proofing the Milwaukee public building to the Engine and Fire Proofing company, of Chicago, at $39,800.

AFRAID OF HIS OWN GUNS.

Why the Sultan of Turkey Does Not Want a Navy.

The incident which led to the order for the extinction of the Turkish navy was as follows, says the Pittsburgh Dispatch. A transport was bringing a number of time-expired men home, when they respectfully mutinied, and begged their officers to go below, as they wished to do something which might not be approved of. Some non-commissioned officers then took command, and anchored off the palace, and, after firing a salute, began shouting: "Long live the sultan!"

This demonstration caused immediate confusion at the palace, and various high officers were dispatched to parley with the mutineers, but they insisted on seeing the minister, and when he at last appeared they said they knew the sultan had given the money to pay them, but they had not received it, and they would not budge until they did.

No arguments were of any avail, and the money had to be sent for and distributed, after which the men weighed anchor with a cheer, and gave up the ship again. The sultan, however, reflected that what a transport had done peaceably a heavily-armed man-of-war might do with evil intent, and, calling Hassan Pasha to him, he declared that he wanted no more navy.

Can't See Your Own Eye Move.

A curious and slightly known fact is that it is impossible to move the eye while looking at its reflection in a mirror. The eye is the most movable part of the face, yet if you try to look at it and move it a thousandth part of an inch you will be balked in your purpose. The moment you endeavor to perceive the motion of the eye it becomes fixed. That is why a person's expression as he sees himself in the glass is entirely different from the one by which his friends recognize him.

NOMINATED.

Bryan and Sewall Will Run on the Democratic Ticket.

Full Account of the Proceedings of the Convention at Chicago.

Text of the Platform as Adopted —Declares for Free Coinage of Silver.

Gold Men Prepare a Substitute for the Financial Plank—Ballots for Nominees.

Chicago, July 9.—Wednesday evening for the first time the convention really got down to business. The delegates assembled at 5:30 p. m., and the galleries were full at that time, but for more than half an hour the band had to fill up the time while the convention was waiting the report of the committee on credentials.

The Michigan Contest.

At 6:05 the committee on credentials presented its complete report, admitting to seats the contesting delegates from the Fourth congressional district of Michigan—Messrs. Chamberlain and Hart—also admitting the contesting delegates from the Ninth congressional district of Michigan—Messrs. Hoyt and White—and recognizing the right to their seats of all the other delegates from Michigan.

After considerable discussion the previous question was ordered, and the motion to substitute the minority for the majority report in the Michigan case was lost: Ayes, 368; nays, 558.

Silver Has a Two-Thirds Vote.

The chairman put the question on the majority report of the committee on credentials and declared it adopted. The result of the Michigan contest leaves the majority of the delegation for silver, and the state vote will be cast for silver under the unit rule. Ex-Gov. Sheehan, of New York, says the action gives the silver men a two-thirds vote in the convention.

White Elected Permanent Chairman.

The report of the committee on permanent organization was then presented by Mr. Finley, of Ohio, naming Senator White, of California, as permanent president of the convention and Thomas J. Cogan, of Ohio, as permanent secretary. The report was adopted.

Senator Daniel, in retiring from the temporary chairmanship, expressed his deep sense of the honor which he had enjoyed and introduced Mr. White as "the distinguished Senator from California."

PLATFORM ADOPTED.

Has Votes to Spare Over the Required Two-Thirds.

Convention Hall, Chicago, July 10.—At five minutes before 11 o'clock Senator White, of California, the permanent president of the convention, called the assembly to order, and stated that the day's proceedings would be opened with prayer by Rev. Thomas E. Green, of the Grace Episcopal church, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., the same clergyman who offered prayer Wednesday.

Representative Richardson, of Tennessee, was called to the chair. Senator Jones, of Arkansas, chairman of the committee on resolutions, read the platform as finally adopted by that committee

Text of the Platform.

The full text of the platform as adopted is as follows:

"We, the democrats of the United States, in national convention assembled, do reaffirm our allegiance to those great essential principles of justice and liberty upon which our institutions are founded and which the democratic party has advocated from Jefferson's time to our own—freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of conscience, the preservation of personal rights, the equality of all citizens before the law, and the faithful observance of constitutional limitations.

"During all these years the democratic party has resisted the tendency of selfish interests to the centralization of governmental power, and steadfastly maintained the integrity of the dual scheme of government established by the founders of this republic of republics. Under its guidance and teachings the great principle of local self-government has found its best expression in the maintenance of the rights of the states and in its assertion of the necessity of confining the general government to the exercise of the powers granted by the constitution of the United States.

"The constitution of the United States guarantees to every citizen the rights of civil and religious liberty. The democratic party has always been the exponent of political liberty and religious freedom and it renews its obligations and reaffirms its devotion to these fundamental principles of the constitution.

Financial Plank.

"Recognizing that the money question is paramount to all others at this time, we invite attention to the fact that the federal constitution names silver and gold together as the money metals of the United States, and that the first coinage law passed by congress under the constitution made the silver dollar the unit of value and admitted gold to free coinage at the ratio measured by the silver dollar unit.

"We declare that the act of 1873 demonetizing silver without the knowledge or approval of the American people has resulted in the appreciation of gold and a corresponding fall in the prices of commodities produced by the people; a heavy increase in the burden of taxation and of all debts, public and private; the enrichment of the money lending class at home and abroad; prostration of industry and impoverishment of the people.

"We are unalterably opposed to the single gold standard, which has locked fast the prosperity of an industrial people in the paralysis of hard times.

"Gold monometallism is a British policy, and its adoption has brought other nations into financial servitude to London. It is no; only un-American, but anti-American, and it can be fastened on the United States only by the stifling of that indomitable spirit and love of liberty which proclaimed our political independence in 1776 and won it in the war of the revolution.

"We demand the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold at the present legal ratio of sixteen to one without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation. We demand that the standard silver dollar shall be a full legal tender, equally with gold, for all debts, public and private, and we favor such legislation as will prevent the demonetization of any kind of legal tender money by private contract.

"We are opposed to the policy and practice of surrendering to the holders of the obligations of the United States the option reserved by law to the government of redeeming such obligations in either silver coin or gold coin.

Bonds.

"We are opposed to the issuing of interest-bearing bonds of the United States in time of peace, and condemn the trafficking with banking syndicates, which, in exchange for bonds and at an enormous profit to themselves, supply the federal treasury with gold to maintain the policy of gold monometallism.

"Congress alone has the power to coin and issue money, and President Jackson declared that this power could not be delegated to corporations or individuals. We, therefore, denounce the issuance of notes intended to circulate as money by national banks as in derogation of the constitution, and we demand that all paper which is made a legal tender for public and private debts, or which is receivable for dues to the United States, shall be issued by the government of the United States, and shall be redeemable in coin.

Tariff and Taxation.

"We hold that tariff duties should be levied for purposes of revenue, and that taxation should be limited by the needs of the government honestly and economically administered. We denounce as disturbing to business the republican threat to restore the McKinley law, which has been twice condemned by the people in national elections, and which, enacted under the false plea of protection to home industry, proved a prolific breeder of trusts and moncpolies, enriched the few at the expense of the many, restricted trade and deprived the producers of the great American staples of access to their natural markets. Until the money question is settled we are opposed to any agitation for further changes in our tariff laws, except such as are necessary to meet the deficit in revenue caused by the adverse decision of the supreme court on the income tax. There would be no deficit in the revenue but for the annulment by the supreme court of a law passed by a democratic congress in strict pursuance of the uniform decisions of that court for nearly 100 years, that court having sustained constitutional objections to its action, which has been overruled by the ablest judges who had ever sat on that bench. We declare that it is the duty of congress to use all the constitutional power which remains after that decision, or which may come from its reversal by the court as it may hereafter be constituted, so that the burdens of taxation may be equally and impartially laid, to the end that wealth may bear its proportion of the expenses of the government.

Pauper Labor Plank.

"We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market, and that the value of the home market to our American farmers and artisans is greatly reduced by a vicious monetary system which depresses the prices of their products below the cost of production and thus deprives them of the means of purchasing the products of our home manufactories, and as labor creates the wealth of the country, we demand the passage of such laws as may be necessary to protect it in all its rights.

"We are in favor of the arbitration of differences between employers engaged in interstate commerce and their employes, and recommend such legislation as is necessary to carry out this principle.

Restraint on Railroad Corporations.

"The absorption of wealth by the few, the consolidation of our leading railroad systems, and the formation of trusts and pools require a stricter control by the federal government of those arteries of commerce. We demand the enlargement of the powers of the interstate commerce commission and such restrictions and guarantees in the control of railroads as will protect the people from robbery and oppression.

Republican Congresses

"We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation and the lavish appropriations of recent republican congresses, which have kept taxes high while the labor that pays them is unemployed and the products of the people's toil are depressed in price till they no longer repay the cost of production. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which best befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless officers, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

Federal Interference.

"We denounce the arbitrary interference by federal authorities in local affairs as a violation of the constitution of the United States and a crime against free institutions, and we especially object to government by injunction as a new and highly dangerous form of oppression by which federal judges, in contempt of the laws of the states and rights of citizens, become at once legislators, judges and executioners; and we approve the bill passed at the last session of the United States senate and now pending in the house relative to contempts in federal courts and providing for trials by jury in certain cases of contempt.

Admission of Territories.

"We favor the admission of the territories of New Mexico, Arizona and Oklahoma into the union as states and we favor the early admission of all the territories having the necessary population and resource to entitle them to statehood, and while they remain territories we hold that the officials appointed to administer the government of any territory, together with the District of Columbia and Alaska, should be bona fide residents of the territory or district in which the duties are to be performed. The democratic party believes in home rule and that all public lands of the United States should be appropriated to the establishment of free homes for American citizens.

"We recommend that the territory of Alaska be granted a delegate in congress, and that the general land and timber laws of the United States be extended to said territory.

Pacific Funding Bill.

"No discrimination should be indulged in by the government of the United States in favor of its debtors. We approve of the refusal of the Fifty-third congress to pass the Pacific railroad funding bill; denounce the effort of the present republican congress to enact a similar measure.

Pensions.

"Recognizing the just claims of deserving union soldiers, we heartily indorse the rule of Commissioner Murphy that no names shall be arbitrarily dropped from the pension roll, and the fact of enlistment and service should be deemed conclusive evidence against disease and disability before enlistment.

The Monroe Doctrine.

"The Monroe doctrine as originally declared and as interpreted by succeeding presidents, is a permanent part of the foreign policy of the United States, and must at all times be maintained.

Sympathy for Cuba.

"We extend our sympathy to the people of Cuba in their heroic struggle for liberty and independence.

Civil Service.

"We are opposed to life tenure in the public service. We favor appointments based upon merits, fixed terms of office, and such an administration of the civil service laws as will afford equal opportunities to all citizens of ascertained fitness.

Against Third Term.

"We declare it to be the unwritten law of this republic, established by custom and usage of 100 years and sanctioned by the examples of the greatest and wisest of those who founded and have maintained our government, that no man should be eligible for a third term of the presidential office.

Waterways Improvement.

"The federal government should care for and improve the Mississippi river and other great waterways of the republic, so as to secure for the interior states easy and cheap transportation to tide water. When any waterway of the republic is of sufficient importance to demand aid of the government, such aid should be extended upon a definite plan of continuous work until permanent improvement is secured.

"Confiding in the justice of our cause and the necessity of its success at the polls we submit the foregoing declaration of principle and purposes to the considerate judgment of the American people. We invite the support of all citizens who approve them and who desire to have them made effective through legislation for the relief of the people and the restoration of the country's prosperity."

The Minority Report.

A minority report, signed by 16 members of the committee on resolutions, was then read by one of the convention secretaries. It recommended the substitution of the following for the financial plank of the platform:

"We declare our belief that the experiment on the part of the United States alone of free silver coinage, and a change of the existing standard of value independently of the action of other great nations, would not only imperil our finances, but would retard or entirely prevent the establishment of international bimetallism, to which the efforts of the government should be steadily directed. It would place this country at once upon a silver basis, impair contracts, disturb business, diminish the purchasing power of the wages of labor and inflict irreparable evils upon our nation's commerce and industry."

Favor Maintenance of Gold Standard.

"Until international cooperation among leading nations for the coinage of silver can be secured we favor the rigid maintenance of the existing gold standard as essential to the preservation of our national credit, the redemption of our public pledges and the keeping inviolate of our country's honor. We insist that all our paper and silver currency shall be kept absolutely at a parity with gold. The democratic party is the party of hard money, and is opposed to legal tender paper money as a part of our permanent financial system, and we therefore favor the gradual retirement and cancellation of all United States notes and treasury notes, under such legislative provisions as will prevent undue contraction. We demand that the national credit shall be resolutely maintained at all times and under all circumstances.

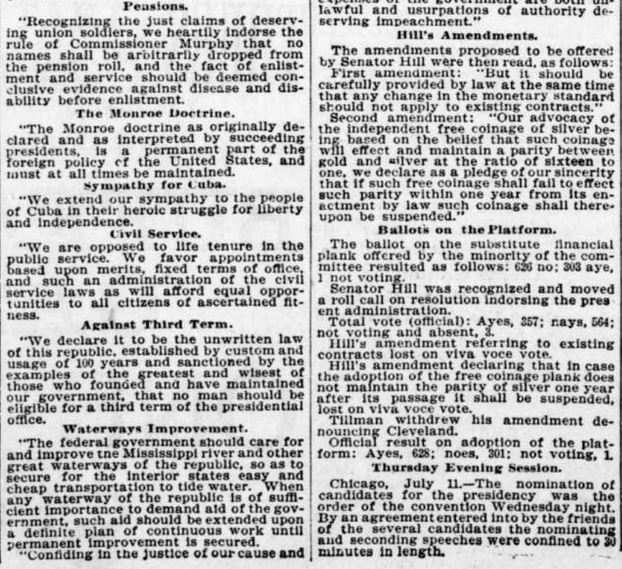
Administration Commended.

"The minority also feel that the report of the majority is defective in failing to make any recognition of the honesty, economy, courage and fidelity of the present democratic administration, and they therefore offer the following declaration as an amendment to the majority report:

"We commend the honesty, economy, courage and fidelity of the present democratic national administration.

The Tillman Resolution.

Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, was recognized, and delivered an address favoring the adoption of the majority report of the committee. He concluded by presenting an amendment in the shape of the following resolution:



"We denounce the administration of President Cleveland as undemocratic and tyrannical, and as a departure from those principles which are cherished by all liberty-loving Americans. The veto power has been used to thwart the will of the people as expressed by their representatives in congress. The appointing power has been used to subsidize the press, to debauch congress and to overawe and control citizens in the free exercise of their constitutional rights as voters. A plutocratic despotism is thus sought to be established on the ruins of the republic. We repudiate the construction placed on the financial plank of the last democratic national convention by President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle as contrary to the plain meaning of English words, and as being an act of bad faith, deserving the severest censure. The issue of bonds in time of peace with which to buy gold to redeem coin obligations payable in silver or gold, at the option of the government, and the use of the proceeds to defray the ordinary expenses of the government are both unlawful and usurpations of authority deserving impeachment."

Hill's Amendments.

The amendments proposed to be offered by Senator Hill were then read, as follows:

First amendment: "But it should be carefully provided by law at the same time that any change in the monetary standard should not apply to existing contracts."

Second amendment: "Our advocacy of the independent free coinage of silver being based on the belief that such coinage will effect and maintain a parity between gold and silver at the ratio of sixteen to one, we declare as a pledge of our sincerity that if such free coinage shall fail to effect such parity within one year from its enactment by law such coinage shall thereupon be suspended."

Ballots on the Platform.

The ballot on the substitute financial plank offered by the minority of the committee resulted as follows: 626 no; 303 aye, 1 not voting.

Senator Hill was recognized and moved a roll call on resolution indorsing the present administration.

Total vote (official): Ayes, 357; nays, 564; not voting and absent, 3.

Hill's amendment referring to existing contracts lost on viva voce vote.

Hill's amendment declaring that in case the adoption of the free coinage plank does not maintain the parity of silver one year after its passage it shall be suspended, lost on viva voce vote.

Tillman withdrew his amendment denouncing Cleveland.

Official result on adoption of the platform: Ayes, 628; noes, 301; not voting, 1.

Thursday Evening Session.

Chicago, July 11.—The nomination of candidates for the presidency was the order of the convention Wednesday night. By an agreement entered into by the friends of the several candidates the nominating and seconding speeches were confined to 30 minutes in length.

Georgia Nominates Bryan.

When the state of Georgia was called, Mr. H. T. Lewis, of that state, came to the platform and put in nomination Mr. William J. Bryan, of Nebraska, saying that if public office was a reward for public services, no man merited such reward more than he. In the late political contests Mr. Bryan stood among his peers, like Saul among the Israelites, head and shoulders above all the rest. "Honor him with the nomination," he said, "and you will do credit to the party and earn for yourselves the plaudits of your constituents and the thanks of posterity."

Other names put forward for the nomination for president were Gov. Matthews, of Indiana, ex-Gov. Boles, of Iowa, Senator Joseph S. Blackburn, of Kentucky, and John R. McLean, of Ohio.

A STAMPEDE.

Convention Goes Over to Bryan on the Fifth Ballot.

Chicago, July 11.—William J. Bryan, of Nebraska, was selected Friday as the standard bearer of the democratic party in the campaign for the presidency of the United States. Thursday when the handsome young Nebraskan mounted the rostrum in the convention hall to close the debate on the party platform, he was considered the merest possibility in the race for the honor to be conferred. Half an hour later, when he concluded his great rhetorical effort, he had become a seeming probability. With the hours of the night his chances grew, and when the convention resumed business Friday morning he had been established as Richard P. Bland's most formidable competitor. His nomination came on the fifth ballot.

Convention Opened with Prayer.

At five minutes before 11 Senator White, of California, the permanent chairman, took the chair and made an effort to establish some degree of quiet and order in the hall. After five minutes devoted to that purpose, with very little success, prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Green, of Grace Episcopal church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., the same clergyman who officiated the last two days.

Pattison Placed in Nomination.

The chair immediately recognized Mr. Harrity, of Pennsylvania, who, standing in the main aisle, was greeted with cheers. He said: "I desire to say that in obedience to the instructions given by the democratic state convention the Pennsylvania delegation presents the name of Robert E. Pattison, of Pennsylvania, as a candidate for the presidency."

The chair asked if there were any other nominations.

Mr. Miller, of Oregon, on behalf of that state, nominated ex-Gov. Sylvester Pennoyer.

No other names being presented the chair declared the nominations closed and, first invoking order, directed the secretary to call the roll of states.

Result of the First Ballot.

The chair announced the result of the first ballot as follows:

First vote: Bland, 223; Bryan, 105; Boies, 86; Blackburn, 83; McLean, 54; Matthews, 37; Campbell, 2; Pattison, 95; Pennoyer, 10; Russell, 2; Stevenson, 2; Tillman, 17; Teller, 8; Hill, 1.

Absent and not voting, 185.

Second Ballot Begun.

The second ballot was begun at 12:35. As soon as it was started Senator White vacated the chair, placing the gavel in the hands of Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee. South Carolina swung over from Tillman to Bryan, whose gains had begun early in the balloting.

The result of the second ballot was announced at 1:18 p. m. as follows.

Second ballot: Bland, 281; Boies, 37; Matthews, 34; McLean, 53; Isiackburn, 41; Pat-

The Third Ballot.

The third ballot was then begun at 1:30 p. m.

New York on the third ballot, as on the second, remained mute when the name of the state was called and the clerk repeated the call in his loudest tone, but without result. The result of the third ballot was announced at 1:50 p. m. as follows:

Third ballot—Bland, 291; Boies, 36; Matthews, 34; McLean, 54; Bryan, 219; Blackburn, 27; Pattison, 97; Stevenson, 9; Hill, 1; absent or not voting, 162.

The Fourth Vote.

The fourth ballot resulted: Bryan, 280; Bland, 241; Boies, 33; Matthews, 36; McLean, 46; not voting, 162.

Tremendous cheering greeted Bryan's figure. Bryan had gained 61 votes. Bland lost just 50. The applause continued so long that another stampede seemed imminent. For five minutes cheering continued without slackening. The Bland men alone sat silent; even the gold democrats joined in the shouting.

Immediately following the final outcome of the result of the fourth ballot, the chairman, Senator White, of California, said that the proceedings had reached the stage where it was necessary for the chair to state his construction of the two-thirds rule. A careful examination of the records of democratic conventions left but one decision open to the chair. The noise and confusion in the hall made the chairman pause. "Oh, gentlemen," he remonstrated, "do keep quiet."

Fifth Ballot Ordered.

Cries of "Sit down! Sit down!" The chairman resumed his statement, and said that the two-thirds rule had been acted on, without objection, ever since its adoption in the Ohio convention in 1852. The rule read that "two-thirds of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to nominate for president or vice president." Therefore, in the opinion of the chair, two-thirds of the votes given would nominate the candidates for president and vice president of the United States [Cheers]. "Call the roll," he ordered, and the fifth ballot was taken.

The fifth ballot was begun at 2:45. California this time gave all her 18 votes to Bryan. Connecticut, Delaware, Arkansas and Colorado voted as before. Everybody waited to see what Illinois did. Illinois passed and Bryan men began to applaud.

Kentucky's 26 votes went for Bryan also on the fifth ballot, casting Senator Blackburn overboard. The chairman, who announced the vote, said the convention did not care, evidently, to vote for a man who had been in the confederate army, a sentiment which was roundly hissed.

Illinois Swings Into Line.

Illinois, which had asked to be passed, cast her 48 votes for Bryan. This left him with 446 votes, 66 short of the necessary number. Oklahoma changed her 6 votes from Bland to Bryan, making 454. Then Ohio withdrew the name of McLean and cast 46 votes for Bryan, making his total 500. Before the result was announced, but when it was known that Mr. Bryan had received within a few of the necessary number of votes, Gov. Stone, of Missouri, ascended the platform, and as soon as order could be obtained he addressed the convention in these words:

Note from Bland Read.

"Gentlemen of the Convention: Two or three days since I received this note, which I will now read in your hearing, from Richard Parks Bland: 'I wish it to be understood that I do not desire the nomination unless it is the judgment of the free silver delegates that I would be the strongest candidate. If it shall at any time appear that my candidacy is the least obstruction to the nomination of any candidate who is acceptable to the free coinage delegates of the convention, or one more acceptable to a majority of those delegates than myself, I wish my name, at once, unconditionally withdrawn from further consideration. I am willing to waive state instructions for me, if need be, and to let the free silver delegates decide the whole matter. The cause must be put above the man.' [Applause.]

Nomination Made Unanimous.

Senator Turpie, of Indiana, mounted the platform and said, amid great noise and confusion, that the delegates from Indiana had stood from first to last for the distinguished chief magistrate of Indiana, but in view of the wave which had just swept over the convention he was now authorized to withdraw the name of Gov. Matthews and to cast the vote of Indiana for William J. Bryan, of Nebraska. In view of the unity which should prevail in the convention he moved that the nomination of W. J. Bryan be made unanimous.

After the vote of Texas had been shifted to Mr. Bryan the chairman put the question on Senator Turpie's motion to make the nomination unanimous and declared it carried, only a few votes in the negative coming from the Pennsylvania delegation.

Another Demonstration.

When the announcement was made all order was cast to the winds. The delegates and the audience began to cheer and to wave hats and flags and banners; while the march around the sections was again taken up—all the state emblems being this time carried in the procession. A band of music entered the hall from the vestibule and marched at the head of the procession, playing "Marching Through Georgia," and other popular airs, in the chorus of which many of those present joined. "Dixie," which the band also played, had the usual effect of heightening the enthusiasm and was cheered and cheered again.

At 3:45 p. m. the sergeant-at-arms, in behalf of the chairman, succeeded in getting a hearing so far as to be able to announce that the convention stood in recess till eight p. m.

The Fifth Ballot.

The following table gives the vote on the fifth ballot as officially announced. Changes were made thereafter, before the nomination was made unanimous, giving Bryan more than the necessary 512 votes:

Changes were made to Bryan as follows: Arkansas, from Bland, 16 votes; Indiana, from Matthews, 30; Iowa, from Boies, 26; Montana, from Bland, 6; Missouri, from Bland, 34; Texas, from Bland, 30; Utah, from Bland, 3; Alaska, from Bland, 6. The corrected ballot shows the following totals: Bryan, 639; Bland, 23; Patterson, 95; Stevenson, 8; Hill, 1; Matthews, 2; not voting, 162.

SEWALL FOR VICE PRESIDENT.

Placed Upon the Ticket to Run with Bryan.

Convention Hall, Chicago, July 11.—There was a very marked falling off in the attendance at the Coliseum on the fifth morning of the democratic national convention. The railroad trains from the city furnished for the first time since Tuesday last ample accommodations, and the great gallery expanses in the hall were not used to one-fifth of their seating capacity.

Convention Called to Order.

At 11 a. m. the chairman, Senator White, of California, called the convention to order and (prayer having been dispensed with) Mr. Harrity, of Pennsylvania, announced that the present national committee would meet at the Palmer house at three o'clock in the afternoon, and would be glad to welcome the new national committee.

Nominations for Vice President.

Senator Jones, of Arkansas, moved that the convention proceed to the nomination of candidates for the vice presidency, and the motion was agreed to with cheers.

McLean, of Ohio, Nominated.

Mr. Marsden, of Louisiana, the gentleman with a thirst, took the platform, and the chair immediately took the precaution of removing the tumbler from the table. Cries of "water" were raised, and Mr. Marsden assured the convention that he had not tasted a drop of water during the morning. [Derisive cries of "Oh, oh."] He proceeded to say that he stood alone in his delegation, as was proven Friday, but, he added, lifting his hand, "before high Heaven I say here, I do represent the state of Louisiana. I come here the unanimous choice of the people of that state. I want to name for you a wheel horse to keep this young colt in the traces. He is a thoroughbred, and therefore we should take all the better care of him. The man I shall name comes from a pivotal state. Who is the wheel horse, and which is the pivotal state? John R. McLean, of Ohio, is that man, and Ohio is that pivotal state. [Cheers.] Give us McLean, and we will sweep the country." [Cheers.]

More Nominations.

Hon. Tom Johnson took the stand and put in nomination Mr. George W. Fithian, of Illinois, saying of him: "He has been six years in congress, and his action and his every vote there places him in accord with your platform. He has the merit—which I think is absolutely necessary for the vice presidency—he is not a wealthy man. This fight will have to be one by the people, by the men who are interested in humanity. If it is to be a race between money and men, money will be on the other side, for the moneyed men of the democratic party have mostly gone over to McKinley. [Cheers.]

"I am not a free silver man; I do not believe in free silver, but I do believe the democratic party has started a great revolution for the good of the people. But for free silver (which I think is wrong) you have inaugurated a movement for the good of humanity and therefore I am with you heartily. [Loud applause.] Make not the mistake of thinking you can bind anybody with money. It will kill the ticket before the people. Mr. Fithian fills the bill. He comes from a state that is pivotal, and I hope to God that you will nominate him."

Mr. William R. Burke, of Los Angeles, Cal., presented the name of Arthur Sewall, of Maine, as a man who "strove for liberty when God Himself was dumb."

Mr. C. S. Thomas, of Colorado, seconded the nomination of Arthur Sewall as a man distinguished for business ability and life long devotion to the cause of democracy, and whose name will fill up and round out the work performed by the convention.

Result of First Ballot.

The clerk announced the result of the first ballot as follows: Blackburn, 20; Bland, 62; Teller, 1; Daniel, 11; Harrity, 21; Boies, 20; Williams, of Illinois, 22; White, 1. Absent or excused, 258. Fithian, 1; Williams, of Massachusetts, 76; McLean, 111; Lewis, 11; Clark, 50; Sewall, 100; Sibley, 163. Total number of votes cast, 682. Necessary to choice, 455.

Second, Third and Fourth Ballots.

Official result of second ballot as announced was as follows: Williams, of Illinois, 13; Clark, 22; Pattison, 1; Harrity, 21, Bland, 294; Williams, of Massachusetts, 16; McLean, 158; Sewall, 37; Sibley, 113; absent or not voting, 255. Total votes, 930.

The official announcement of the third ballot was as follows: Pattison, 1; Daniel, 6; Bland, 255; McLean, 210; Sewall, 97; Sibley, 19; Williams, of Massachusetts, 15; Clark, 22. Total cast, 675. Absent or not voting, 255. Necessary to choice, 450.

Official result of fourth ballot: McLean, 296; Sewall, 261; Pattison, 1; Daniel, 54; Clark, 46; Williams, 9; Harrity, 11. Not voting, 252. Total cast, 678. Necessary to choice, 453.

Sewall Nominated.

As the fifth ballot progressed it became evident that the nomination was going to Arthur Sewall, of Maine. With Wisconsin's vote his nomination was made sure, and Illinois immediately changed her vote to Sewall. Other states then fell into line changing their votes for Sewall. Ohio's motion to make Sewall's nomination unanimous was carried amid great applause.

Senator Jones, of Arkansas, offered a resolution authorizing the national committee to fix time and place of next national convention. Adopted.

A resolution of thanks of convention to presiding officers was passed.

The national committee meeting was called for five p. m. at the Palmer house, and the convention then adjourned sine die.

WON'T VOTE FOR HIS PA.

Republican Son of Candidate Sewall Repudiates the Ticket.

New York, July 14.—The Herald this morning prints the following from the son of the democratic vice presidential nominee, in reply to an inquiry as to his position in the coming campaign:

"Bath, Me., July 13.—The republicans of Maine have never failed to carry Maine for their presidential ticket, and never will. My relationship to the democratic nominee for vice president has never affected my political action, nor will it now.

(Signed) HAROLD K. SEWALL."

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, JULY 17, 1896.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—I. Gutzwiller Jr. is haying his residence re-shingled.

—Sunday was a very hot day, 93 deg. in the shade.

—Base ball tomorrow! Delano Cricketts vs. Buffalo nine under 16.

—Rev. K. Zeyher has a class in German which we understand is making fine progress.

—Dr. Niven will be in Buffalo July 18 and 19; Delano 20 and 21; Waverly 22 and Howard 23.

—After Sunday and Sunday night's heat a refreshing shower was much appreciated by all.

—John Carney, age 15 years, while separating a couple of fighting dogs, at Rockford station last Sunday, received a bite on the hand.

—Miss Ketchum, of Minneapolis, who it was expected would conduct the grammar department of our school this winter has found another place we are informed.

—We are glad to hear that Rev. Millspaugh, the former Episcopal preacher at this place, who has been ill with typhoid fever, at his home in Topeka Kansas, is recovering.

—On Monday morning we received by mail a new shirt front, for campaign wear, from C. F. Albright and Co. 151 Wabash Ave. The only trouble with it is it has the wrong candidates and the wrong sentiments.

—Getleib Herman requests us to say that he thinks the proprietor of a couple of ponies has more wind than has the ponies; as after offering to race for $5, Mat wanted him to put up $15, and when the $15 was up he backed out entirely.

—Dr. Ames reports that Fredrick Spliattoser; age 73 years, living in Corcosantown was tripped up by a horse stepping on his foot, the horse stumbling and falling on the old gentleman breaking his left clovicle and 4th rib.

—Several of our politicians haye been discussing the propriety of a joint debate on the money question. We have a good hall which would be well filled almost any night to hear a debate on the leading issue of the campaign. Go in boys! Go in.

—Tramps asking alms to assist them in securing a ride to the west and then spending hours in town drinking beer bought by the pail full from saloons, and carried to their camps, are not apt to meet with much success as beggers about here, in future.

—Dont forget the school meeting at School House, on Saturday July 18, from 7 to 8 P. M. The terms L. M. Maxfield and W. H. Frazee are out. Dont stay away and then complain that things did'nt go right. Be there and vote for what you want.

—Read the Democratic platform on the insise of the paper. and keep it for reference; so when the Gold bug growlers come around trying to make you believe it is for "Monometallism" you can read them from the financial plank "We demand the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold at the present legal raito of sixteen to one without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation.

—Wherever two or three, or more, of our citizens chance to meet, the money question is question is quickly made the topic of conversation, not for years have our people had a subject for discussion which furnished them so large a field for their imaginations, some very wild assertions are boldly made: some very strong arguments are produced. On the whole we believe the outcome of it will be to make better informed citizens. In looking up points for argument many other subjects of interest are found, and a widening of the store of knowledge is the consequence.

—Our school board has adopted a plan of obliging teachers to put up a forfeit of from $10 to $25, in case they do not come after having contracted to do so. If a teacher happens to be short of funds this would be a hardship; and it would with most people having compunctions of conscience act rather to quiet them than otherwise. They would say I bargained for me or my money let them keep the money I have a better place. Besides it seems to us that it would satisfy the law in the matter and preclude the possibility of collecting damages in case a teacher failed to come.

Teachers' Training School.

The Teachers' Training School for Wright County will be held at Buffalo, commencing at one o'clock, July 20th and continuing four weeks. E. J. Donaldson, assisted by Misses Hattie Dunton and Rebecca Mattson will have charge of the school. E. O. Mc Fadon will have charge of the class in music during the first week. It will be for the interest of all progressive

It will not long be possible for those who neglect the opportunities offered by the state for the improvement of teachers to keep up to the standard required by the state. It is the duty of the County Superintendent of Schools to select the best material that is offered in candidates for teachers, and among other things considered will be the work done at the training school.

County Cullings.

Quarterly M. E. Conference will be held at Montrose tomorrow Saturday afternoon.

If you want to keep posted on political matters take your home paper. Don't rely on what a lot of hired strippings write for the great dailies on issues about which many of them know little and care less.

Among Wright Co. people at the Silver meeting yesterday at Minneapolis Johnsaon Mealey and Frank Latham of Howard Lake, A. Y. Eaton, of Buffalo, Ed. Sherwin, of Monticello, and T. J. Catlin, of Delano. All appeared to enjoy the hearty manner in which the big audience applauded the idea of restoring silver to its old place in our Monetary System.

The Editor of the Eagle informs her readers that he "had the pleasure two years ago of occupying the platform on sevearl occasions with Mr. Towne." A few years previous he had the pleasure of making democratic speeches. If he keeps right on retrograding there is no telling what will become of him unless, like the Globe, he takes to the woods,

Several of our county exchanges are poking fun at Towne for having carried around a Mexican dollar and a United States dollar and made some telling arguments in favor of sound money. What's wrong about that? Is not the difference in the standing of the government credit, rather than its silver or gold? Mr. Towne will, doubtless be around again soon, with his dollars. Look ont for him, and dont fail to hear his explanation.

Business on Credit.

Doing business on credit may do for some people, but few men and women work for wages but what like their pay promptly; when farmers sell produde they want their money at once. Everybody likes to haye money enough in his pocket with which to buy the needs of the day at least, and pay cash. If, as it has been stated, 92 per cent of the business in this country is done on credit when we have both gold and silver in circulation, want a much larger share of the business be done on credit when gold is the only money? There should at least be enough of the standard money for everybody to have a sample, and just how silver is to be any worse for the country than it always was is a mystery unfathonable by the ayerage man. The two metals have traveled side by side down the past ages and so long as 92 per cent of the business is done on credit they can continue to do so without hurting the mass of the people.

Golden Glimmerings.

The gold standard advocates claim that "If silver is remonetized it will drive gold out of circulation." Just how they don't seem to agree. Some think that as the large gray squirrels drive the little red ones out of the woods, so the big silver dollars drive the little gold ones out. Others say as the pale faced nations from across the Atlantic has driven the red man of the forest almost from existence, so would the white metal supercede the yellow in the business of the country. But while they are willing to admit that the gray squirrel is superior, as an article of food, to the red one; or that the white man is higher in the scale of civilization than the Indian, they insist that the silver dollar is a "cheaper dollar than the gold dollar. Notwithstanding this they say the gold would "leave the country" that it would be "hoarded up." The latest theory we have seen is that the silver miners would rush to the mints and get their silver coined into "fifty cent" dollars and would soon have all the gold of the land. Just how they are to swap these dollars that the Democrats propose to make standard dollars, same as gold dollars, and as good anywhere as the gold, is not explained. And why they should care to exchange their silver dollars for gold any more than they do now is more than we can see. And how the gold is all to be got over to Europe more than now is another difficult thing to see. We owe debts in Europe, payable in gold. Whether or not we have free silver, these debts will be paid in gold, and how by having more standard money on which to do business is to aid in driving gold from the country, we can't see. They might as well tell us that when our granary is full of oats and the corn turns out uncommonly well and our corn cribs are running over that our oats will all "disappear" will "go to Europe!"

The Eagle asks if under free coinage we would not cease to have gold coined. We think not. We think when the two metals are treated alike they will both be coined. She also asserts without citing any proof, that the McKinley tariff was better than the present one. Bring on your figures, Eagle. Bring on your figures.

Judge Scott, of Omaha, Repudiates the Republican Platform.

Every day prominent Republicans, and influential Republican journals, speak their condemnation of the Wall street platform adopted at St. Louis in tones of no uncertain import. One of the most significant instances is that of Judge Scott, the eminent jurist of Nebraska. In the World-Herald of June 28th. he publishes a three column article stating with remarkable force his objections to the Republican money plank. Space will not permit the reproduction of the entire article, but its closing words will be given, for they should be read by every true American in the land:

When the convention adopted that plank it lowered the American flag in the dust of effete Europe and brought the blush of shame to the cheek of every true, loyal American.

The convention might have gone a step farther and pleased some of those European countries by closing the little red school house of America until an international agreement could be had permitting them to be oped. Why not? The one is just as much of an American institution as the other. American silver built the American school houses. "Has it ever occurred to you," that that may be the next moye on the political checker board in this country?

That money plank in the St. Louis platform is unconstitutional, unrepublican and un-American. It is more; it is cowardly to an extreme.

WILL NOT SUPPORT MC KINLEY.

I am opposed to that Europern platform, and to any candidate who is in favor of it, and politically opposed to any candidate who, being opposed to it, has not the moral courage to publicy pronounce himself against it. A cowardly bimetallist is more to befeared than a brave "gold bug." No candidate is better than his political principles, or the political platform upon which he hopes to ride into office.

"Eternal as the Stars"

I am in favor of protective tariff that will protect American labor, American producers, American industries, the American home, the American schools, the American silver, the American flag, the American people, and the dignity of American citizenship, and a national honor "as eternal as the stars," without consulting any crowned head of any country on earth or the money power of Wall street.

I am opposed to the un-American, pauper breeding gold standard, and am opposed to creditors growing fat on the "unearned increment of gold." I am opposed to the Republican party going into partnership with an English syndicate to determine the financial policy of America.

I am I favor of placing silver back where it was when we had bimetallism for eighty years, before it was dkmonetized in 1873. The politicle party whose presidential candidates I have supported and whose principles I have espoused for forty years has said "no" to that to that truly American principle. The people want a political party and a Congress of the United States that will think less of "John Bull" and mare of "Brother Jonathan," less of "Lone Jack", and more of the stars and stripes; less of Europe and more of America; less of Wall street and more of the common people; less of English "tars," and more of the American "stars"

CUNNINGHAM R. SCOTT.

Among our Exchanges.

There is a growing belif that the Republican candidates are reversing the application of a well known adage, and that while the speech of Hobart is golden the silence of McKinley is largely silver.—World.

How much higher does McKinley wish to make duties than they are under a tariff that is already 33 per cent higher than the Republican war tariff.—New York World.

The New York Daily News, a straight out Democratic paper, says there will be no bolt in New York, but on the contrary the ticket nominated at Chicago will be loyally supported.—St. Cloud Times.

The republicans of the Sixth district will meet in St. Cloud soon to determine whether the tail can wag the dog.—Dispatch.

Now let the Populists and National silyerites and disgusted Republicans all join on Bryan for president and the gold ticket will suffer certain defeat.—Litchfield Independent.

The St. Paul Globe's attention is directed to the declarrtion of chairman McDermott, of the Democratic State Central Committee, that he is "more than pleased with the nomination of William J. Bryan as candidate for President," and will do all he can to aid his election. Is the Globe or the official head of the party the oracle from which Democrats should receive advice?—St. Cloud Times.

The battle cry of the advocates of free coinage of silver, will be the "east against the west and south"—"gold bugs against silver bugs," and engender a good deal of bitter feeling petween the two sections.—Valley Herald.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 10, 1896.

Hurrah for the democratic ticket and platform! No matter what sort of a democrat you were before the Chicago convention made the platform and nominated the ticket, it is now the proper thing for you to hurrah for the ticket and platform, and to go to work and render what aid you can towards obtaining a victory. More will be known as to the chance the democracy has to win after the populist and silver party conventions, both of which meet at St. Louis on the 22nd of this month. If the members of those conventions are as devoted to the cause of silver as they profess to be, they will nominate no ticket of their own, but will endorse the democratic ticket. Should they do that the McKinley crowd would be the worst frightened men in the country, without good cause, either. Should the populists and the silver republicans get their backs up because the democratic convention would not allow them to name the ticket, Mark Hanna's smile will perceptly broaden, but let us at least hope that they wil do nothing so suicidal.

There are plenty of democrats in Washington who do not like portions of the platform and many more who wanted other men nominated, but so far as I know none of them are talking of bolting. The National convention settled the matter for them, and as good party men they are now for the ticket. The talk of President Cleveland taking part in a movement to nominate a gold democratic ticket finds few believers here. It is brickhouses to wood toothpicks that he does nothing of the kind. There can only be one democratic ticket and that has been nominated in a regular mvnner by a properly constituted convention Of couse after reading the platform one cannot expect that President Cleveland will enthuse over it.

U. S. District Attorney Frank Clark, of Fla., who is now in Washington, said in answer to a question of how things political looked in the State: "Oh, the democratic ticket will win as usual. There is considerable interest in the Sensationa race but it is too early yet to predict the name of Senator Call's successor, except to say that he will undoubtedly be a free silver man. A great majority of Florida democrats favor free silver, although four of the delegates to the Chicago convention were for gold. That was simply the result of management, as the gold men were in the majorit at the State convention.

Gen. W. R. Cox, of N. C., who is Secretary of the Senate and a good judge of the drift of political sentiment, has just returned from that state. He says: The prospects of democratic success in N. C. are very encouraging. The nomination of a strong silver candidate and the adoption of a free coinage platform at Chicago went a long way toward insuring the success of democracy. Thousands of populists will vote the national democratic ticket, for they cannot support McKinley without stultifying themselves. And the republicans of N. C. are also for free silver. Their, gubernational candidate, Judge Russel, is a silver man and their State convention declared for the white metal. Outside of the protection policy McKinley has no special strength in the State, but although the republicans generally favor protection, they are not half as deeply interested in that question as they are in the money issue."

Ex-Congressman White, of Tenn., thoroughly believes that the democratic party is going to win a great victory this year because of its championing the cause of silver. He said to a group of friends in a Washington hotel; "Two months ago the cause of democracy seemed hopeless. Now the situation is changed, and the opposition is thoroughly alarmed. A little while ago it seemed impossible that the democrats could win even in Tenn. We will carry the state in November by 30,000 or 40,000 majority. The people are terribly in earnest, and the revolution is on. If N. Y. and Mass. want to secede from the Union I am in favor of letting them go, even as Horace Greely said of South—"Let the erring brethren go in peace."

Those naval officers who thought that the assembling of a large squadron on the Atlantic coast meant a summer of idle loafing around the seaside resorts are waking up to their mistake. It is the intention of Secretary Herbert that the squadron assembled on the Atlantic coast shlla put in some very hard work drilling and exercising, and in order that all of the officers may get their share of the work orders have been issued revoking all leaves of absence except on account of sickness, and directing officers on waiting orders to report for duty. These orders started a fresh crop of Cuban rumors, but there is nothing in them.

Chairman.

Repudiated Principles.

The Party repudiated the Principles is why the People are repudiating the Party! Just compare the two planks for yourself; carefully, line by line:

From Republican National platform, adopted at Minneapolis, in 1892:

GOLD AND SILVER MONEY.—The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetalism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals, so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal. The interests of the producers of the country, its farmers and its workingmen, demand that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the Government, shall be as good as any other. We commend the wise and patriotic steps already taken by our Government to secure an international conference, to adopt such measures as will insure a parity of value between gold and silver for use as money throughout the world.

From the Republican National platform adopted at St. Louis in 1896:

MONEY.

"The republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1879; since then every dollar has been as good as gold.

"We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved.

"All our silver and paper currency must be maintained at parity with gold, and we favor all measures designed to maintain inviolably the obligations of the United States and all our money, whether coin or paper, at the present standard, the standard of the most enlightened nations of the earth.

CONGRESSMAN TOWNE in challenging his opponent, Judge Morris, to 30 joint discussions of the issue before the people of the Sixth District has done the proper thing. If the Judge can succeed in making the people of the Sixth District believe that Towne has "deserted" them, let him go to Congress.

SOME of the great dailies that are howling themselves hoarse for a free gold standard are overdoing the matter as evidenced by the severe rebuke administered by the Duluth News-Tribune to the Pioneer Press for calling respectable people vile names. Calling names acts against the party calling them in cases like the present discussion of the money question.

SENATOR CRAVEN, of Carver Co. has been pointing out a few plain facts and duties of Democrats in this great emergency. The Senator has no time for bosses; no more than Frank Nye had when he told the great meeting at the Exposition building last week that when they take Gatling guns and shoot the heads off of a lot of political bosses he may fall back into line with the Republicans. Just at present it looks as if the days of bossism were about over, in Minnesota.

IN a speech at the Free Silver meeting at Minneapolis last week, Ex-Lieutenant Gov. A. Barto, of Sauk Center, is reported to have said: "Free trade and free silver are to me contradictory on their faces. Then again, protection and a single gold standard are equally inconsistent. Its all a muddle—the worst I ever knew in politics."

If the Govenor had been a Democrat these many years it would not be so hard for him to reconcile these ideas. Free trade and free silver and free gold are what the masses of the people want. They want the privilege of buying and selling where they can do the best, and they want good honest gold and silver coin to carry in their pockets or to pay for what they buy.

Protection and a gold standard are in the same line. If a man wants a protective tariff to prevent people from coming to this country to trade what better could he do than have gold standard money; money requiring twice as much of the commodities of the world to buy a dollar as should be the case.

AFTER reading last week's issue of the Delano Eagle we don't wonder that some of our citizen are on the fence on the money question. You will simply have to cease to follow her if you want to be in line anywhere, or she will have to come down off of the fence. Why, she calls attention to an editorial copied from the Philadelphia Times "Why Silver was Demonetized," an article that any reader of the GAZETTE will have no trouble in refuting. In one paragraph the Times is quoted as saying, that if silver had been demonetized it was more than restored in 1878, when the present legal tender silver dollar was authorized and since then the government has coined nearly fifty times as many silver dollars as before, and have tried hard to "keep in circulation silver dollars which are worth but 53 cents."

In attempting to answer Mr. Cullen's lines in the Waverly Tribune, Mr. Wharton says "In 1873 there was in circulation about $78,000,000 in silver. There is now about 8 times as much silver as then and every dollars of it is worth a dollar in gold. Would the continued free coinage of silver in 1872 have done so much? No it could not." How does brother W. know whether the continued free coinage of silver would or would not have kept the value of silver dollars up? Wasn't they a little higher when demonetized than gold dollars were? The Editor of the Eagle must harmonize his statements and the articles he publishes for his readers, a little better. As for Mr. Cullen he is amply able to defend his statements as against the Bird and all its belongings.

W. J. Bryan in Nebraska.

On arriving at Rulo, the first town after crossing the line into Nebraska, the Democratic nominee was met by the entire town of his old constituents. At Falls City the crowd was larger simply because the town was bigger. In closing a speech to his old friends Mr. Bryan, after thanking them for their interest, according to telegraphic reports, said:

"I am greatly obliged to you, and hope I may hereafter have an opportunity of taking you all by the hand and expressing the gratitude which I feel. I am particularly grateful for this demonstration, for we have on board the train a number of special correspondents for the eastern papers, and I want them to see you, and look in your faces and carry back word that you can be trusted with the government of this country. (Applause.) I want them to look into the faces of as honest and patriotic people as can be found in any part of the world, and know that you and all the people scattered all over the nation can be trusted to govern this nation without waiting for the aid or convenience of any other nation." (Great applause and long continued cheering.)

MR. EUSTIS, of Minneapolis known as the silver tongued orator helped open up the Congressional campaign by delivering one of his characteristic talks at Duluth Saturday night. The News-Tribune says; "his voice was unusually clear," but refrains from saying his arguments were. That paper says "Mr. Eustis punctuated his address with a number of apt illustrations which pleased the crowd:" From the News-Tribune we give this as an example: "We boys used to have to carry water on the farm before we were big enough to carry the pail by ourselves, so we would take a pole and hang the pail in the middle, and then I would work it over sort of sly and easy and make it a good deal lighter for me. My brothe George did'nt know what he was doing, but he was carrying the whole load.

We think the orator has not out grown his boyish capers, but is now engaged in making things easier for himself while slyly working over to the other end of the pole the heft of the load for his brothers to bear while they honestly plod along not suspecting him of such downright meanness as he has owned to. Again Mr. Eustis "took the team out one day to work, and when they came in in the evening the colt was tired and wouldn't eat his oats. I thought "there's something wrong here," and I took that parallel bar they call the evener and drilled another hole in it so that it threw more weight of the load on the old mare, and the next night when I unharnessed him the colt was frisky and ate his oats all right." These figures the Hon. Wm. Henry applied to the question of protection which he claimed in his judgment was the whole thing.

These same figures might as easily apply to what most people, William Henry to the contrary, notwithstanding, consider the important question. If Mr. Eustis would put the pin in the evener back where it was previous to '73, and allow the old white mare, free silver, to haul her end of the load the colt, gold, would be able to do the business of the country much more easily, than at present, and the government would not be continually selling bonds to keep the gold reserve.

A Curious Tangle.

PIONEER PRESS.—To the Editor: Some days ago in conversation with an employe of a Midway manufacturing company he said in Substance: They are building a drainage canal near Chicago and the canal company borrowed $20,000,000 at 4 per cent in England. What did they borrow it for? I replied to buy machinery, tools, and supplies and pay the men who are doing the work. To this he said: All the machinery used (with but few trifling exceptions), all the food the men consume, the clothing they wear, and the houses that shelter them were made from American products, by American labor, England furnishing no labor, no machinery, and no supplies of any kind. Why, then, pay to a foreign country $800,000 per year and $20,000,000, when we furnish everything and do all the work? This little thing has set me to thinking, and I confess I am not able to get the tangle out of it. Can you help an honest inquirer?

—Protection.

The Pioneer Press attempts to make the matter plain by giving a hypothetical parallel case, which only serves to make the muddle worse. As a matter of fact after borrowing the Englishman's money to build the canal did not the Englishman get the bulk of it back in hard cash? When machinery, tools and supplies were bought didn't the Englishman get all the profit there was in the transaction, by owning the plants that furnished the machinery, tools or supplies? Didn't most of the men's wages even go into the Englishman's hands. When a sack of flour was bought, didn't the English mill owners profit? Didn't the English brewery owners even get the profits from the beer drank during the building of the canal? Why are things thus? Isn't it time for a change?

How Page Morris Goes at It.

Things have come to a pretty pass in the politics of this country when the candidate for Congress, on the Republican ticket gets up at Duluth and starts his campaign in this fashion: "The leader, the man whom we placed in the highest position in the gift of the people, has deserted to the enemy." And furtder on, "the reason why I stand here today is because the people have looked and looked for a leader to take his place," (where was Billy and his boom while the people were looking?) Judge Morris says in speaking of the campaign of two years ago: "But there had at that time raised its piteous head the forces of disunion and anarchy, the forces of repudiation and dishonor. That was there then. Now I want to say that that is my opinion of it." Again Mr. Morris tells us that a distinguisned Republican "has told this people that the Republican party has changed. My God, fellow citizens, don't I know something about the Republican party?" (After comparing the platform lately sent out with those of a few campaigns back most people think they don't, agree, and that Mr. Morris must be wrong somewhere.) Farther on in his speech the nominee for Congress from the Sixth District says: "We said then that the Republican party stood for bimetallism; we say today that the Republican party stands for bimetallism. Another attempt to steal away, to get the name of what you know is not true." He then denounces the thing that they call free silver "as leading to monometallism—silver monometallism." (How can he expect to get international agreement, when he can't get national agreement, state agreement, or even party agreement, or when even he and his Congressman can't agree?)

FROM CALIFORNIA.

BY HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

In addressing you, Mr. Editor, on this occasion I find that I have little else to talk about than California weather and that being of such a uniform character, is a limited theme, but will endeavor to describe its peculiarities as they appear to me. In my last letter I referred to the cool weather of April, so I would now state that a similar condition of weather continues till about May 22 with the exception of being of a warmer temperature, still cool enough at times to require a light overcoat in driving. During the latter part of May a very warm wave set in continuing about six days, during which the highest daily temperature ranged from 90 to 103 degrees, accompanied by warm nights, which occasion was rather trying on the tenderfoot, especially as it was rather a sudden transition from a cooler temperature. This hot wave was followed by a period of fine summer weather, not extremely warm nor as cool as it had been previously. About the middle of June another hot wave set in and continued also about six days with the temperature brushing the hundred mark, following which has been another period of very pleasant weather continuing up to the present time, June 30. During these pleasant periods the highest temperature does not go beyond the eighties and at night it drop to 60 and under. During this cooler period, happening just at the time when the days are longest and the sun very near the zenith in this latitude, the ocean fog has been floating regularly over the country in the early morning hours and observing the sun for severel hours after sunrise, having the effect to modify the temperature without loading the atmosphere as far inland as Pasadena, with any apparent dampness, the arid condition of the earth neutralizing the dampness.

These fogs are mostly at a considerable heighth and leave the landscape unobscured. Sometimes these foggy mornings are followed by floating clouds during the day and frequently the skies, according to our eastern weather signs indicate rain. No rain follows however. At any time of the year whether the temperature is inclined to be warm or cool, it is modified by the ocean breezes, which usually begins about one o'clock afternoons. The proximity of the ocean in connection with other physical feature's produces the equable climate of California.

During one of these hot periods I had and opportunity to observe some laborers from my rooms, who were employed in putting down cement sidewalks, and I failed to discover that they were suffering inconvenience from the heat. The sea breeze and the cooling effect of shaded places, has the effect to make California a very agreeable place even during hot waves.

The trees are now green and laden with fruit, some of which, as apricots, are now ripening, but the earth is dry and dusty unless moistened by irrigation arangements or by sprinklers. Weeds and grass on uncultivated places are sear. Occasionally some vegetation, as pumpkins, corn etc., may be seen growing on cultivated places about Pasadena without irrigation. Some kinds of fruit trees grow without irrigation and others with very little, but all seem to require cultivation of the space between the trees. This part of the state seems to have a good yield of fruit in prospect for this season.

During these hot periods the people of the cities and towns, those that had the means sought the seashore in the same manner as the people of the Twin Cities, of Minnesota, hunt up the cool retreats of the lakes. Your humble servant took in the beach at Santa Monica but found the abundance of ocean fog rather unsuitable for his purposes, so after taking in the sights of that thrifty place, including the pier which extends one mile into the ocean, returned to Pasadena.

It will be recollected that Santa Monica is the point for which C. P. Huntington, President of the Southern Pacific R. R. Co. was seeking the appropriation by Congress of three million dollars for the construction of harbor. The pier of one mile in length was constructed by the Southern Pacific company, and should that point be accepted by the commission provided for in the act of Congress, the Southern Pacific will be required to permit other R. R. companies to use the pier but from a precursory view it is evident that the pier will have to be enlarged should other R. R. lines be built to that place and it become the place for the receiving and shipping of merchandise as now anticipated for it, as the port of the city of Los Angeles. San Pedro Bay has the support of the city of Los Angeles for a harbor and is mentioned in the act of Congress for examination by the commission, the matter being left with the commission to decide as to which, San Pedro or Santa Monica is the best adapted for a harbor for the metropolis of Southern California.

Isaac A. Christlieb, of Long Lake, arrived in Pasadena about the first of June and is now taking in sights of Southern California.

CORRESPONDENCE

INDEPENDENCE.

This is Populist convention day at St. Louis. We hope that Bryan will be the nominee of tho convention.

Some of the Republicans, and some of the Democrats too, say there has been no Democratic National Convention; was an illegitimate child and did not come in the regular order; but not withstanding their imbecility upon this matter, there was a Democratic National Convention all the same. And it will be heard from next November at the Polls.

The children of Israel during their sojourn in the wilderness made a Golden Calf to worship but this only showed their ignorance that they had more tart for idolatry and something deceptive than they had for a thing of reality. It is so strange that so many of our people did not find out that Silver was good for nothing as money untill, the money loaners, bankers and bond holders told them so.

Crops are looking fine and from all indications it looks as if we would have a bountiful harvest but while our population in this country has almost doubled since 1870 and our produce has increased accordingly since 1880 or 1885 our farm produce has been going down in price, and they call it over production it is under consumption and stringency in the money market demonetization of Silver etc.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Adams of Minneapolis are visiting with George Taylor and family.

Dr. O. R. Fasset, of Rockford, made a professional call in our town yesterday.

Farmers are very busy making hay. The crop is very good.

A. Armor of Tamarack Ill. preached at the Armstrong A. C. Church last Sunday in the forenoon, and at Rockford in the evening.

Not much news this week. School meetings are over and every thing is quiet. F. Lindsley, of Delano, was in town yesterday on business.

Intrinsic Value.

From the National Bimetallist we clip the following: "The intrinsic value of gold has not changed for twenty-two years," says the gold bug. I reply: "Neither has the intrinsic value of wheat or corn; but the commercial value has changed, and because of legislation brought about by you. The possessor of gold has been benefitted, the raiser of wheat and corn has been injured. No honest, intelligent, truly patriotic man can defend legislation that injures the most important industries of the country."

LATEST NEWS

Dan Lawler's meeting at St. Paul yesterday is reported to have had 200 delegates. And to have elected to attend the Chicago Gold standard Convention as delegates: D. W. Lawler, F. W. M. Cutcheon, H. R. Wells, and George H. Partridge.

The People's Party Convention in St. Louis elected as temporary Chairman Marion Butler, of North Carolina. For permanent chairman Senator Allen, of Nebraska.

It looks as if the convention would endorse Bryan and Sewall.

No Fifty Cent Dollars.

A young man in this city wants to know if it would be right to coin 50-cent's worth of silver into a dollar. Our answer is, certainly not; and no one but a goldite would propose to do such a thing. The silver men propose the unlimited coinage of silver dollars just exactly of the same weight and stamp of the present silver dollars, and the moment that proposition is adopted the silver bullion necessary to make a silver dollar will be worth exactly a dollar, less the cost of transportation to the nearest mint. Not only that, but the silver mines now idle will be re-opened; and, as we believe the present prices of all the products of labor will increase, captial will come forth from its present hiding, and every man will be able to find employment. It is the goldite who has given this counrty its 50-cent silver, its 45 cent wheat, its 7-cent cotton, its unemployed thousands, its hosts of business failures, its railroad wrecks and its $262,000,000 of increase bonded indebtedness. All this talk about 50-cent silver dollars is to deceive those who have not had the time or inclination to study and trace the secret and dishonest legislation of the bondocracy gold-syndicate since 1873. Why, the dishonesty of the gold-gambling bondodracy, as exemplified in congressional legislation, is enough to make an honest man lose faith in human kind. And yet these legalized robbers prate of honesty! of their "honest dollars," "sound money!" Why did they demonetize the silver of this country in 1873 when it was worth $1.02 as compared with gold?—Wasecs Herald.

Some one who has had his wheel stolen says that the best bicycle insurance is to keep one eye chained on the wheel.

The product of American gold mines this year is expected to be about $54,000,000, and of the rest of the world $166,000,000.

According to one Samuel Hendrickson the world will come to an end January 4, 1900, at 11 o'clock a. m. This looks serious.

Gen. Nathaniel Massie is the name of an Ohioan who declined to serve as governor of the state because he did not believe the returns were correct. This happened, however, in 1807.

The watermelon is said to have been grown in Africa as long as 3,000 years ago. No wonder that the descendants of those early cultivators of the juicy melon love it so. It's theirs by inheritance.

You may have forgotten that the bronze two-cent piece was first coined in 1864, being authorized by act of congress in the same year. The issuance of this coin was discontinued February 12, 1873.

In California a high school professor is announced as having forbidden the wearing of corsets by the young ladies of his class, because of the effect of the steel in those articles on the delicate instruments of the electrical department. The modern girl, corset or no corset, would give the instruments a thrill.

The first woman to enter the profession of pharmacy in this country was Mrs. Jane Loring, of Boston, in 1800. She was a grand-aunt of the famous congressman. Under the old system there were no state supervision of the profession, and anyone could take it up who desired without any legal impediments. Under this system over 1,200 women became pharmacists.

A lecturer in New York said the other day: "Everybody knows that butter is composed of a mixture of fat, oline, margerine, stearine, palmitine, butyrene, and the fatty acids known as capric, caproic and butyric in various proportions." Everybody at least knows that bad butter contains a large number of chemical attributes on exceedingly bad terms with each other.

Utah's is the forty-fifth star in the flag. There are no half hundred states in sight yet. Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma are next in line, but the list stops there. It is likely to be a good many years before Alaska will be seriously considered for statehood. The remainder of the Indian territory will no doubt eventually become a state, and Texas may some day be divided.

Braddock's rock on the Potomac, on which the English army under Gen. Braddock landed in 1775 on their way, though they did not know it, to Braddock's defeat, is to be preserved by the Sons of American Revolution in Washington. The Potomac once flowed close to its base, but now the river has changed its course to the southward, and the rock is in danger of being covered up by the dumping of refuse.

Collecting thimbles which have been the property of female celebrities has become the latest rage. The cream of a collection owned by a wealthy Gothamite is the thimble of that excellent needlewoman, Queen Elizabeth; one which belonged to Queen Victoria when a girl of 14 is a solid and useful looking silver thimble, but very small. That worn by the mother of George Washington is also in this collection.

In support of the proposition that a successful author is a public benefactor, it is stated that more than a millon dollars have been put in circulation as a direct consequence of the publication and dramatization of "Trilby." This goes to show, furthermore, that a good deal of money is often spent upon a book that happens to strike the popular fancy for a brief season, and then passes into general neglect and forgetfulness.

All patriotic Americans will rejoice to learn that the trust which for the past few years has controlled the great American nut has dissolved. Peanuts will therefore no longer be cornered, and already the price has declined one-half cent a pound. This certainly is gladsome news, for the friends of the peanut are legion. It may surprise the skeptical to learn that the annual supply of this toothsome article is 9,000,000 pounds.

About the time Lieut. Peary set sail for the arctic regions, by way of Greenland, Lewis Dyche, another explorer, started for the same destination, going by way of Alaska, while Prof. Andrea will try the balloon route from Russia. So far as is known there has been no engagement by these explorers to meet at the pole, and even if there were there is every reason to believe that the engagement would necessarily be broken. But what the world is wondering is whether all or any of the three will come back in safety, and why they should risk their lives in a profitless venture.

In the ten months between July, 1895, and April, 1896, the value of bicycles furnished by the United States to Europe has exceeded $1,000,000. Prior to July, 1895, the exportation of American wheels was trifling. It is the American tourist that has done the work. Young America went abroad and took his wheel with him—her wheel also. Along the shady lanes of England, on the smooth causeways of Ireland, along the banks of the Rhine, on the pardo of Madrid, on the boulevards of Paris, in Vienna and in St. Petersburg, the American wheel was seen, and its lightness and strength admired.

The United States department of agriculture has issued a circular strongly advocating the observance in the United States of one day in the year as "Bird day." It is proposed by this celebration "to diffuse knowledge concerning our native birds and to arouse a more general interest in bird protection." Attention is called to the alarming decrease in native birds, due to many causes, and that the laws of the various states designed to regulate these abuses become dead letters by lack of the support of public sentiment, and the chief purpose of this day will be to inspire and educate that sentiment.

Terms of International Arbitration Not Yet Agreed Upon.

Correspondence Between Secretary Olney and Lord Salisbury Made Public—Remarks of the Latter in the House of Lords.

Washington, July 18.—The efforts of the United States and Great Britain to agree upon a general arbitration treaty for the settlement of all controversies through the establishment of a permanent tribunal, as well as the progress of diplomatic negotiations towards solving the Venezuelan problem are set forth in 13 communications made public by the state department. While they constitute the first authoritative disclosure upon these great questions since President Cleveland's famous Christmastide message to congress, it will be found that previous reports in these dispatches of the negotiations between the two governments, have accurately outlined the course of events.

Little substantial progress toward a general arbitration treaty is disclosed by the documents. An outline in part of the proposed procedure is laid down, and the views of the two governments are so explicitly stated that future discussion may be confined toward narrowing the few divergencies of method. The further fact is made apparent that the United States has not relaxed its vigilance in demanding a just settlement of the Venezuelan boundary question, and has rejected the British proposals for arbitrating that dispute under terms involving the surrender of any part of Venezula's claims. A synopsis of the correspondence follows:

Salisbury's Draft Treaty.

The correspondence proper begins with a note dated February 27 last, from Mr. Bayard to the marquis of Salisbury. Within the days of the receipt of this note Lord Salisbury made reply, readily concurring in the suggestion to begin negotiations, and noting the desire of the British government to bring the differences between themselves and Venezuela to an equitable settlement.

This discussion was at length diverted from the specific subject of the Venezuelan boundary dispute to the general arbitration proposition. Lord Salisbury drafted a treaty which provides for the appointment by the United States and Great Britain of two or more permanent judicial officers, one of whom is to be designated by his own nation, to act as an arbitrator with one named by the other side on the appearance of any difference between the two powers which cannot be settled by negotiations. Complaints made by the nationals of one power against the officers of the other; all pecuniary claims or groups of claims, amounting to not more than £100,000, made on either power by the nationals of the other, whether based on an alleged right by treaty or agreement or otherwise; all claims for damages or indemnity under the said amount; all questions affecting diplomatic or consular privileges; all alleged rights of fishery, access, navigation or commercial privilege, and all questions referred by special agreement between the two parties, shall be referred to arbitration, in accordance with this treaty, and the award thereon shall be final.

Secretary Olney's Objections.

Secretary Olney begins his response by directing attention to the fact that Lord Salisbury in terms excludes from consideration the Venezuelan boundary dispute, but nevertheless declares that "so far as he manifests a desire that the two great English-speaking peoples of the world shall remain in perpetual peace, he fully reciprocates that desire." The secretary points out an objection in that the draft does not secure an end of a controversy unless an award is concurred in by at least five out of the six appellate arbitrators. Therefore, by direction of the president, Secretary Olney proposes a substitute for that portion.

The change contains provisions that either congress or parliament at any time before the arbitral tribunal shall have convened may by act withdraw particular subject matter from arbitration as involving the national honor or integrity, and providing further that award shall be final if concurred in by all the arbitrators If assented to by a majority only, the award shall be final, unless one of the parties within three months from its promulgation shall protest in writing that the award is erroneous in respect to some issue of fact or law. In such case the award shall be reviewed by a court composed of three United States supreme justices and three British supreme justices, who shall, in advance, agree upon three impartial jurists to be added to their body in case they shall be equally divided on an award. The award of this court, whether unanimous or by majority, shall be final.

Lord Salisbury's Reply.

Under date of May 18 Lord Salisbury replied to Secretary Olney's statement through Sir Julian Pauncefote, beginning by an expression of regret: "That in some essential particulars the opinions of the two governments do not, as yet, seem to come to a definite agreement upon the whole of this important subject.

"But," says Lord Salisbury, "I was well aware that any settlement to which we might arrive must, in its general principles, be applicable to disputes, not only between Great Britain and the United States, but between either of them and any other government; and, therefore, with certain adaptations of detail, it would apply to a dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela."

In concluding this note Lord Salisbury expresses an apprehension that if Secretary Olney's plan were adopted a nation whose territory was claimed would avoid all risk of an adverse arbitration by refusing to accept it on the ground that it involved their honor and integrity.

Friend of Venezuela.

When the arbitration matter is again resumed it is through the note from Sir Julian to Secretary Olney, June 3, submitting in behalf of his government proposals for the settlement of the Venezuelan boundary question in the form of a memcrandum from Lord Salisbury submitted to the United States, as "the friend of Venezuela." He says that from the first his objection has been to submit to a foreign arbitrator the rights of British colonists who had settled in a territory they had every ground to believe British.

He was willing that the unsettled territory should be subjected to arbitration, even though some portion of it should be found to fall within the Schomburgk line This tribunal, it is proposed, shall fix a line binding upon both countries, provided that it shall not have power to transfer to either Venezuela or Great Britain any territory bona fide occupied by the subjects of the other country January 1, 1887, although in respect to such territory the tribunal may submit recommendations to satisfy the equitable rights of the parties.

Declined by Olney.

On June 12 last Secretary Olney regretfully declined this proposition as not calculated to terminate speedily the boundary dispute or give due recognition to the just rights of the parties.

On the same date Secretary Olney notified Sir Julian that our government would not be at liberty to include the Venezuelan boundary case within the scope of a general arbitration treaty, although it would welcome a settlement of that controversy.

In the last letter of the series, dated June 22, Secretary Olney devotes himself to answering Lord Salisbury's statements respecting the general arbitration proposition, beginning with the statement that our government cannot refrain from hoping that persistent effort in the line of the pending negotiations will have results which, if not all that the enthusiastic advocates of international arbitration anticipate, would be a decided advance upon anything heretofore achieved in that direction.

Death of Bishop Coxe.

Rochester, N. Y., July 21.—Arthur Cleveland Coxe, bishop of the Episcopal diocese of western New York, died suddenly Monday afternoon of nervous prostration at the Clifton Springs sanitarium. He was about to leave for his residence in Buffalo, and was stricken with a fainting spell when ready to take the train. His wife was with him at the time of his death.

SETTLING DOWN TO WORK.

Plans and Arrangements of Republicans for the Campaign.

Chicago, July 21.—Mark Hanna, chairman of the republican national committee arrived here Monday, and a lengthy conference was held with the members of the executive committee and prominent republicans at the Auditorium hotel. The conference lasted until seven p. m.

In the matter of headquarters it was decided to rent seven rooms on the second floor of the Auditorium building fronting on Wabash avenue; three rooms on the fifth floor for clerical purposes; 1,000 square feet of space in the basement for storage and one store on the ground floor of the Wabash avenue side.

As a result of a conference of M. J. Dowling, secretary of the National League of Republican Clubs, with the committee it was decided to absorb the executive part of the league during the campaign, so that hereafter Mr. Dowling and his associates will work under the direction of Mr. Heath and as part of the national committee's machinery Mr. Dowling appeared to be well pleased with the arrangement.

The committee had to deal with a more delicate matter when the original McKinley and campaign fund question came up. Mr. Hanna sent for Mr. Allerton, the millionaire packer, and National Committeeman Jamieson was also called in as the representative of the state organization. Mr. Jamieson submitted a list of four score Chicago citizens, representing every industry and mercantile pursuit, as the members of a finance committee which he proposed to make the official agents of the party for advisory and money-getting purposes.

Messrs. Thurston, Hubbard and Cummings, for Nebraska, Minnesota and Iowa, were questioned regarding the situation in their states by the committee. They said that silver sentiment was growing because of literature sent among the farmers by the silver organizations, but they had heard of no bolts, and urged immediate work on the part of the republican literary bureau.

It has been arranged to open the campaign August 5 with speechmaking in Nebraska and Minnesota. Roswell P. Horr, of New York, and Senator Burrows, of Michigan, will be among the orators.

LAWLESS STRIKERS.

Presence of Troops at Cleveland Does Not Prevent Rioting.

Cleveland, O., July 20.—All of Friday there occurred clashes between the mob at the Brown hoisting works, the police and militia. The members of the mob were in a vicious mood, and whenever a lone soldier or policeman could be reached violence was attempted. The troops from two p. m. were constantly under arms and had great difficulty in clearing the street, two charges being necessary, in which the bayonet was freely used. But as soon as a charge was ended, the mob, which early in the afternoon numbered 5,000, would flow back against the line of steel like a wave of the sea, and again begin to hoot and throw stones.

When the workmen had been taken away and the troops were returning to their quarters at the works, another vengeful rally was made upon Company F. Again a charge was made and cold steel was driven home, so that many of the rioters had to be helped away. At this time some one sent in a general alarm to the police station and every patrol wagon was soon dashing through the streets, causing the wildest rumors among the thousands on their way home from work. There was no need of the police reinforcements and the crowd, which had been swelled to 15,000, began to melt away.

It looked as if the trouble was ended, but at seven o'clock an assault was made on a soldier who was passing along Willson avenue. He fought desperately, as did also a policeman who hurried to his aid. A squad of troops came to their rescue, but not before the officers had been beaten into insensibility. Again the patrol wagons rushed to the scene and had all they could do to force a passage through the angry mob. Just how many strikers were hurt is uncertain. Two, both severely stabbed with bayonets, are lying at the St. Clair hospital. They are Thomas McGreavey and Thomas Garety.

COME TO HIS AID.

New York Banks Put Up Millions to Swell Uncle Sam's Reserve.

Washington, July 21.—The gold reserve on Monday declined to $89,761,336, with withdrawals of $3,706,300, of which $3,030,000 was for export. The large amount of $676,000, taken presumably for "hoarding" purposes, was regarded unfavorably by treasury officials. A reassuring rumor which reached here to the effect that the New York national banks have formed a pool and will turn into the treasury $20,000,000 in gold for legal tenders was well received at the treasury. It was pointed out that they were amply able to do so.

In view of the fact that the treasury has lost since July 1 $13,000,000 in gold and present indications point to further withdrawals this week, officials who have had confidential relations with all former bond issues say that it will be much easier and more advantageous to the government if a bond issue has to be made to do it before the gold reserve reaches the limit of $60,000,000. If the national banks, however, it is said, come to the relief of the treasury, a bond issue may be averted at least for the next few months.

A JEALOUS HUSBAND.

He Kills His Wife at Rockford, Ill., and Attempts Suicide.

Rockford, Ill., July 20.—James French, a tailor, met his wife on the street in the fashionable part of the city Saturday afternoon and fired eight shots into her body, killing her. Albert Barker, a prominent citizen, was shot in the wrist while grappling with French, who ran through the streets eight blocks, pursued by an angry mob of 300 people. He held the mob at bay on the river bank, where he was cornered, but after firing the contents of two revolvers without serious effect he shot himself through the head and jumped into the river. French was dragged out, resuscitated and taken to the county jail through the mob, which made strong threats of lynching. His wound is not fatal. Jealousy was the cause of the murder.

W. E. RUSSELL DEAD.

Massachusetts' Ex-Governor Succumbs to Heart Disease.

His Companions Find Him Lifeless in His Bed in a Fishing Camp in Canada — Brief Sketch of His Life.

St. Adelaide De Pabos, Que., July 17.—William Eustis Russell, thrice governor of Massachusetts and prominently mentioned for the democratic nomination for the presidency before the silver feeling became so pronounced in his party, died suddenly in a little fishing camp during Wednesday night or in the early hours of Thursday morning. Heart failure was the probable cause of death, which came without warning to himself or friends, as he had not had a symptom of illness up to the time he retired for the night. That his death had been painless was shown by the position of the body when found and the expression on his face.

Flags at Half-Mast.

Boston, July 17.—The news of Gov. Russell's death caused general surprise in this city, and, in fact, throughout the state. On all sides flags were put at half mast, and the daily newspapers printed the brief announcement of his death and the long obituaries and tributes in turned column rules. Mayor Quincy has called a special meeting of the city government for to-day to take action on the governor's death, and Acting Gov. Wolcott will issue a proclamation.

Sketch of His Life.

[Hon. William Eustis Russell was born in Cambridge, Mass., in 1857. He was educated in the public schools and in Harvard college, where he graduated in 1877. He then began the study of law under his father's direction and took a course of three years in the Boston university law school. He was admitted to the Suffolk bar in the April term of 1880.

Mr. Russell was only 25 years old when, in 1885, he was elected mayor of his native city, having already served as councilman and alderman. In 1888 he was nominated for governor, but was defeated by Ames. It was in this year that Mr. Russell gave evidence of his gifts as a stump speaker. He worked and talked incessantly, going about from one place to another. He was renominated for governor in 1889. This time his competitor was Gov Brackett. Mr. Russell at the head of a vigorous campaign, reduced the piurality of his opponent from 29,000 to 6,775. Next year, on his third trial, he was elected by a plurality of 9,000.

In his inaugural message he suggested many reforms in state management, but few of them became operative, owing to a hostile legislature and a hostile council. Russell was reelected governor of his state twice. He retired at the end of his third term to resume the practice of law.

Russell's name was mentioned by his admirers in New England as one which would look well at the head of the democratic national ticket. At the Jefferson celebration in Monticello, early in this year, the ex-governor made a strong declaration in favor of honest money. He was associated with Senator Hill and ex-Secretary Whitney in the contest over the platform a the recent Chicago convention.]

The Funeral Scervies.

Cambridge, Mass., July 21.—The funeral services over the remains of ex-Gov. William E. Russell were held Monday. At 10:30 o'clock a. m., private services were conducted at the late residence of the deceased by Rev. Dr. Alexander McKenzie, of Shepard Memorial church, the late governor's pastor.

The body was then taken to the city hall, where the remains lay in state from twelve until three o'clock, and were viewed by thousands of people.

It was nearly four o'clock when the cortege reached the Shepard Memorial church, where the final services were held.

The services were brief and simple, consisting, in addition to the singing, of Scriptural reading and a prayer by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Alexander McKenzie. President Cleveland and Joseph Jefferson were in attendance.

BRYAN HOME AGAIN.

Democratic Nominee Greeted by His Neighbors.

Lincoln, Neb., July 20.—The demonstration in honor of the home-coming of Hon. W. J. Bryan was an event in the life of that gentleman of which he can be proud. The demonstration had been well advertised and it had the effect of bringing an immense crowd to Lincoln.

Packed in the rain outside the statehouse were people by the thousands. They cared nothing for the wet under foot, and the wet overhead, and stood in the mud as patiently as if it had been the most propitious weather. When Mr. Bryan was introduced the shout that went up was a mighty one and it was repeated over and over again. A temporary platform had been erected at the north exterior of the building, and from this Mr. Bryan spoke. His remarks were brief, and were confined exclusively to expressions of appreciation and gratitude for the welcome extended to him, containing not the slightest reference to politics.

Tammany to Support Bryan.

New York, July 21.—The Tammany hall district leaders held a secret meeting in John C. Sheehan's office Monday afternoon and practically decided to declare for Bryan and Sewall, and to arrange at once for a Bryan ratification meeting, thus ignoring the request made by Senator Hill, through H. W. Hinckley, chairman of the democratic state committee, for delay until the meeting of the state convention.

Republican Bolters.

Manitou, Col., July 21.—A manifesto was issued Monday signed by H. M. Teller, Fred D. Dubois, Lee Mantle, Charles S. Hartman, Edgar Wilson, John F. Shafroth and A. M. Stevenson. It repudiates the financial plank of the republican platform, and declares in favor of supporting Bryan and Sewall. This it advises all opponents to a single gold standard to do.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A FAREWELL SONG.

When his mother kissed him and said:
"Goodnight!"
I whispered: "He'll wake some day."
But the world had nothing of love or light,
Nor a rose in the rosiest May!
Yet I whispered still:
"It's God's own will:"
But the green left the valley, the blue left the hill;
And the world had no splendor, no peace and no light
When his mother kissed him "Good night!"

When his mother kissed him and said:
"Goodnight!"
I whispered: "He'll wake again!"
But in the sad darkness there streamed no light,
And her tears fell down like rain!
But I whispered still:
"It is God's own will,
And His shafts are the kindest that crush or that kill;"
But the rose left the garden, the light left the hill
When his mother kissed him "Good night!"
—Frank L. Stanton, in Atlanta Constitution.

SUSANNA MORTON.

If there was one thing in all her experience that Susanna Morton was heartily tired of it was the evident and continuous purpose of mankind to permit her to remain a spinster.

True she had been one so long it would seem that she should have become accustomed to it; but by some strange fatality women—that is, the majority of women—never accept their lot in this Christian spirit which has won for them the endearing title of the gentler sex.

And Susanna Morton had put up with it just as long as she was going to.

Four leap years had passed her by, and she had submitted gracefully, but each year less gracefully than she had done the year previously, and there were moments in the last of the four when she became almost desperate. Now that a fifth had come her mind was made up. She would take the reins of Cupid in her own hands and drive that harum-scarum little rascal in a manner to suit herself. She knew her good points, one of which was that she was thirty-five years old or thereabouts, and possessed a poise and balance no man who was looking for a real sensible woman as a wife could afford to disregard. In addition to this she had—what men seldom disregard — a comfortable fortune.

It was this fortune that had been the real stumbling block in the matrimonial path of Susanna, and not any lack of attractive qualities in her possession, for she was not homely, nor was she anything but charming. The fortune, however, which was hers from her sixteenth birthday, had developed in her a fear that men sought her for her money and not for herself, and, never having fallen in love with any of her courtiers she did not find it difficult to resist advances, believing, as she did, that men were mercenary as a rule, and that some day the one man in all the world for her would appear and claim her as his own.

However, he did not appear, and he continued not to appear, until Susanna had reached an age and a firmness of character, to put it mildly, when her fortune would have to be at least doubled to make her as attractive as she was at twenty.

This knowledge had come to her gradually, but was none the less forceful on that account, and she was determined not to let this leap year pass without results of a lasting character.

Of the men in her train there were perhaps half a dozen who were eligible, and any one of whom would have made a husband any woman could be proud of. But they were merely friends; not a man-jack of them had ever suggested such a thing as matrimony to her, and possibly this was why she liked them. So perverse is the nature of woman.

Among the half dozen was one who found the greatest favor in Susanna's eyes, the others taking their positions after him in regular gradation, and this one Susanna selected as her victim for leap year, resolved to try all the others in case of failure in the first instance.

Truly, Susanna was a desperate spinster.

And no less spry, for in the course of his first call in the new year she began her operations. But it was a dreadful task, and the evening passed without a single step taken forward. The effort had been made, however, and courage always comes with effort.

When he came again she was so wrought up over the work before her that her eyes sparkled and her cheeks glowed in rosy color.

"Why bless my soul, Miss Susanna," he said, "how pretty you look this evening."

He was ten years older than she, and always assumed that bless-my-soul style affected by elderly men.

"Oh, thank you, Mr. Culver," she twitted, "I'm sure you only think so. I look just as I always look."

"Of course, Miss Susanna, only slightly more so." He smiled, but there was that in the tone which had the ring of insincerity, or at least superficial and society sincerity, which is very nearly the same thing, and which made Susanna despise the flattery of men that so far had meant to her no dissolution of the continuity of her spinsterhood.

She was good-natured about it, however, and let Mr. Culver go on with whatever he had to say, for if there was any man who could make flattery any more palatable to her than any other man that man was Mr. Culver. But it was soon over, and when he had fixed himself comfortably in an easy chair with which he was familiar he seemed to have forgotten whether Susanna looked like a fright or a fairy, and began talking about all sorts of things, as people do who talk for the mere sake of talking.

At all events, that's the way it presented itself to Susanna, and she felt the spirit of desperation slowly creeping over her. She took a long breath for encouragement, and tentatively turned the subject of conversation upon the most recent wedding which had occurred in their circle.

"What a pair of fools they were and are," said Mr. Culver, sententiously, "to marry on nothing but his salary, and that not big enough for two."

"But they are happy," argued Susanna.

"I suppose so," Mr. Culver unwillingly admitted; "it takes fools to be happy; wise people know too much."

"Are you wise?" questioned Susanna, nervously, for she felt that she was launching herself at this point upon an unknown sea.

"I'm old enough to be," Mr. Culver frankly responded, for Mr. Culver's age was too well known to be denied, and too great to be hid under a bushel.

"Isn't there something somewhere about the old fools being the biggest?" laughed Susanna.

"But I'm not so old as that, yet."

"Ah!" and her eyes twinkled. "Is yours a case of:

"Standing with reluctant feet,
Where the silly seasons meet?"

Mr. Culver assumed a more serious air and there was a smile on his face when he replied; there was rather a shadow of regret:

"Yes, Miss Susannna," he said, "I do not stand reluctant, for I think if I had been more of a fool in one regard I would have been less of a fool in another. That is to say, a man is a fool to waste his life selfishly as I have done."

This was the auspicious moment Susanna had been seeking. She would now lead right up to the matter and find a listener to her proposal.

"Why don't you marry, Mr. Culver?" she asked, with directness. "You are not too wise to consider the question, I hope."

"Certainly not, Miss Susanna," he smiled. "I've been considering it for 20 years."

"Then you ought to stop considering it and pop it." Susanna laughed and Mr. Culver also.

"I hardly think I'll ever do that," he said, seriously. "I wouldn't know how to go about it, to make my case half presentable. I've given myself up, you know, as a bad job."

"Some of these new women will be charging down on you some of these days, teaching you the newer doctrine that women have the right to say whether you have the right to do as you please with yourself. In other words, some one of them will capture you in spite of yourself."

"Not much, they won't," asserted Mr. Culver, with a great show of courage. "If there is anything I don't want to marry it's a woman with foolish notions of that kind."

Susanna's heart went down to her shoes on the instant. Here was an insurmountable obstacle in her path, and with Mr. Culver holding to such an opinion, what good would a proposal be from her, even if she should muster up courage enough to make it. The thought made her mute for a minute and in that minute a new scheme came, one that had been there before, too, but had gone wool gathering while she was beating about the brush with the new woman idea.

"I think myself they are horrid," she said, with an effort to swallow something that would not go down very easily. "But there is the leap year privilege. All women, new and old, can claim that, and you mustn't forget that this is a leap year."

"I had forgotten it," he said, moving his chair into the far corner of the fireplace, but still not so far away that he was out of the pleasant influence of Susanna's nearness. He sat there for an instant making himself shiver with terror, and then he moved back, possibly a little nearer than before.

"Forewarned is forearmed," she said; "and now that I have told you of the dangers ahead I hope you will profit by my advice."

"Oh, I'm not afraid," he asserted, in a good voice, "I'm just waiting for that sort of thing. The custom of tradition, whatever you may call it, is an old-fashioned one, and only an old-fashioned woman would think of it, and that is the kind I want. So none of them had better try it unless she means business."

Surely no finer opening could be presented to a young woman in her mood than this, and Susanna gave herself a shake and took another long breath. The time had come, and she was not the woman to lose so glorious an opportunity.

"Mr. Culver," she began, in a firm voice and with great earnestness, "I have for a long time been thinking you ought to marry and I have even gone so far as to select just such a woman as I think would suit you. I have had two or three consultations with her, and she is willing that I should present the matter to you, because I know you so well, and you will understand it better from me than if she should present it herself."

When she was about to proceed further with her remarks Mr. Culver showed sings of real anxiety and arose to his feet.

"Miss Susanna," he exclaimed, "don't say another word. Really, I cannot listen to it."

"But I must say it to you," she insisted, because, as it seemed to her, that was the proper way to conduct a successful courtship, and now that she had begun it she most decidedly wished it to be successful.

"I tell you I won't hear it. This is entirely unexpected, and I am sure nothing in my conduct has ever warranted you in broaching this subject to me."

Mr. Culver was very evidently in earnest, and Susanna almost chuckled to herself, for this was the very way young women acted under the circumstances in which Mr. Culver was placed. All it needed now was a little more coaxing, and Susanna nerved herself for the final pop.

"Perhaps you have not thought so," she said in her softest voice, "but to me there has ever been a desire to say to you what I am now saying. Mr. Culver—John," and Susanna came very close to him, notwithstanding she was so nervous she hardly knew what to do.

"Hold on, Susanna, hold on," he exclaimed. "Confound it!" (that shocked her, for she knew no girl ever talked that way under such circumstances, however much she must have thought it). "I don't want you to be talking in any other woman's interest. There is only one woman in the world that I want, and—and—and—" Mr. Culver was getting nervous himself now and Susanna gasped. "And—oh, Susanna," he said, desperately, "don't you know that woman is you? You, Susanna. Don't you know it is you?"

Mr. Culver caught Susanna's two hands in his and looked into her eyes with such a pleading, pathetic, intense sincerity that all her plans were consumed like straw in a fierce blaze and she simply tumbled into his arms and let him finish the proposal she thought she had begun in such a masterly manner.

And Mr. Culver finished it with glittering success, much to the relief of Miss Susanna Morton, spinster.—Boston Traveler.

ENTHUSIASTIC BAPTISTS.

Progress of the Young People's Convention at Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, July 17.—The sixth international convention of the Baptist Young People's union of America was called to order Thursday morning at the Exposition building, with 6,000 people present. The mayor of Milwaukee and others welcomed the delegates to the city, and a happy response was made by Rev. B. M. Poteat, of New Haven, Conn., on behalf of the board of managers of the union. The report of the general secretary, a praise service and workers' conferences were features of the day. In the evening President John H. Chapman, of Chicago, delivered his annual address.

Milwaukee, July 18.—Sunrise prayer meetings in all the Protestant churches opened the second day's proceedings of the Baptist Young People's convention. In the forenoon, beginning at ten o'clock, four workers' conferences were held, the general topic being: "The Young People's Society as a Working Force."

The afternoon session at the exposition hall was attended by a large crowd. Praise services were led by Rev. F. H. Shanks, of St. Louis. The salutation of flags participated in by 34 states was an interesting spectacle. Provincial unions then made report of their work.

At the close of the general meeting at convention hall the delegations marched from the exposition building to the places of holding the state rallies, and song exercises were held.

Minneapolis Baptists came here 300 strong and made a gallant fight for the '98 convention, but at noon gave up the contest. It is learned that the board of managers at their meeting decided upon Denver. This conclusion was to be kept secret until it was announced in the convention, but the Minneapolis managers wormed the secret from members of the board.

The convention at the afternoon session elected the following officers:

President, John H Chapman: Chicago: first vice-president, Rev. C. L. Seasholes, Dallas, Tex.: second vice-president, F. L. Fouke, Oshawa, Ont.: third vice-president, C. E. Tingley, Lincoln, Neb.: recording secretary, Rev. H. W. Reed, Waukegan, Ill.: treasurer, Frank Moody, Milwaukee, Wis.

Board of managers for one year, Jesse A. Baldwin, Arthur D. Dana, Prof. Ira M. Price, Rev. L. A. Crandell, D. D., Charles A. Marsh, Rev. F. Grennell, D. D., all of Illinois.

Milwaukee, July 20.—Saturday forenoon four mass-meetings were held by the four great color divisions of the convention. The general order was a field review of denominational work. In the afternoon there was a big rally of Juniors at the convention hall.

At the evening session the committee on resolutions made a long report, in which they commended the educational movement and the work of the Baptist Young People's union, and especially urged the young people to study sacred literature, outlining a course which it recommended all the unions to pursue during the coming year. It commended the Baptist Union, the official organ of the association, and recommended a system of uniform donations in all the churches. Strong resolutions of sympathy with Rev. A. J. Diaz, the expatriated Cuban evangelist, were adopted. Resolutions also were passed asking members to use their individual efforts to secure the Christianizing of our political life.

The only sensation of the convention was sprung Saturday night, when formal announcement was made that Chattanooga and not Denver is to have the convention of 1898. This decision was reached by the board of managers at a session held in the afternoon. At the same time it was decided to give the 1899 convention to Denver. The action of the board of managers was ratified by the convention.

Baptist clergymen from the leading pulpits of the United States and Canada occupied the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational pulpits of Milwaukee Sunday at 10:30 and preached to large audiences. The meetings at the Exposition building were the largest of the convention. The afternoon was a great missionary meeting, with the convention sermon by Dr. H. C. Mabie, of Boston. Reports from Baptist foreign mission fields were received. In the evening the closing service finished with a monster consecration meeting led by Dr. Frank L. Wilkins, general secretary. With this service the convention closed, and the delegates will spend to-day in making side trips.

SEVENTEEN DEAD.

That Number Represents the Known Victims of the Cleveland Disaster.

Cleveland, O., July 17.—The most appalling disaster which has occurred in Cleveland, except the viaduct horror last winter, when a loaded street car plunged 100 feet into the river, occurred Thursday night at eight o'clock. While a flat-bottomed ferry boat, loaded with between 40 and 50 laborers, was crossing the old river channel, it was capsized and all the men thrown into the channel, and between 15 and 20 drowned, 14 bodies having already been taken from the water.

The accident was due to a panic among the men on board. The boat was loaded so that the gunwale was only three inches above the water, and a passing tug made waves which came into the boat. At once there was a rush to the other side, and the boat went under and spilled the men. They were all members of a gang of ore handlers, and were coming to their homes.

The scene in the river, as described by the men on the tug and the steamer Langdon, which were passing, was one of wild struggle for life. Men grappled each other and went down in the fierce embrace. Lines and life preservers were thrown from both vessels and many were pulled aboard. Others of the unfortunates were rescued by small boats and some swam ashore. The life-saving crew was summoned and the work of searching for bodies at once began.

Cleveland, O., July 18.—All Friday the work of dragging the river bed at the scene of Thursday night's disaster was continued. The coroner has been diligently inquiring and is certain that several bodies are still in the river. As near as can be determined ten men are missing. The regular employes of the Cleveland and Pittsburgh ore dock are all accounted for, either drowned or at home. The uncertainty arises from the fact that large numbers of extra men are hired each day, paid by the day and so no record of their names kept. Seventeen bodies have been recovered.

Whitney Declares Himself.

New York, July 17.—William C. Whitney has sent the following dispatch to the various press associations:

"Will you be kind enough to correct the statement that I desire the indorsement by the state organization of the Chicago ticket? There are no possible conditions or circumstances that would induce me to vote for it or assist it."
